Mr. Kilfedder: And the Ulster Popular Unionist Member.

Mr. Kennedy: Or speaking as a respected Member of the House. In a debate on Northern Ireland there may be lengthy speeches by the Secretary of State, followed by a shadow spokesman and another Conservative Member. If the leader of the Ulster Unionists is called, it may be after 6 pm, by which time his legitimate viewpoint on a salient issue will not be heard. That is the practical impact, which is of concern to members of third parties, but equally it should be of concern to Back-Bench Members of the two main parties in this House. Another effect is that more people are being forced into the 10-minute rule period of debates, which I am not against in principle, but the 10-minute rule barrier now falls on speeches earlier in the evening.

Finally, televising has meant increased pressure on Question Time, and the figures contained in the report are disturbing in that respect. The extent to which non-Labour or non-Conservative Members are called within departmental Question Time appears to be suffering.

There are implications for broadcasters in the points that I have mentioned, but televising also has implications for the House—it affects the way in which we organise and run oursleves. I hope that the Select Committee on Procedure will examine that aspect. The excellent report by the university of Leeds, which refers to my party on page 14—I shall not detain the House by quoting it now—highlights the difficulties that have arisen.

I see from the Order Paper that eight of my hon. Friends have signed the amendment tabled in the name of the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours), which the hon. Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) spoke about in detail and with such clarity. I am prepared to go a long way down the line of their arguments because, like most hon. Members, I am in favour of a dedicated television channel. The problem is that we have to separate that principle from the pragmatics of what the Select Committee has been trying to deliver. While I remain committed to the principle, and I hope to the delivery of a dedicated channel, given the present limited spread of satellite availability in this country, I cannot see how we do Parliament a democratic service by making the service available 24 hours a day to a limited number of people, while, unsatisfactory though it is, we are delivering selected excerpts to the vast majority of people. On that basis, the amendment will not have my support.

In the past, when this place has reformed itself there have always been those who have predicted that the reform in question would mark the end of civilisation as we knew it. The debates on votes for women offer a classic example in this century. There were those who predicted much the same for televising, but I think that at the end of the day it has enhanced Parliament and made it more accessible. When one's constituency is as far from London as mine, that is an overwhelming vote in its favour. People's votes elect Parliament, people's taxes pay for it, so surely the public have the right to see what is being done in their name. Added to that right is the right of the deaf community to follow our proceedings. That has been the subject of attention—I hope that it will give it continuing attention—by the Select Committee.

I hope that we shall become more relaxed about and more trusting in the professionalism of British broadcasters, and drop the remaining restrictions. Anyone sitting in the Strangers' Gallery of the House can see with his own eyes what happens on the Floor of the House. The same right of access to that information must be given to someone sitting in the comfort of his own home with the television switched on. We cannot continue to deny people that.

Despite my concern about the impact of television coverage on Back Benchers and third parties, I shall certainly support the Select Committee report tonight, if only in the hope that it will act as a spur to bring the entire institution of Parliament into the 20th century just as we begin to head towards the 21st.

8.54 pm

Mrs. Marion Roe (Broxbourne): I shall endeavour to keep my remarks brief and to the point, as I certainly would not wish to deprive fellow hon. Members of air time on this important issue.

I believe that the one-year experiment in televising the proceedings of the House has been a television success but a political failure. I certainly endorse the points made by the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) and by my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale). Televising has provided entertainment at low cost for the television stations. Edited highlights appear on the evening news bulletins, enabling the political correspondents to spice up their coverage of the proceedings of the House.

If all that the intrusion of television cameras in this place had produced was a handful of happy journalists with a few innocuous highlights on the evening news, I would have been happy to vote to keep the cameras here. But, as every hon. Member knows full well, that is not the end of the story. For example, the arrival of television has had a strange and unforeseen effect on the behaviour of many hon. Members. None of us is blameless, but all of us are dealing with a powerful force beyond our control. Television has brought out the worst in us all. Hon. Members are not, even at the best of times, publicity shy. Indeed, as we all know, there has to be a streak of the actor in every hon. Member. The successful politician certainly cannot afford to eschew publicity. To succeed in politics one has to get noticed—on the hustings, in speeches, on television or on radio. There is nothing that the average politician likes to hear more than the sound of his own voice.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Or her voice.

Mrs. Roe: Yes, with respect to my colleagues, his or her voice. Until the arrival of television cameras in the House, there was a series of moderating influences on what might be called the theatrical tendency. New Members of Parliament learn that certain forms of behaviour and dress are unacceptable in the Chamber. The House of Commons is the nation's most important forum for serious debate on matters of the utmost importance to our future. It is not, as some cynics derisively claim, a talking shop. What is happening in the Chamber matters.

Attention-seeking tactics are out of place in such an environment, and time-wasting exhibitionists have little real contribution to make to serious political debates. Until now most hon. Members have recognised that fact. Those hon. Members who are incapable of doing so—wilfully or through sheer dimness—have to contend with the wrath of the Whips, or with you, Madam Deputy Speaker, but the ultimate sanction against cases of what are, in effect, political exhibitionism was the fact that it was unlikely to get much publicity. It was pointless and puerile, and that was so until the arrival of television cameras in the House.

Now the rules have changed, and the effects have been largely inimical to serious debate and good government. I disagree with the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott). The arrival of the television cameras has given show-offs the big audience for which some of them certainly yearn. More than that, as my right hon. and learned Friend mentioned earlier, television has forced many perfectly sensible Members of Parliament to go to absurd lengths so that they can be seen "on the box". The average television viewer, seeing his Member of Parliament on the screen, will assume that such a sighting is mere chance. In fact, it is more than likely that the hon. Member carefully positioned himself—or herself—so that he would be picked up by the television cameras.

Little does the unsuspecting viewer know the lengths to which certain hon. Members will go to be seen on national television. It is a sad fact that hon. Members check up on who is asking the Prime Minister questions beforehand so that they can sit next to the questioner and be guaranteed to appear on television screens in millions of homes during the evening news bulletins. Other hon. Members gravitate towards Mr. Speaker's Chair so that they can be seen when the television cameras zoom in on you, Madam Deputy Speaker.

None of that is especially surprising; now that the cameras are in the House, it is understandable that hon. Members should want to be seen doing their job by their constituents. I am sure that many hon. Members who are here tonight have participated in lengthy debates, only to be asked by a constituent after the event, "Where were you?". The answer is that the hon. Member was there all right, but in the 90-second package for the 10 o'clock news—which condenses six hours of debate, with perhaps 20 different speakers and as many interventions—not every contribution is covered.

The sight of hon. Members scrambling to sit within camera shot reminds me of those outside television broadcasts in which an interviewer speaks to camera with a couple of young children bouncing up and down pulling faces in the background. Who, after all, can resist the lure of publicity?

In addition, to those who merely scheme and plot in an honest fashion to appear on camera, there are the hon. Members who deliberately try to draw attention to themselves. Every Back Bencher knows that the contribution most likely to make it through the cutting room to the evening news is the absurd, the insulting, the provocative or even the jocular, and it is well known that outrageous points of order raised after Prime Minister's questions have a very good chance of finding their way on to the television screen.

The past year has proved that good television and good government are not synonymous, although I attach no blame either to broadcasters or to hon. Members. Hon. Members are merely responding to the introduction of a medium that forces them to behave differently; broadcasters are merely giving the viewers the choicest morsels of the day's proceedings to keep them entertained.

The failure of televising the House in its present form can be summed up in two words—design and money. If the Chamber had been specifically designed to accommodate television cameras, things might be different. A modern circular Chamber, with every hon. Member assigned a place, would help to get round the ludicrous problem of hon. Members stalking round the Chamber trying to find a spot where they are likely to be seen on the box. As for the other problem—money—the broadcasters say that they cannot afford the substantial set-up and running costs of a dedicated television channel. But if a television channel were set aside for the proceedings of the House and its Committees, the public would be able to see a far more balanced picture of what happens here. As it is, all that the great majority of the population see are a few brief edited highlights on the evening news. As well as giving the public a much fairer view of what hon. Members do, I suspect that a dedicated television channel would have the advantage of encouraging hon. Members to behave in a slightly less publicity-hungry fashion.

I do not wish to be wholly negative about the televising of the House. I believe that it is good news that a wider audience has been able to witness the exchanges between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition every Tuesday and Thursday: those weekly sessions have contributed to my party's continuing popularity in my constituency.

9.3 pm

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): There are many ways in which this issue can be examined. One is the purely technical one about the changes in technology that would make it possible for more people to see more easily what happens here and elsewhere. There has even been the introduction of a financial element, in terms of the investment opportunities that might be created by a dedicated channel.

I am primarily concerned with the politics of the matter—the effect the cameras have on the relationship between the electors and their representatives. People have often spoken about the rights of hon. Members, but it has always seemed to me—indeed, I wrote an article in TV Times in 1957 calling for the televising of the House of Commons—that the real case for it is that the electors who sent us here would know what we were doing in their name. I think that that is the most important point.

It is long overdue. What a terrible loss to posterity that former hon. Members such as Winston Churchill, Clement Attlee and so on were not filmed. We would have had them on archive. Now that we have introduced the televising of our proceedings, I do not want to run any risk of terminating it because of the difficulty of establishing a dedicated channel.

Despite what was said by the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), most of the fears about the behaviour of hon. Members have been laid to rest. No one who knows the House or its history believes that only television caused disturbances. The King came here when there was no television and tried to arrest five Members of Parliament. He was not seeking publicity. There have been disturbances on many occasions. My father used to tell me about the fighting that occurred when the Irish Nationalist Members were here. Charles Bradlaugh was brought to the House. The other day I visited the room where the Supervisor of Broadcasting works. It is the prison cell where Bradlaugh was imprisoned for trying to take the oath although he was an atheist.

Some hon. Members are slowly beginning to discover that if they want to be given attention they should not put on a new suit, get a clean shirt or have a better hairdo; they should raise the quality of their argument. If that message gets across, it will entirely justify televising.

Enormous tributes have been paid to the mass media. I am an old broadcaster. I started work after the war as a BBC producer and I still have an interest in it. We must recognise that there is a conflict between those who claim the right to speak because they work in the media and those who claim the right to speak because they have been elected. That is the essential conflict that has been tilted in our favour by the televising of Parliament.

To appear on "Question Time", we have to be invited by the producer. We are made up. The microphone is placed behind us so that no one at home can see that it is there. We are interrupted by Robin Day all the time. But in the House it is not like that at all. We are lucky to be called. If we are called, Mr. Speaker does not name an hon. Member and say, "Now it is time for a speaker from the hard left", or, "Now it is time for an hon. Member from the Tory wets." We are called by our constituencies. People can make up their minds about us according to what we say. We are not made up and we are not interrupted. It is important to recognise that there are important differences.

I often think about the qualifications needed to be a Member of the House of Commons. What is so marvellous about it is that there is none. That is why it is such an interesting assembly. The only qualification that we have is that we have been elected. I got my calculator out today to find out how many people had voted for me since I arrived in the House. I can tell the House that 379,056 people have voted for me in the 14 parliamentary elections in which I was elected. Those are my only qualifications, but they are the qualifications that every hon. Member has to be heard. That is what is important.

Although it is true that it has been much better to have our proceedings televised than not, I share entirely the view that exchanges on Tuesday and Thursdays between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition are simply transmitted to zip up the evening bulletins. Previously we were given a picture of the people speaking and perhaps some of the sound broadcasting. Now we have the whole exchange. Television material has been an opportunity to illustrate the way in which the media want to cover politics. That is very bad. That is why I am strongly in favour of a dedicated channel, which I shall deal with in a moment.

Some examples have been given today. Let us take the debate on embryology and abortion, which aroused strong feelings. Views for and against were not confined to one side of the House. It would have been much better to have produced an edited version of the debates and made them available not only on the air but in videos which could be used by sixth forms, universities and so on.

In a debate before Christmas the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) was lucky in the ballot and moved a motion stating that socialism was dead. It was the first time that I have heard socialism discussed since I have been in the House. Certainly, a debate on socialism has never been promoted by my party. A few of us got together and tabled an amendment. It was, dare I say it, a marvellous debate. The hon. Member for Tatton was provocative. The chairman of the Conservative party came in. My hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) spoke. All sorts of hon. Members spoke.

A few days later I met two young women who run a video company, 20th Century Vixen. Being rather slow on the uptake, it took me a long time to realise the parallel with 20th Century Fox and that they were feminists. They edited the five-hour debate on socialism and called it "The Commons on Socialism". It was an absolutely brilliant job. Every speaker was included and the balance was absolutely fair. I wrote to the Leader of the House about it, and showed it to the Supervisor of Broadcasting and the hon. Member for Tatton, but the Committee did not turn its mind to such projects.

It is absurd that our speeches are not freely available on video because, dare I say it, the quality of the debate, when one forgets the partisan exchanges on Tuesdays and Thursdays, is of a high order. People do not get here just by accident; they have experience and when hon. Members choose to speak they usually know what they are talking about, but many of those contributions are left out because they are not newsworthy.

I hope that the ban on the use of material is lifted. Hon. Members will be aware that anyone can buy a five-hour video tape for £20—that is what I paid for "The Commons on Socialism". If hon. Members buy such videos or want to make them available to sixth forms, what is wrong with that? People might argue that such videos would be selective, but Hansard is available without any copyright restriction. If one had a 40-minute summary of the debate on socialism, which was held that Friday and with it went the copy of Hansard, made available to sixth formers or students of the Open University, it could be a useful resource. The video I purchased offers an important precedent and it is worth while developing it.

I hope that the Committee will consider a wider use of our material. I understand that it was afraid that people would use such videos as a vehicle for advertising or to make fun of hon. Members, but, as Harry Truman once said, "If you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen".

We cannot stand on our dignity if people want to see our proceedings and nothing could be more amusing or damaging than "Spitting Image" is.

A lot of other things that go on in the House should also be considered for broadcast, for example, the relationship between hon. Members and their constituents. Is there any reason why the full, mature life of an hon. Member should not be reflected when they are lobbied by pensioners, war widows and the like? The record of our parliamentary debates should not just reflect hon. Members' speeches—they represent a fraction of our work in comparison with the correspondence into which we enter, and the petitions and lobbies we receive.

We must also look at the House itself in the light of this new opportunity. I know, Mr. Speaker, that with your wig you are extremely popular all over the mid-west of America. I believe that C-Span has made you known from Ohio to Wyoming.

A party of sixth formers from a school in my constituency went round the House the other day with a guide. When I met them I asked them what happens in here and there was an awfully long pause before they could answer. The intelligibility of this place is not improved by its quaint methods and procedures.

Without going too far beyond the subject of this debate, in the years that I have been here the House has lost many of its powers. There are 30,000 American troops stationed here over whom we have no control whether or not we pass the annual Army order. Brussels has taken responsibility for our legislation and we cannot reject it when it comes back to us. The International Monetary Fund and perhaps the Bundesbank will increasingly take responsibility for our financial affairs. What does the House have left? The answer is that it is the great forum of the nation.

On Monday I had a discussion with you, Mr. Speaker, so far as it was in order so to do, about whether we should discuss the interview given by the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on Germany and the European Community. We have our rules and procedures which you interpret, Mr. Speaker, as you are required so to do by our Standing Orders. I do not believe, however, that the public understood why the one place—here—that could not discuss that matter was the place where the action was. We should have more contemporaneous debates because if we do not discuss what the people are considering, we shall become irrelevant as a forum as well as a legislative body, which is already happening fast.

When we come here as hon. Members we have certain clear things to do. The first is to represent our constituents, and any hon. Member who rises to his feet to defend a constituency interest is doing his job and should be respected, even if it is badgering, as it sometimes is, or disorderly, and I have known that to happen too.

Secondly, we have a duty to explain what is happening, because it is a puzzling world and I find that there is today a great thirst for understanding which in many respects is not best met by the mass media, which want to oversimplify or in some way to mystify. The media sometimes put up the experts or present matters in such a way that an incident here is only a party battle. People want explanations and we are, in a strange way, uniquely qualified to give them.

But, above all, this House—if it could get through to the public on a dedicated channel—could recover democracy for the people from the media. Politics in Britain is now a spectator sport. People stay at home, watch television and wonder who will win the World Cup. Or they watch "Newsnight" and wonder who will win the general election. They do not see any difference between their role in the World Cup—because not everybody can play the game—and their role in the election.

The media, the pollsters, the people who hype it up and the public relations people who engage in politics have taken the democratic process away from us and made it something that highly paid experts want to manage for us. This House is made up of people whose commitment to politics is real because we are answerable to our constituents. When I am in Chesterfield tomorrow, everybody I see will be my employer. That is the difference between our role and pleasing a producer so that one may get on the telly. We meet our employers.

The House has an opportunity to do something about that state of affairs, particularly if it demands a dedicated channel. I would have redrafted my hon. Friend's amendment. I do not want to make it conditional, so I would simply have amended it to read,

"and instructs the Committee to finance and provide a dedicated channel by this time 12 months."

Had my hon. Friend worded it in that way, I would have voted for it. I fear that at present the amendment might be interpreted as demanding a pause instead of a decision.

Whatever we do, let us remember that this place is a talking shop, a place where people's ideas can be heard and where debate can be real. The older I get, the less impressed I am by the abuse and the tricks played between parties, because I want to hear the argument. I want to know what the case is for and against the ERM or any other issue, and how we should deal with the debt crisis and so on. I suspect that people sitting at home, not being engaged in the daily business of these affairs in the way that we are, want to know what we really think.

The hustings are enough for the election. But the people want to know our views, and television offers a unique technical opportunity. It has come too late for my satisfaction, but it is providing us with a chance to do something. It must, of course, be under our control and not handed over to someone to make money, because it is possible to make a lot of money. We should control and finance it. If we give every candidate free postage in a general election so that all the candidates, including those who lose, can get their views over to the general public, why cannot we finance, for educational purposes—for our education as much as theirs—a dedicated channel?

I urge my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) not to make the amendment conditional. A dedicated channel is essential, or we shall simply become new pawns in a media game in which they will use the bits that they think fit their pattern. In many cases they are writing dramas in which we are allowed to play our part if we fit their script, but not if we do not. I have described what should be the basis of our approach to this issue.

9.18 pm

Mr. James Kilfedder (North Down): I subscribed my name to the amendment standing in the name of the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours), consistent with the way in which I voted when this matter previously came before the House. I voted wholeheartedly for the televising of our proceedings, for the simple reason mentioned by the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr.

[Mr. James Kilfedder]

Benn)—that the people of the United Kingdom are entitled to hear and see what is being done in their name. They have the right to see what is happening in this Chamber. That is why I believe that a dedicated channel is essential and that that channel should be completely under the supervision of the House.

Democracy can flourish only with open government, when the people feel close to Members of Parliament and to what is happening here at Westminster. There can be no doubt that, in the constant battle between the Executive and Parliament, the televising of our proceedings must help to give some muscle to hon. Members who wish to impose some restriction on the powers of the Executive. I am wholly committed to the permanent televising of the House.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I understand my hon. Friend's long attachment to the televising of Parliament. Did he catch the important point made at the end of his speech by the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn)? He made virtually the same point that my hon. Friend is making, but he also made the distinction that to link the permanent televising of the House with a dedicated channel within 12 months could make the amendment a wrecking amendment for the permanent televising of the House. If those who say that a dedicated channel may not be possible are proved right, the amendment will turn out to have been a wrecking amendment. We must be cautious about the amendment in its present form.

Mr. Kilfedder: I want to emphasise that the amendment is not a wrecking amendment. No hon. Member who has added his or her name to it wants to wreck the possibility of televising Parliament. What the hon. Member for Workington and all hon. Members who subscribe to the amendment are doing is showing that we are determined to get a dedicated channel. The only way to do that is for us and for Parliament to flex our muscles. In that way, as my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) said, we should be able to have a dedicated channel within 12 months. Even if it did not come within 12 months, the televising of Parliament would proceed. However, the only way to get a dedicated channel is by showing our determination to have one.

As I made clear in my intervention, I am not satisfied with the present broadcasting of the House. People outside see on their television screens only what the television producers and editors permit them to see, and that is contrary to the democratic principle. Why should we permit the media manipulators to censor the televising of our proceedings? What is taking place now is censorship. That applies to all parts of the United Kingdom, but especially to my own region of Northern Ireland.

I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Antrim, South (Mr. Forsythe) will agree that the coverage of speeches made in the House by most Northern Ireland Members is limited and, in some cases, non-existent. I have spoken in the Chamber on a number of occasions since television was introduced on matters that I regard as important not only to my constituents, but to everyone in Northern Ireland. Yet none of those speeches was broadcast by local Ulster Television or by BBC Northern Ireland, although they say that they are providing the people of Northern Ireland with a proper record of what is taking place in Parliament.

I should have thought that Northern Ireland, of all parts of the United Kingdom, needs to have Parliament projected into the homes of all its people—not only because of the terrorism there, but because we are being ruled by direct rule, an undemocratic system of government which can be given some democratic flavour only by the fact that the people of Northern Ireland hear what Members of Parliament are saying and what contributions they make to debates in the House.

Whatever the reasons for that shortcoming, the people of Northern Ireland are being denied proper coverage of the proceedings of this House and of contributions by Ulster Members of Parliament. That is not true in all cases. There are exceptions. Ulster Television is very fond of giving coverage to my hon. Friend the Member for Antrim, North (Rev. Ian Paisley) whenever he contributes to our debates here.

I have consulted Scottish and Welsh Members and with Lobby correspondents covering those areas of the United Kingdom, and it is beyond doubt that those Members of Parliament, together with others throughout the United Kingdom, receive proper coverage. Why is the same not done for those representing Northern Ireland constituencies? I speak not only of Unionist representatives. For example, I know that the hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady), who represents the SDLP, makes a similar complaint. It is wrong that Northern Ireland Members of Parliament should be discriminated against in that way.

I do not know why UTV and the BBC fail to provide proper coverage, but that matter ought to be investigated. It is an appalling situation, and I trust that the Leader of the House agrees that there should be a review of the coverage given by BBC Northern Ireland and by Ulster Television of our proceedings, especially of the contributions of right hon. and hon. Members representing Northern Ireland constituencies.

The only way that we can ensure that the people of Northern Ireland and of the rest of the United Kingdom do not suffer a form of television censorship is to have a dedicated channel. There could then be no tampering with transmissions to the public, with coverage confined to snippets on the one o'clock or six o'clock news. Instead, the public could view the whole proceedings and hear everything that is said. Until such a service is provided —and the sooner the better—we shall not be allowing the public to enjoy parliamentary democracy in its fullest sense, which they deserve.

Mr. Austin Mitchell (Great Grimsby): I do not believe that a debate on the experimental televising of Parliament should degenerate into an orgy of self-congratulation, perhaps with the exception of the remarks of the hon. Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) and of my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours). Nevertheless, I admit that such self-congratulation is deserved because the experiment was a great success, and ours is a healthier democracy because of it.

I may add, however, that that success was entirely predictable and predicted. All the findings of the Independent Broadcasting Authority, Leeds university, Aston university, the BBC and the Hansard Society say that it is a great success, but the researchers have the air of parents congratulating their child on being toilet trained at the age of 10. I am not sure what the usual age is—or what it was for my kids, because in those days fatherhood was not a life sentence—but it is much younger than that. The question is why it took us so long to do something so necessary and so right, which has enhanced our standing, increased interest in Parliament among the public, and provided us with a feedback that strengthens our case against Ministers. The televising of our proceedings allows us to do our job better in testing the cases made by Ministers for their policies, and in putting the arguments before the public.

All the quibbles about whether the behaviour of right hon. and hon. Members has degenerated, whether they are wearing brighter ties, or whether some have been given a franchise to become egomaniacs are simply silly.

I hope that we shall surrender tonight the veto that we have over television. What is of importance is not how television may change this Chamber—and the changes have been minimal—but the effect that it has outside, which is uniformly beneficial. That is what we should be talking about.

We have achieved that success as much by good luck as by good management. We have evolved a rather curious, ramshackle structure for our television, part public, part private, which was produced at the last minute after the Committee had wasted nearly a year. I make no criticism of the contractors. They have worked brilliantly, particularly the contractor responsible for the Committee coverage, which has been a major success.

Technically, the coverage is the best of any legislature that i have seen and the efficiency of the touch screen system and the quickness of response is brilliant. But the structure has turned the mother of Parliaments into a scrounger, looking to other people to finance the service that we should be providing ourselves as part of the public's education, as part of doing our job.

That service should be provided, as Hansard is provided, free of charge. What we are providing is a Hansard in the electronic medium from which people obtain their news and information on current affairs. We should be financing the service, not looking to the BBC or ITV, which are already strapped for cash, largely as a result of Government policy. That makes us dependent on them and it makes it more difficult to move to the next stage, which is dedicated coverage. The people to whom we could look to finance that are now using such sums to finance the coverage that we should be paying for.

Far too much time has been devoted to the amendment. It took an hour to make a point that was Jesuitical in its casuistry. We should of course have a dedicated channel. We always should have had a dedicated channel. It always was essential and we should now set out to provide it with urgency. But it is not an alternative to the coverage on existing channels through news and current affairs programmes.

As a supplement to what has been done already, we need a public affairs channel in Britain, like C-Span in the United States, on satellite and from that into cable, which will carry the Commons, the Lords and the Committees, full time, gavel to gavel—or gabble to gabble in my case. When Parliament is not sitting, that channel could carry public affairs, whether in the form of conferences, press conferences, lectures, seminars or any other form of public affairs.

Such a channel would give to the political nation its own channel in the same way as the sports enthusiasts, the movie buffs and the news freaks have their own dedicated channels. That would allow them to watch what they want, to follow the argument without interposing the authority of television producers, who have been overwhelmingly effective and sensible in their choices but who, nevertheless, are interposed between us and the public.

It must be said that television producers do have a preference for the show biz, the sensational, or, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) said, the gambling horse race element in politics. That is one reason for the excessive coverage of Prime Minister's Question Time rather than the coverage of the job that we do well, which is testing the argument, in many cases to destruction when it comes to this Government, through serious contribution to the debate.

I support, actively and energetically, a dedicated channel, but I am suspicious of my hon. Friend the Member for Workington and the hon. Member for Thanet, North coming bearing in gifts. They have been opposed to the principle of television on the terrestrial channels for so long that I cannot help seeing their amendment as another means of carrying on their old and dead arguments against coverage.

The amendment is a pistol to the head of the House and I do not want to endanger the game that we play in any way at all. I want to achieve a dedicated channel. I agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield that it would have been better if the Committee had had a deadline of a year and been told to achieve it and provide it. It should have been left at that and not been made dependent on anything. It is the next great advance and is all about an educated, involved and informed democracy that knows what is being done in its name by its elected representatives. I hope that achieving that dedicated channel, which is the next thing that we need, does not take as long and is not subject to as many frustrations as the achievement of what we are commemorating today.

9.35 pm

Mr. David Amess (Basildon): I fully recognise that as a consequence of my speech I shall receive less regional television coverage. I doubt whether in any future capacity I will receive an offer to chair a chat show.

I regret that we ever embarked upon this experiment and I certainly do not think that it has been a success. That is because politicians by their very nature are not modest creatures. For whatever reason, we have allowed ourselves to be seduced by the media. Increasingly, the House seems to be more media-driven than the other way round, and I regret that. Some hon. Members seemed to think that if we were seen on television we would be better loved by our constituents. Politicians all want to be loved, but over the last year I have not seen anything that has improved our esteem.

Some of the claims in favour of televising our proceedings were flawed. First, it was said that television would bring hon. Members back to the Chamber. It has certainly not done that tonight. People crowd in here only at peak TV times and it is difficult for Back Benchers to squeeze into the key positions that enable them to be seen by their constituents.

A distinguished hon. Member said that this place is a theatre. I resent that description, because anyone who knows anything about the theatre knows that it is bad television. The House is a special place. This is the mother of Parliaments and our proceedings have been copied by countries all over the world as a shining example of how things should be done.

Television has spoiled the special atmosphere of the House. It is extraordinary to define democracy as the ability of people to watch their Member of Parliament on television. Many people do not watch television, and many do not wish to watch it. I do not support an experiment that has not even improved the general standard of behaviour. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), who said in her excellent speech that Prime Minister's Question Time is popular. However, I do not know how on earth my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister can hear the questions put to her above the noise and the racket. Not many people will be impressed by that.

We have trivialised our proceedings, and Members of future Parliaments will never know how this place used to be. Although I am opposed to the televising of our proceedings, if we must have television cameras in this place I should like people to see us warts and all. That is why I support the amendment calling for a dedicated channel.

9.38 pm

Mr. Richard Tracey (Surbiton): As one of the members of the Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House, I should like to be associated with the expressions of thanks and appreciation voiced by hon. Members for the work carried out by my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons and by his predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. They ably chaired the Committee, kept us all at work and helped us to produce constructive findings. Equally, I wish to be associated with the thanks expressed to Mr. John Grist, the Supervisor of Broadcasting, and to Professor Blumler of Leeds university. Mr. Grist advised on the technical aspects and Professor Blumler on the measure of interest and support among both Members of Parliament and the public. Without those people working with us, our job would have been exceedingly difficult.

There is no doubt that the experiment has been a success, and that was stated in the Select Committee's report. One clear piece of evidence for that is the very lack of large numbers of hon. Members in the House tonight. When we had a major debate on the matter two and a half years ago, initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Chichester (Mr. Nelson), the Chamber was full and there were some lively contributions. A number of those came from the hon. Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton), who took the view that televising this place would lead to the frothy bits going out on the air and the whole procedure being high theatre. He certainly thought that that was the intention of the producers, and that the House and the public would get nothing out of it other than high theatre.

During that debate, I made a speech that since has characterised me as an opponent of the televising of the House. I share the desire of the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) to clarify the position. I said that the only way to televise the House was through a dedicated channel, from the beginning to the end of our proceedings. I said that we were probably four or five years too early and that, eventually, technology would reach a point where such a service to the public could be provided—not only through satellite, but through more terrestrial channels. Indeed, the phrase used this evening—and it was used in that previous debate—was "a Hansard of the air." That should be our objective. We could then deliver to the British public information on the workings of this House in exactly the same way as they would receive that information if they came to sit in the Gallery to listen to our debates, or if they were to read the Official Report.

Although I said in that debate that we were conducting the experiment too early, and I voted against it for that reason, I accept that it has been successful, and that it has proved a number of things. First, it has proved that the cameras are not intrusive. The Select Committee took longer in its deliberations than the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) would have wished. He said a number of times in the press, on television and on radio that we were dragging our feet. He also said that he was up to his ankles in envy because he was not serving on that Committee. No doubt he would have made some valuable contributions.

Although our deliberations took a long time, we drove forward the technology, so that the manufacturers of the cameras and a great deal of the other equipment seriously took on board the fact that we did not want cameramen and all the other encumbrances of television in the Chamber. We wanted the smallest possible cameras and the most sophisticated lighting. Because of the time the Select Committee took and the study that it made, we have achieved that.

Where do we go from here? Like my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) and the hon. Members for Workington and for North Down (Mr. Kilfedder), I want to make it clear that I am not associated with the amendment as a wrecking amendment. I am sure that others who have put their names to the amendment would share that view. The House now has to focus precisely on where we go from here. If setting a time limit such as 12 months will make the House focus on a dedicated channel, we must do that.

Mr. Patrick Thompson (Norwich, North): I am listening to the debate with great interest and with some uncertainty about how I shall vote on the amendment. Can my hon. Friend explain what would happen in the event of a dedicated channel not being in place after 12 months, despite the will of the House?

Mr. Tracey: My hon. Friend was not here earlier when that matter was raised. A perfectly acceptable view has been put forward that, because the House appears to be universally devoted to continuing televising proceedings, a motion will be tabled to extend the operation of televising. I do not want to speak for much longer before we hear again from my right hon. and learned Friend the Leader of the House.

Mr. Grocott: We are Members of Parliament, and our trade is words and language. If what the hon. Gentleman is saying is true—that voting for the amendment will not in any way risk the continuation of the present televising arrangements—why does the amendment not say that? Why were those words not put specifically in the amendment when it was drafted? Why is the amendment being proposed and seconded by those who have consistently opposed the televising of the House?

Mr. Tracey: Unnecessary paranoia is creeping into the debate. Many of us have said quite clearly that we want to improve the televising of the Chamber and make it more available so that people can see our proceedings without selective editing or in selected parts.

My constituents and others who know that I am a member of the Select Committee have told me that they wish to see far more live televising of the House. The only proceedings that they know will be live are Prime Minister's Question Time on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and possibly special occasions such as the Budget. Otherwise, most people do not know of precise live transmissions from the House. I do not believe that too many people want to get up at 8.30 in the morning to watch the workings of the House of Commons.

As my right hon. and learned Friend the Leader of the House said, it is unfortunate that there is no late evening programme on the major terrestrial channels, although there may well be one on BSB, as we heard from the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) earlier in the debate. Apart from the recorded extracts and the pull-together programme with commentators, the public want to see live transmission of the House, and the more of it the better, judging by the remarks made to me by people in industry and in the City. I was with a leading industrialist from the defence industry today, who said that it would be useful to see an entire transmission of a Question Time that was particularly relevant to that industry.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chichester was arguing against the amendment, but told us that he believed that schools and universities would very much welcome a dedicated channel and continuous broadcasting. From my point of view, and that of my hon. Friends, the amendment was tabled in good faith. We want to improve the televising of the House so that the British public can see us absolutely as we are and listen to the development of arguments. I rest my case on that premise and I invite hon. Members to vote for the amendment.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I thank hon. Members, in particular my hon. Friends the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) and for Chichester (Mr. Nelson), for the thanks that they extended to me and in particular to my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, South and Malden (Mr. Wakeham) for our chairmanship of the Committee. Our report laid a good foundation for the debate. Virtually nobody argues against the televising of the proceedings of the House being put on a permanent basis. However, there had to be one exception—my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess). I am glad that the breed is not wholly unrepresentative, but that puts the matter in perspective.

I thought for a moment that my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) was joining the same camp. She set out a substantial catalogue of television's characteristics: that it is selective, that it is entertainment, that it is trivial. Has she never read the parliamentary sketch writers? What does she think about their selectivity and the entertainment that they provide? The same characteristics have always applied to the press. I thought that her arguments were adequately rebutted—I rarely say this—by the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn). Let us therefore assume that most hon. Members want the televising of our proceedings to be made permanent.

A number of topics have been raised by hon. Members in all parts of the House, and the Committee will have to apply its mind to them. My hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) and other hon. Members referred to the need to improve the quality of sound in the House. Yesterday, the sound in the Edinburgh chamber was bad. We must improve the facilities for the deaf and provide adequate access to the archives. The right hon. Member for Chesterfield should not imagine that we have rejected, without having thought about it, his request for an edited video of debates. The Committee has not yet been able to agree on a set of guidelines that would reconcile the legitimate demand for wider access to our proceedings with the need to protect the rights of the House and individual Members. We shall certainly consider that important point.

My hon. Friend the Member for North Down (Mr. Kilfedder) referred to the television coverage of Northern Ireland debates as an example of unfair regional coverage. The general verdict on regional coverage was favourable. We received no evidence on that point from Northern Ireland. The Leeds group did not exempt Northern Ireland from its generally favourable verdict on coverage. If, however, my hon. Friend the Member for North Down wishes me to do so, we could ask the Leeds group to re-examine its raw data on that question and find out whether there is any cause for concern. In any event, we shall keep the matter under review.

Different views were expressed about the rules of coverage. As the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) suggested, they will be kept under review. Political coverage will be a matter of permanent and continuous interest to us all. All those matters will form part of the Committee's agenda in the months ahead.

My final point, which is at the heart of the debate about the amendment, is that the discussion takes place on the premise that all hon. Members are dedicated to a dedicated channel. No hon. Member has said that he does not like what we have now. However, all of us would like a channel that carried the whole of our proceedings from beginning to end, for reasons that to me make entirely good sense.

Everyone who has access to the channel will receive an uncut, unedited and completely comprehensive presentation of our proceedings. Those who say, "I shall vote for the amendment because I want a completely dedicated channel," are missing the point of the debate. We all want a dedicated channel. Paragraph 172, which was referred to by the hon. Member for The Wreking as well as by me, could not put it more plainly. The wording takes account of suggestions made by the hon. Member for Thanet, North:

"We reiterate our belief in the need for a dedicated channel providing continuous, unedited coverage of the House's proceedings and we recommend that his should be provided at the earliest opportunity, as an adjunct to the permanent televising of the House."

—[Interruption.] The hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) is muttering that we said that last year. I do not want him to rise to his feet, however, so he can mutter from his sedentary position.

During the year, we have been looking at all the possibilities for promoting a dedicated channel and we shall go on doing so. The case for a dedicated channel is accepted. The case against the amendment is that it makes permanence conditional. The extraordinary wording at the beginning of the amendment says:

"Line 2, at end add 'provided that within 12 months from the date of the approval of this resolution'".

The question that must be resolved once and for all is whether television stays in the House. Wording such as that in the amendment would achieve what the hon. Member for Workington wants, which is the prospect of a debate every year.

Mr. Campbell-Savours rose——

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am sorry, but I will not give way.

If that were hanging over the industry, confidence would disappear and uncertainty would take its place.

Mr. Campbell-Savours rose——

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am sorry, but I will not give way.

The Committee and I have been taking part in discussions with organisations already as to how we can move towards a dedicated channel. We want to address ourselves to the question whether we have an independent unit for the House or a House unit. The Committee has to get such questions under way. We have to decide on promoting arrangements, who shall be in charge, recruiting people and arranging for them to be recruited. If all that were to be subject to an annual debate in the same way as the Army Act, which was abolished some years ago, it would be absurd.

If we vote in favour of the amendment, the press and outsiders will see it as a vote for uncertainty. We need to achieve a permanent answer to the question whether television stays in the House.

The hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) put the issue simply when he said that we are not required to choose. We are all saying that we want to have permanent dedicated television and we do not want it to be subject to a hangover condition such as that contained in the amendment.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: I understand that there is to be a free vote tonight. Can the right hon. and learned Gentleman assure me that Ministers are permitted to vote in different Lobbies? That is all I seek.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: This matter has always been the subject of a free vote, and it will be no different tonight. It has also been the subject of consideration by mature Members from both sides of the House over the past 12 months. As I said when the matter was last voted upon, seven of the 20 on the Committee considering the matter voted against it but, as a result of our work together over the past 12 months, all except one have concluded in favour of the words recorded in our recommendations—[Interruption.] My hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North campaigned against it and, to be fair to my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton, he was not there when we had the critical vote. However, the overwhelming majority of the Committee, having thought about it carefully, said, "For heaven's sake let us go ahead with it." That seems to be the right conclusion to reach for both sides of the House.

For the benefit of those who were not here a moment ago I shall repeat the phrase that the hon. Member for the Wrekin and I have both emphasised. In our recommendations upon which the House is invited to vote tonight, we said:

"We reiterate our belief in the need for a dedicated channel providing continuous, unedited coverage of the House's proceedings and we recommend that this should be provided at the earliest opportunity, as an adjunct to the permanent televising of the House."

That is the objective to which I, with the help of the Committee, shall dedicate myself. We want to achieve it as quickly as possible. That would be made more difficult if my hon. Friends and others were to vote for the charter of conditionality which begins:

"provided that within 12 months from the date of the approval of this resolution".

We want not a proviso for permanence but permanence itself, and I ask the House to vote for it.

Radioactivity

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Patnick.]

10.25 pm

Mr. James Cran (Beverley): I raise tonight a question of importance not only for my constituency but nationally. That question is radiation, and hon. Members will agree that it is a sensitive subject that causes concern to everyone, and in particular to those involved with its containment.

To that end, I cite the Baxter report, which was commissioned by the East Yorkshire health authority as a result of a cancer cluster problem in my constituency. That report requires public comment by the Government—by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and by the National Radiological Protection Board—because the report's recommendations, if they are correct and scientifically based, raise national implications for the exposure to radiation of the work force in non-nuclear industries.

I am not a scientist. The report was actioned by a collection of scientific heavyweights, led by Professor Baxter, a fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He has a personal chair at Glasgow university and has 24 years' research experience in the area with which we are concerned. He was aided by Dr. East, Dr. MacKenzie and Dr. Scott, all of whom have similar backgrounds and scientific credentials.

A critique has been prepared on the subject. It has been sent to me—not by the National Radiological Protection Board, because it was prepared for that board by Mr. Hipkin, Mr. Stather and Mr. Wilkins—and it says on the front page:

"This document has been prepared for internal use within NRPB. The contents should not be quoted or the document made available outside NRPB without the consent of the Head of Industrial Operations Department."

My constituents cannot read the report because, as I say, it is confidential. But they can read the Baxter report, so the Government and the agencies that represent the Government in this area must come out into the open with their conclusions about what the report says. The Baxter report and the NRPB critique illustrate the great difficulty for the public when experts on crucial matters such as this fall out. I have no option but to elicit a response from the Government by quoting those recommendations.

The first recommendation is startling. It is that there should be an urgent reassessment of the radiation exposure limits for employees in industries such as mining, coal-fired power generation and chemical production. That means that, according to Professor Baxter, there should be a re-examination of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 and particularly of the exemption orders. A governmental response is required. The upshot of all that is that Professor Baxter says that after 30 years of improved scientific understanding—and this is the important point—that means that the old statistical limits are several hundred times too high. That is a considerable order of magnitude and has considerable implications, if true, for the workers who are exposed to radioactivity at work at normal industrial companies.

The whole issue is illustrated clearly in my own constituency in the case of a company called Capper Pass. That company has been the subject of investigation for radiation emissions before. I must make it clear that the company has always observed the advice it has received from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and from the National Radiological Protection Board, so no blame attaches to it. The question is what advice the company is being given. If Baxter is correct, it would seem that the work force in that company and in similar companies throughout the country are being exposed to radiation limits that could—I emphasise that word—be too high.

The additional problem with the 1960 Act is the many exemptions attached to it. Baxter says that the provisions do not cover the great majority of Capper Pass feed materials—that is, the raw materials going through the works. Yet he points out that, in 1984, the NRPB assessment of those very raw materials suggested that workers could be being exposed to radiation doses that were 10 times the present public level. If true, that is extremely worrying. I hope that my hon. Friend will be able either to reassure me and say that the report does not have any credence or to say that it does, and that he intends to act.

Baxter also says that there is another considerable problem in relation to these companies and to the way in which the raw material is processed, which is that there is inadequate attention to what is called the ALARA principle—as low as reasonably achievable. That merely means internationally agreed requirements that attention has to be paid to the reasonable minimisation of exposure to radiation. Baxter says that, if attention had been paid, the consequences of the growing obsolescence of the 1960 Act, to which I have already referred, would have meant that the whole question would have been less significant. It seems, therefore, that, if Baxter is correct, he may raise questions about the official advice that companies are now being given.

The scientific validity of the Baxter report is clearly open to some dispute if the critique prepared by the NRPB is correct. I am not quoting that report here, because it is confidential, even supposing that I might be able to do so. I am not quoting it, because my constituents cannot read it, so I am looking to my hon. Friend to tell me why the scientific validity of the report is unsupportable.

Baxter says that there has been a dramatically improved understanding of the same radio-nuclides as in the Capper Pass raw materials. It is now believed that the exposure radiation from these is 30 times greater than was the case 30 years ago—which, coincidentally, is when the 1960 Act was passed.

Baxter is saying clearly and roundly to the Government that the 1960 Act needs clear revision. He says that it is outdated, that it does not take account of the latest scientific advances, and that therefore the Government should act. The Act permits large-scale handling of ores, of intermediates and of waste products, some of which may contain uranium and thorium, which will expose workers to radiation beyond the recommended limits. I know perfectly well that my hon. Friend is sufficiently aware of the requirements for health and safety. If he were convinced that that was the case, he would act. The question is whether or not the advice that we are being given is accurate.

I do not have time to discuss this highly technical subject in the depth that I would like, but I hope that I have imparted to my hon. Friend the Minister the importance of the issue for health and safety reasons. There can be little doubt about that, and the Government must make up their mind as to whether or not the report is correct.

From a constituency point of view, the excessive radiation exposures at Capper Pass may be relevant to the cancer cluster problem in my own constituency. I remind the House that the recently-published Gardner report highlighted the apparent association between the incidence of leukaemia among youngsters at Sellafield and the radiation levels to which their fathers were exposed at the Sellafield station. If Baxter's conclusions are correct, perhaps they should not necessarily be confined to just the nuclear industry.

The problem is a serious one for my own constituents, but it also raises national issues. Little has been heard from the relevant bodies, including the Government. I do not criticise them for that, because time is needed to assess conflicting advice and to move public opinion along at the same time. Nevertheless, I ask my hon. Friend the Minister for a statement on the Government's current position, and what they feel that they should do for the further protection of workers in non-nuclear companies in this country.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment (Mr. Patrick Nicholls): I very much welcome the opportunity that my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) has provided to review the controls that are exercised over exposure of workers to radioactivity in what is termed "non-nuclear industry". It is not a single industry but covers a range of commercial and service activities that either intentionally utilise the properties of radiation and radioactive materials or involve incidental exposure to them.

Much attention has rightly been given, in this House and elsewhere, to the civil and defence applications of nuclear material and the exposure to radiation that can result. Many forget the wide range of activities that "non-nuclear industry" embraces. They include, for instance, medical, veterinary and dental practices. We are all familiar with the use of x-rays for diagnostic purposes, but these days radioactive preparations are also administered to people as a diagnostic aid. In addition, controlled exposure to very powerful radioactive sources is a well-established form of treatment for certain forms of cancer.

In industrial manufacture, various plant and consumer products contain radioactive sources, such as measuring gauges, smoke detectors, and emergency signs. Also, the medical preparations to which I have referred must be manufactured before they can be used.

There is also industrial radiography, in which powerful x-ray or radioactive sources are used to radiograph welds in pipelines and other heavy metal fabrications, to ensure their integrity. Such work is carried out either in purpose-built facilities or on site, in fields, or even offshore by divers checking North sea oil platforms.

All those activities involve the intentional use of radiation, but there are other activities where the exposure to radiation that arises is incidental to the process. Examples are metal smelting, to which my hon. Friend referred, in terms of his own constituency, and to which I shall return, where there are radioactive impurities in the raw materials, and some forms of mining—especially tin mining—where there are accumulations of the naturally occurring radioactive gas, Radon. As discussed recently in the Select Committee, Radon can also occur in significant quantities in above-ground work places.

In the last two or three years, there have been pressures to take action to reduce the legal dose limits controlling exposure to ionising radiation. Those pressures have been resisted, for reasons that I shall explain fully in a moment.

Occupational exposure to ionising radiation is possibly the most closely regulated of all occupational exposures to harmful agents. The legal provisions have a firm, internationally agreed, scientific basis which is, quite properly, subject to review and, if necessary, revision as technological changes or relevant new data become available. I think that it would be helpful if I briefly placed that in context. Since 1985, all work with ionising radiation, whether or not it is part of the nuclear industry, has been regulated by the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985. Those regulations replaced earlier legislation made under the Factories Act 1961. They extended the legislative cover to include all uses and users of ionising radiation, such as university research, which were previously unregulated.

The Ionising Radiations Regulations lay down an annual exposure limit for workers of 50 mSv a year. A particular feature of the new regulatory framework is a requirement to keep doses as low as reasonably practicable, and not merely below dose limits. In addition, doses that exceed 15 mSv a year must be investigated. The dose limit for members of the public is 5 mSv a year.

In practice, most public exposure to radiation from work activities arises from the disposal of radioactive waste in its various forms. Disposal of hazardous wastes requires authorisation from Departments other than mine, but I understand that those authorisations impose tight requirements which result in doses very much lower than the 5 mSv limit that I have quoted.

The Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974, under which the regulations were made, requires the views of all interested parties to be sought and considered before any proposals for regulations are submitted to Ministers. Moreover, the structure of the Health and Safety Commission, the statutory body responsible for proposing such legislation, consists of members who represent the interests of employers, workers, local authorities and—a recent welcome addition—the public. That ensures a fair consideration of all views and legal provisions that have been accepted as appropriate and workable by those most affected.

In addition, we have the National Radiological Protection Board, statutorily appointed in 1970, to advise Government of the acceptability of the international recommendations on which, as I have said, our regulations are based.

The dose limits currently in force correspond to those in the European directive, known as the basic safety standards, that the regulations implemented. In turn, those were based on the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection that were current at the time that the directive was agreed by member states.

However, since then there has been further international revision of the scientific basis for the estimates of the risk from exposure to radiation, largely as a result of more evidence becoming available about the survivors of the Japanese atomic bombings.

The ICRP is therefore reviewing its recommendations in the light of that later information and in February this year issued revised recommendations in draft form inviting comment on its proposals. It hopes to publish its finalised recommendations early in 1991.

The next step will then be to revise the basic safety standards; again we will consult widely within the United Kingdom to agree the line that our permanent representative will pursue during the negotiations to ensure that the revised directive contains suitable and acceptable provisions. There will then be further consultations before the provisions are finally translated into national legislation.

The Health and Safety Commission issued a consultative document in February this year containing proposals for interim measures pending receipt of revised recommendations from the ICRP. That would focus attention on those relatively few workers who still receive higher doses—defined as more than 15 mSv in a year. That action was in response to advice from the National Radiological Protection Board that it would be prudent for employers to constrain their workers to no more than an average of 15 mSv a year over several years in the light of the changing views on the estimates of risk from exposure to radiation.

I make those points to show that there are ample opportunities for people with differing views to try to influence the final product. I am pleased to say that, since 1985, worker exposure in all industries, nuclear and non-nuclear, has generally decreased. The picture is generally satisfactory, and bears out our belief that there is no need for precipitate action to change the legal dose limits.

My hon. Friend mentioned his interest in the Capper Pass smelting plant, which is well known. His concern about radiation is understandable, as smelting of tin is one of the activities I mentioned in which the presence of radioactive material is incidental to the process carried on.

The consequences of that type of activity for the work force, for the general public, and for the environment are complex. Some of the points made by my hon. Friend related to pollution and public health. He will understand that they are more properly the province of my right hon. Friends in the relevant Departments. I shall try to respond to my hon. Friend in terms of my responsibilities for the health and safety of the work force and the general public. I shall specifically draw the debate to the attention of my right hon. Friends in the Department of the Environment and the Department of Health.

The Capper Pass smelter uses a range of natural ores and recycled by-products as raw materials. That means that a wide range of materials other than tin pass through the process. They include lead, cadmium, arsenic and also polonium, which is radioactive. The presence of polonium came to light in 1984, when a customer found traces of it in some alloys supplied by Capper Pass. Extensive tests and measurements were carried out, by the Health and Safety Executive and other organisations, which established that existing controls were adequate to control any radiological risk to workers or members of the public.

Health and Safety Executive inspectors have visited the Capper Pass plant on numerous occasions both before and since the detection of polonium. They have considered the full range of potential health problems at the plant, not merely those connected with radiation, and enforcement efforts have concentrated on those problems judged to have potentially the most serious consequences. These were the general standards of occupational hygiene and dust control throughout the plant. A survey of the plant by the executive's inspectors was undertaken in September 1989.

There has been public concern about the risk of radiation from the plant and, as we know, in 1988 the East Yorkshire health authority commissioned a study by Professor Baxter of the Scottish Universities Research and Reactor Centre to review radioactivity in and around the Capper Pass smelter. Professor Baxter's report was delivered in March and it was followed by the press statement by the health authority. It brought fresh attention to possible problems of radioactivity arising from the smelting processes.

It has been suggested—my hon. Friend has raised the matter—that there may be an association between the clusters of leukaemia in the locality and radioactive emissions from plants such as Capper Pass. At this stage I can do no more than quote from Professor Baxter's report:

"We cannot, in any way, attribute excess cancers to the practices at, or discharges from, the plant.

All we can say in summary is that there is far too little information on which to form a sound judgment."

In response to the concern about the plant, the Health and Safety Executive has undertaken further surveys, which will be followed by the executive's inspectors in the usual way.

To place the issue in context, my hon. Friend will recall that, in response to one of his questions in 1988, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, our hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan), said that an assessment by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution of samples from the main chimney stack at Capper Pass indicated that the most exposed member of the public would receive less than 1 per cent. of the dose received from natural radiation. I think that my hon. Friend said as much in opening the debate.

In a debate such as this, there is obviously a limit to the detail and the extent to which we can go into the subject. I hope that I have been able to assure my hon. Friend that the Health and Safety Executive continues to take a keen and active interest in this matter. I pay tribute to my hon. Friend for the way in which he has raised in the House on a number of occasions the concerns expressed by his constituents about Capper Pass.

As I have said, I shall draw the debate to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and to the attention of my right hon. Friends in the Department of Health. If, on reflection, my hon. Friend feels that there are matters within my responsibility that he would like to take up with me, I shall be pleased to see him.

Question put and agreed to.

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

Good Health

9.34 am

Mr. Roger Sims (Chislehurst): I wish to call attention to the importance of promoting good health, and I beg to move,

That this House, noting that good health is to be valued and enjoyed, recommends the adoption of healthier lifestyles to help protect against major disabling and premature death causing conditions such as heart disease, stroke and cancer; and urges the National Health Service to increase its efforts to promote such good health, through increased use of preventive measures such as vaccination and immunisation, screening services and the widespread dissemination of advice and information.

This Session we have spent a good deal of time discussing the proposed reforms of the national health service. Inevitably, there has been a great deal of emphasis on the treatment of injury, illness and disease. This morning I am inviting the House to turn its attention to steps which can be taken to avoid the incidence of injury and particularly of illness and disease.

The concept of preventive medicine is not new. The House will recall that in 1978 the World Health Organisation in the declaration of Alma-Ata issued a challenge to the world under the heading:

"Health for all by the year 2000."

That involves a continuous programme of action. In 1985 the European office of the WHO defined 38 targets for the countries within its region. I have a copy of the booklet which summarises those 38 targets with me today, but the House will be relieved to learn that I do not intend to work my way through them all. Many of those targets concern aspects of preventive medicine.

The Government fully endorsed the principles underlying the "health for all" strategy, and issued a monitoring report covering the period 1985 to 1988. That report is available in the Library and I commend it to hon. Members as an impressive account of what has been done so far. When my hon. Friend the Minister for Health contributes to the debate, I hope that she will be able to assure us that there is a continuous programme aimed towards the targets of health of "Health for all by the year 2000", and tell us whether there are plans to issue another monitoring report to show what progress has been made.

I want to put two propositions to the House. The first is that each individual has a responsibility in deciding what to eat, what to drink, how to conduct his personal life—in short, to use the jargon, to determine his or her life style. The individual has a responsibility to use available knowledge to minimise the likelihood of disease and illness and to maximise good health. My second proposition is that it is a Government duty to introduce and to implement policies that will encourage healthier living and discourage harmful activities. The Government should issue advice and information as freely as possible so that people can make informed decisions.

I am not this morning—or, I hope, at any other time—preaching or advocating nannying. I am reconciled to the fact that I will be accused of both those things, and probably of trying to restrict the freedom of the individual. There is a certain amount of double thinking on these issues. If we tell people that smoking can kill them, that excessive alcohol is harmful or that too much fatty food is bad for them, they tell us that we are trying to interfere with their private lives. However, if salmonella or listeria come to light or a drug is found to be harmful, the Government are immediately criticised for not making more information available, for not taking action and for not taking action sooner.

Surely it is right, and the responsibility of Government, to alert people to the facts and to tell them the consequences of their actions. If people choose a life style that is harmful, that is up to them—it is a free country—as long as they know what they are doing and, of course, they are not causing harm to other people by their actions.

However, a healthy life style benefits the nation as a whole. Human misery apart, disease involves heavy cost in terms of the lost productivity of goods and services, and the cost of treatment. The cost to the national health service of treating smoking-related diseases, to take just one example, is £500 million per year. What could we do with that sort of money in the health service?

One way of promoting good health is through health checks. Some companies have schemes for their employees—we are fortunate in having a similar scheme in the House. In any event, an increasing number of doctors are now offering what my own general practitioner rather delightfully calls "MOTs". It is curious that we think it important that, after a certain age, cars should be regularly checked to ensure that they are roadworthy, but that we do not encourage such checks on their drivers. It is now the usual practice for GPs to carry out basic tests such as on blood pressure, when seeing patients, regardless of the reason for which the patient is attending the surgery.

This week I was interested to note that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health has issued for discussion the report of the Standing Medical Advisory Committee on blood cholesterol testing, which has examined the cost-effectiveness of opportunistic cholesterol testing. That means that, whenever the opportunity arises, such as when a patient visits a doctor, the patient should be tested for blood cholesterol. The report is interesting, and suggests that such opportunistic testing would be well worth while. I hope that that idea will be pursued.

The new doctors' contract encourages doctors to provide health clinics and to give patients free yearly check-ups. The contract obliges doctors to carry out such checks on the elderly. I find that admirable, although it is difficult to reconcile it with deterring people from having eye and teeth checks by charging them. I have demonstrated my views on that issue previously both in speeches and in my votes, and I shall not labour the point now, although I live in hope that Ministers will come to see the inconsistency of their policies on that.

The new contract also encourages child immunisations and cervical screening. The Government are developing programmes for both cervical and breast cancer screening. The patient's involvement is voluntary, but one cannot over-emphasise the importance of women over 20 taking advantage of the cervical cancer screening facilities which are becoming increasingly available, and of women over 50 taking advantage of the breast cancer screening facilities. However, when a women is tested, she should know the results within one month. That is the deadline that has been laid down by the Government. A delay of three months is simply unacceptable.

The House will recall that, last year, the Public Accounts Committee drew attention to coronary heart disease and urged improvements to the campaign to prevent it. The Committee made some telling comparisons between the costs of that campaign and the costs of treating the disease. In the context of coronary heart disease, the blood cholesterol report to which I have referred emphasises the importance of other factors, especially smoking and diet.

The House will not be surprised if I say a few words about smoking, which is the largest avoidable course of illness and premature death. It is estimated that 110,000 people each year die before their time through smoking and that 90 per cent. of the deaths from lung cancer, bronchitis and emphysema are due to smoking. The evidence of the harm caused by tobacco products is overwhelming.

Happily, the incidence of smoking has declined, but as one third of the population still smoke, that proportion is still far too high. Especially worrying is the extent to which smoking is prevalent among young people, particularly girls. I commend the efforts of the organisation Parents Against Tobacco, with which my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young) is much involved. That organisation concentrates on ensuring that the law that makes it illegal to supply children with cigarettes is enforced. If the tobacco companies can encourage children to smoke, the chances are that they will have customers for life. There is no doubt that, if tobacco were invented now, it would never be allowed on the market.

We must be realistic: it would not be practical to ban the sales of tobacco products completely. But what are the Government doing to try to reduce the extent of smoking? The Government spend £5 million per annum through the Health Education Authority and ASH on persuading people not to smoke. The tobacco industry spends £100 million per year trying to persuade people to smoke.

Why do the Government allow smoking advertisements? I grant that the present advertising is subject to controls, but how are those controls decided? We are told that they are decided by voluntary agreement, but that means that the Government and the industry sit around the table and have a cosy chat. The Department of Health officials say what restrictions they would like and the tobacco industry suggests the restrictions that it is prepared to wear, and a compromise is reached. That is not a voluntary agreement; it is negotiated agreement. The fact is that the Department of Health is party to a negotiated agreement about how to promote the sales of a product that we know to be deadly in its effect.

I should like a complete ban on tobacco advertising and its promotion, especially when that promotion is associated with sport, which seems particularly cynical. I favour far stricter controls on advertising. I was sad that the Government opposed the EEC directive on health warnings. A draft directive is now under discussion, which involves strict controls on advertising. Only two Community countries are now opposing the proposals—West Germany and the United Kingdom. Why is the United Kingdom opposing the terms of that directive?

The increase in the tax on tobacco products was welcome, and one hopes that it will be steadily maintained. There is no doubt that increasing the cost of cigarettes dissuades people from smoking. Incidentally, it is worth reflecting that, at present, 1p on a packet of 20 cigarettes brings in about £40 million. In the next Budget, how about increasing the cost of cigarettes by at least the rate of inflation plus that extra penny, and devoting that £40 million to health education? While we are about it, would it not be sensible to take cigarettes out of the retail prices index, because it is illogical to include them?

Meanwhile, I welcome the increased adoption of non-smoking areas and, in some cases, of complete non-smoking policies in workplaces, restaurants, pubs and public places and such recent prohibitions on the underground and suburban trains.

Mr. Alex Carlile (Montgomery): Will the hon. Gentleman join me in commending the British Medical Association, which recently sent out an invitation to a large number of doctors to attend a reception? It said on the bottom, "Black tie, no smoking." Does he share my anxiety about the number of doctors in practice today who smoke?

Mr. Sims: Yes, I endorse both the hon. and learned Gentleman's comments, but particularly the latter one. Doctors do not set a good example.

The more organisations and places that have no-smoking policies, the better. I was delighted to learn that this week Air Canada decided to introduce a complete ban on smoking on all its flights.

Mr. Toby Jessel (Twickenham): Has my hon. Friend noticed that it is increasingly difficult for passengers who arrive comparatively late and check in perhaps only 40 or 50 minutes before take-off, to book a non-smoking seat? It seems that airlines are behind the public demand for smoking and non-smoking seats. Is not there a case for the Department of Health to suggest to Transport Ministers that they and their counterparts in other countries should discuss with airlines how airlines can keep ahead of the public demand instead of behind it and allocate more seats for non-smokers?

Mr. Sims: Yes, my hon. Friend is absolutely right. Another interesting example is the London surburban trains on which I travel daily. The trains used to have three non-smoking carriages and the fourth was a smoking carriage. Increasingly, one found that the only carriage in which one could get a seat was in the smoking carriage because more and more people wanted to sit in the non-smoking one. Now British Rail has recognised the very point that my hon. Friend makes and the train is completely non-smoking. I have not received any letters of complaint and I have not heard that any have been written. The arrangement has been generally accepted. Such policies discourage smokers. That must in itself be good. It certainly makes life more pleasant and healthier for others. There is increasing evidence of the harm that can be done by inhaling other people's smoke—passive smoking, as it is called.

I also mentioned diet. That can be more difficult. At times it is hard to distinguish between advice from experts and advice from eccentrics. Fashions change. Different reports come from different quarters and can cause confusion. At different times we have been told that butter and sugar are either good or bad for us. The latest advice this week is that we should all eat garlic. That is an interesting suggestion but an anti-social one.

The Government have their own advisory bodies on foodstuffs. Perhaps we should consider a way in which the definitive, authoritative recommendations on food matters can be given wider publicity. Some basic principles have been established. As a general rule, we should limit our consumption of fatty foods, sugar and salt and eat plenty of fibre. The House will be pleased to note that porridge has now been established as particularly good for us.

The Food Safety Bill now going through the House deals with the marketing of food products. It is important that we should know what we are eating and its quality. It is equally important that in legislation from the House or in EEC directives the restrictions are not such that they prevent producers from making legitimate claims for their products.

The House will be familiar with the "Look after your Heart" campaign, which recently celebrated its third anniversary. I was pleased that the booklet about the health service, which has been put through every door and has caused some controversey, on which I shall not comment, includes the "Look after your Heart" pamphlet. The pamphlet incorporates some particularly useful and easily read quick-reference guides on matters such as eating, exercise, alcohol, smoking and so on. I hope that it will be widely read. Perhaps even those who are not completely in accord with the Government's NHS reforms will realise the value of inserting the "Look after your Heart" campaign pamphlet in the booklet.

I mentioned alcohol a few moments ago. The booklet to which I referred reads:

"Drinking can be enjoyable and safe, as long as you don't overdo it. But too much alcohol can be bad for your heart and liver and cause problems at work, with family and friends."

Perhaps I should declare my interest. The House will be aware that I am parliamentary adviser to the Scotch Whisky Association. I can say with every confidence that the association would wholeheartedly endorse that advice.

Moderate consumption of wines and spirits does one no harm. Indeed, it may do one good. I am sure that I am not alone in occasionally enjoying a whisky at the end of a busy day. But there is no doubt that excess is harmful. I also enjoy a glass of beer from time to time. I am glad to see the increasing popularity of the low-alcohol beers and lagers, which I now find quite palatable. It is encouraging to see the extent to which young people drink low-alcohol drinks and soft drinks, particularly if one of a party intends to drive.

Dr. Kim Howells (Pontypridd): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that, increasingly, problems are surfacing among young people as a direct result of over-consumption of alcohol, often by people who are below the legal age to drink? Does he further agree that that is partly due to the continuing glamour and style of presentation of alcohol in advertisements? Young adults continue to believe that it is glamorous to drink hard drinks and that it makes them look like the glamorous people in advertisements. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the rules on alcohol advertising should be tightened?

Mr. Sims: Yes. Of course, spirits are not advertised on television. Some of the drinks that are advertised on television or elsewhere are given a certain aura and glamour, which is not appropriate. It is a pity that some young people are influenced by those advertisements. Young men in particular seem to think that it is manly to drink far more than is good for them. It does them no credit. It makes them rather disagreeable socially and does a great deal of harm to the health.

I wonder whether we should consider doing more to support youth clubs and other facilities. I am sure that one of the problems in some areas is that pubs are the only place for young people to go. Of course, when one goes to a pub one has a beer, then another and then another. That is something that we should examine.

We must accept that, sadly, some people become addicted to alcohol. I commend the work of the alcohol advisory services, such as my local one, which are often started by volunteers. They merit support from the district health authority, which mine receives, because their work is saving national health service expenditure. The issues surrounding alcohol have been addressed by the ministerial group on alcohol misuse. Perhaps when my hon. Friend the Minister speaks she can tell us a little about its present work.

Another factor in health promotion is exercise. All credit to some of our parliamentary colleagues who take part in the London marathon. It is a little beyond most of us. Within the precincts of the palace we have a gym, which is a valuable facility used by many members of staff. There are an increasing number of private gyms in places such as the City, which are well used. There is an argument for giving some sort of financial incentive to employers to provide gyms for their staff. The extent to which private gyms are used suggests that the facility would be much appreciated. Indeed, it would be in the interests not only of the staff, but of the company to keep its employees fit.

Jogging is a simple form of exercise that appeals to some. I enjoy a weekly swim. The problem there, as with several other sports, is the limited number of facilities and the expense of providing them. Some of the best sports facilities are in our schools. Although some schools make their facilities available to the community, others lock their doors evening after evening and throughout the weekend, which is a pity. With the introduction of local management of schools, some governors may consider making the facilities on the school premises more available to local people when they are not needed by the school. In that way they would make a contribution to the community and to community health. They could reasonably make a modest charge, which would add to school funds.

One of the themes of my motion and my remarks is the need for our fellow citizens to be well informed about health and how to promote their own good health. One source of advice is one's general practitioner and another is the local pharmacist. He or she is always ready and willing to play a part in promoting good health in the community and to give advice and information. Chemists are also a valuable means of disseminating a whole range of good material produced by organisations such as the Health Education Authority and the British Heart Foundation, whose pamphlets are reflective, well presented and readable. I am sure that hon. Members will be familiar with the publication "Pharmacy Healthcare".

[Mr. Sims]

It is the report on a scheme to provide freely information on health care issues through community pharmacists. It has done well and is worth expanding.

Whatever steps are taken, injury, illness and disease will occur and sometimes unexpectedly, for example, an accident in the home or on the road or a heart attack. If someone who happens to be on the spot can render first aid, it may literally make the difference between life and death. The July issue of Which? carries an interesting article on first aid. It explains how easy it is for people to take a variety of courses in first aid. People should be encouraged to do so. Again, perhaps employers could give employees time off for a course to ensure that several people within the company are well trained and able to carry out first aid, should the need arise, as is happily the case in this building.

I have had some correspondence with my local director of education on the matter and I was rather surprised to learn that "there is no statutory requirement for a First Aider to be present at Schools.".

He did go on to say:

"We do obviously feel that this is beneficial and we encourage both teaching and non-teaching staff to participate in the First Aid training."

I had asked him to what extent first aid training was available to pupils, to which his reply was:

"There is not a lot of time to encourage First Aid with pupils."

With the new curriculum, that is understandable, but I should have thought that it would be valuable if first aid training was made available to pupils immediately after school. I am sure that many youngsters would be interested in it. Certainly, St. John Ambulance or Red Cross would be happy to provide instructors.

I have taken the advantage of having won first place in the ballot of private Members' motions to address the House for longer than should normally choose. I am aware that even then, I have not touched on a whole range of issues that are relevant to health promotion. Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, for example, almost merits a debate on its own. On the whole, the Government have conducted a good campaign in an extremely sensitive area. Whatever they said or did, they were bound to be criticised.

I have not mentioned housing, which is relevant to health, or pollution. In the past day or two we have seen some of it and the figures show the frightening amount of pollution over London because of the present weather conditions. Family planning is an important part of health promotion. All those are relevant factors and perhaps later in the debate some of my hon. Friends will address themselves in greater detail to those topics.

Mr. Jessel: I have agreed with almost all of my hon. Friend's speech until now. Can he explain why family planning is relevant to health promotion? It is not a disease for a woman to give birth to a baby.

Mr. Sims: How long do we have? I should have thought that plenty of examples spring to mind, where the general standards of health of a family and its individual members are lower than they might have been, had the mother been able to take family planning advice and restrict her family. Any health visitor could answer my hon. Friend's question in great detail. He may well wish to pursue the point later.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): I intervene so that we can have a woman's voice in this, as family planning generally concerns women more than men. Before we had family planning, the most frequent cause of death for women was from illegal abortions. Just one statistic is that 5,000 women a year died in that way. Dr. Marie Stopes and other pioneers introduced family planning because such deaths were the cause of misery and large families had difficulty raising their children. That is how the family planning movement began. For women, it is one of the most beneficial developments in preventive medicine that I can think of.

Mr. Sims: I am obliged to my hon. Friend for that intervention, which confirms my point that family planning is an aspect of health promotion. Other hon. Members may deal with that issue later in the debate.

I hope that I have demonstrated that, as I suggested in opening, there is much that the individual can do to enjoy a healthy life and to minimise calls on the national health service, that there is much that the Government are already doing, but that there is plenty of scope for them to do more. That is the message that I endeavour to convey in my motion, which I hope commends itself to the House.

Mrs. Audrey Wise (Preston): I agree with the statement:

"The best prescription for good health is decent housing, pure water and clean air—all of which need a government committed to good public services and high standards for the environment."

That is a quotation from the Labour party document entitled "Looking to the Future", which will be the basis of the policy of the next Labour Government. During my remarks I shall refer to some of the points made in that document.

The hon. Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) was right to refer to housing. I appreciate that he could not deal with the issue at length because, as he said, he has raised a many-sided subject and time is limited. But I wish to emphasise that many families are desperate because they are homeless. I refer not simply to the young homeless but to those who are statutorily homeless, people with children and pregnant women. It is impossible to be healthy and homeless. It is a contradiction in terms. Yet the capacity for local authorities and individuals to tackle the problem of homelessness is constrained at all points and made virtually impossible to resolve because of the squeeze on local government finances.

Many families suffer from overcrowding. Again, one cannot be healthy, physically or mentally, if one is living in overcrowded conditions. Many people's homes are in a bad state of repair. Repair and improvement grants have helped, but they have never been easy to obtain. They became even more difficult to use when the Conservatives removed tax relief from loans for improvements, which made it harder for people to make the necessary contribution to the cost of repairs, which they must make in addition to any grant that they obtain. It is impossible for people to be healthy if they are living in poor, and perhaps damp, conditions.

Let us not forget those whose homes are satisfactory but whose health is affected because they are stressed by the fact that the amount they must pay to live in their homes has increased almost beyond recognition through increased mortgage rates. In other words, even people who thought that they had solved their housing problems are facing difficulties and stress.

There are so many facets to the subject that the hon. Member for Chislehurst has raised that it is difficult to know where to draw the boundaries. For example, I recall a discussion with a group of women members of my trade union, the Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers. Although the discussion was about health, particularly women's health, it soon developed into a discussion of wages.

They decided that a major cause of ill health among them and their fellow workers was stress, caused mainly by the fact that they did not earn enough. Because they were working and were also poor, they were suffering from the poverty of low income and the poverty of time. In other words, they were suffering both material deprivation and stress. Clearly, a discussion of health can easily develop into a discussion of low pay.

Coupled with the stress of low pay is stress caused by working conditions and employer attitudes. I have spoken previously in the House about the conditions of supermarket check-out operators, and I do not apologise for raising the issue again. I have observed that occupational health, injury and disease is usually regarded with the male stereotype in mind, and, for example, accidents in mines and on construction sites. But the health of many women workers doing ordinary jobs, such as supermarket check-out operators, is impaired because of their conditions and hours of work. They suffer back strain and repetitive strain injury from the sheer spread of the operation and the fact that employers are determined never to allow them a moment even to glance round. The supermarket owner allows his customers to build up into large queues rather than risk a check-out operator not having a queue waiting to be dealt with.

When I last raised this subject in the House I spoke of the time stress imposed on supermarket check-out operators. Even in a well-organised trade union shop, they may be expected to work to a norm of processing 20 items a minute. A target such as that is incredibly stressful, mentally and physically. It is positively bad for a person's health and the members of my trade union suffer, especially after doing that type of work for several years.

That state of affairs could be corrected by supermarket owners easing up on the speed, by offering more variety of work to the staff and by providing more reasonable working hours and better wages, enabling employees to take advantage of the better hours. A shop worker recently told me, "The employer thinks he owns you body and soul." People who are driven to feel like that may be prevented from enjoying a good state of health, mentally or physically.

I agreed with much of what the hon. Member for Chislehurst said, particularly about smoking. Stressful conditions encourage people to smoke, in that they seek escape from stress by smoking. I myself believe that it adds to life's stresses, but that is not the way in which many people see it on a day-to-day basis, so they make a wrong decision and smoke. The hon. Gentleman was right to say that at least a part of the answer would be to ban advertising and sports sponsorship and promotion by tobacco companies. We do not simply need exhortation, and we certainly do not need to spend large quantities of taxpayers' money on a counter-advertising campaign. As a non-smoker, I resent my taxes going on counter-advertising when it would be easier, simpler and more effective simply to ban advertising in the first place. I agree with the hon. Member for Chislehurst about that.

As long ago as 1986, in a Labour party document called "Women and Health", the Labour party committed itself to prohibiting the advertising of tobacco except at the point of sale. That is one item that receives some cross-party support. I guarantee to put pressure on the Labour Government, after the next general election, to stick to that pledge. I am pleased that the hon. Member for Chislehurst is trying to persuade the Conservative Government to have a similar policy—albeit unsuccessfully.

Child health is also adversely affected by poverty and bad housing. It is an uncomfortable fact that at present in our society people with children are relatively worse off than those without children—that applies whatever the level of income. I am not talking about the most poverty-stricken people, although their problems are the greatest. At all levels of income, having children makes people less well off than others with similar jobs and salaries.

Although I think that children bring a great deal of joy, the logic escapes me as to why children should be regarded as necessarily having to bring with them a poorer lifestyle, which affects not only parents, but the children themselves. It means that, in families with children everyone involved is relatively worse off than others from the same social background, without children.

I am pleased that, within its first year of Labour government, my party will increase child benefit at least to make up for its loss of value since 1987. It is disgraceful that increasing child benefit has not been a priority—indeed, it simply has not occurred; child benefit has been frozen. If we are really concerned about wanting children to live in healthy families, we must improve families' incomes. Child benefit is the way to do that throughout all levels of society. If anybody is worried that child benefit also helps the rich, we can increase taxation on the rich and get the money back that way. We should not destroy the universality of such a splendid benefit. I commend Conservative Members to pressurise their Government to lose no more time in restoring the level of child benefit. They should not leave it to Labour. We shall do it and so reap a great deal of credit. I shall be pleased about that, but I do not suppose that Conservative Members will be.

The provision of well woman centres is particularly important in the provision of health services generally. I call them "centres", not "clinics" because that is a less clinical, more welcoming name, which suggests a blurred edge to the function of such centres. That is important because women can be deterred from seeking medical help if their anxieties are vague or they are not sure that their complaint is a matter for the doctor. They might have a worry that is impinging on their health and could be helped by some other means, for example, other professional advice, or a self and mutual-help group. Well woman centres are important because they can serve that function, and the woman does not feel that she is "wasting the doctor's time"—a phrase that is often heard when people, especially women, are wondering whether they should go to the doctor, but fear that they might be wasting his or her time. Most doctors would probably agree that patients who worry about that are precisely the ones whom they would like to see and are least likely to waste their time. The provision of informal well woman centres, where women can go if they have worries that are vague and anxieties that straddle medical and other problems, is an excellent idea. There is no doubt that there is a huge demand for such centres from women.

As long ago as 1986, in our document "Women and Health", we talked about the promotion of well woman centres and made pledges to enable women to see women doctors. Such a policy could not be brought in overnight because there would have to be changes in training arrangements and in doctors' career structures to enable there to be large numbers of women doctors at all levels and in all specialties of the profession. That objective will need some work, but it is necessary because many women are deterred from seeking medical advice as they find it difficult to locate a woman doctor to see. That is intolerable.

It is also important for people to get a good start. I believe that preventive medicine begins even before conception. The Labour party "Women and Health" document states:

> "Pre-conceptual advice, pregnancy testing and parent craft classes should be provided and ante-natal discussion groups and post-natal support groups encouraged by group practices of midwives based in the community."

Pre-conceptual advice and thought is one of the new, valuable advances in preventive medicine that should be encouraged, and we are pledged to do so.

The maternity care that the mother receives after conception, the birth and post-natal care also have a great effect on the start given to the baby and the family unit. We want such care to be greatly improved. It is wrong that women and babies should have unnecessary hurdles to overcome because they have had a bad start. The Opposition believe that more research is needed into post-natal depression. A baby cannot have a good start if it is born to a mother who becomes deeply clinically depressed as a result of the baby's birth. There is not half enough research into that problem. As with many factors affecting women, it is neglected.

The Opposition also believe that continuity of care should be provided for expectant mothers. Starting with anti-natal care, and carrying on through the birth into post-natal care, every women should have a midwife with whom she can identify. The midwife would have the opportunity to exercise her professional skills to the full because she could watch that woman's progress and the birth of her baby from the beginning of pregnancy to the end of the post-natal period. That would be a vast improvement on the present, hopelessly fragmented approach to maternity care.

I was somewhat disappointed that the hon. Member for Chislehurst did not mention the need for free eye and dental checks, which I know he supports——

Mr. Sims: But I did.

Mrs. Wise: In that case, I apologise to the hon. Gentleman: I must have missed it. So we agree. The Opposition find it a paradox that the Government claim to favour prevention, yet put a financial hurdle between people and two of the most proven preventive procedures. I should have thought that people face enough discouragement from consulting a dentist through their own fears. They do not need charges to make matters worse.

My son is an optometrist, and a week or so ago he saw a lady who, he discovered, was suffering from a detached retina. He feared that it had been detached for some time. Detachment does not necessarily happen in one fell swoop, obvious to the patient. It can commence, then worsen. My son referred the woman for immediate hospital treatment, and I am pleased to say that she was operated on within a day—but the hospital did not have any great expectation that it could save her sight. So she was given expensive operative care, which the hospital is duty bound to carry out as long as there is any hope—but how much more sensible it would have been—and how much better a use of resources—if the woman had been seen several months earlier when her problem was only beginning. Then, the operation would have saved her sight.

The lady told the hospital that although she had been worried about her sight she had worried even more about her capacity to pay for an eye examination. It was the cost of the examination that had deterred her until her anxiety became so acute that she decided to seek advice. At that stage it was too late. That is tragic for her and it is a waste of the resources of the national health service. It is also distressing for the professionals who have to care for such patients. It upset my son that he had not had a chance to see her earlier and it undoubtedly upset the surgeons too. We should not burden our health professionals with extra stress of this sort. I look forward to the election of a Labour Government and the fulfilment of our commitment to restore free eye and dental checks.

A couple of days ago an interesting press release about the conditions in which food should be kept emerged from the Department of Health. The Government propose to introduce temperature controls to food retailing and delivery—a good step. I am sorry to have to criticise that good step, but I must do so because the Government are also acting as a brake on the speed of introduction of their own new controls. They are phasing in the temperature controls to ensure that retailers can bring their equipment up to standard. Fair enough, but the time scale is outrageous.

The first requirement is that from April 1991 food must be kept at no more than 8 deg C; so far so good. However, much perishable food should really be kept at 5 deg or less, as the Government acknowledge. They are laying regulations to that effect, but they will not come into force until April 1993. It is one thing to say that retailers need time to bring their equipment up to standard, but it is disgraceful to allow them nearly three years during which people, including pregnant women, may continue to eat food contaminated with listeria organisms, which can keep growing at 6, 7 or 8 deg.

I am sorry that the Government are spoiling their initiative that way. Of course retailers need time, but not three years. The application of technology and of money —there is plenty of that in the grocery trade—could ensure that the process is carried out in much less time, given the will to do so. I shall regard the Government as being directly to blame for cases of listeria that occur between now and 1993 because food is not kept below 5 deg. The Government know what should be done and are wilfully allowing too long in which to do it.

The Government's move is also an insult to large sections of the retail trade. If the equipment of some retailers is in such a bad state that it needs three years to bring it up to a scientifically reputable standard, I am appalled at the lack of thought that those retailers have given to food storage. However, I believe that the best retailers could meet a much tighter deadline, and it is unfair to them to allow their competitors to get away with inadequate food storage arrangements for close to another three years.

The reported figures of cases of listeria infection may represent only the tip of the iceberg. It is not an easy disease to diagnose or to trace back to its causes. But it is scientifically accepted that listeria organisms can grow under refrigeration, and that food must be stored at less than 5 deg C to protect us from this common organism. Precautionary action should certainly be taken before April 1993.

The promotion of good health is a many-sided subject. Of course people must make good personal decisions about their life style. It is sensible not to smoke; it is sensible to take exercise and to try to eat as healthy a diet as possible—although that is sometimes ruled out by a lack of income. But individual decisions in the matter, although important, are by no means the whole story—they are not even the main story. Without collective action and provision it is impossible for people to protect their health to the extent that we should all wish. In food storage, for example, we rely on Government regulations on retailing. We can make our own decisions in some ways; I have decided that I do not want to buy anything stored at more than 5 deg C, but how do I know it has been? I must make another decision—to cut out of my diet a whole range of foodstuffs that are perfectly healthy in themselves, provided that they have been stored properly. But I cannot make a personal decision that can cover that—just as we cannot make personal decisions that satisfy the housing needs of the population or ensure that we will all have adequate incomes. We rely on trade unions, employers and Governments to do those things.

The promotion of good health is the responsibility of all of us; however, it is especially the responsibility of the House and of Governments not only to encourage but to facilitate good health, through the provision of improved standards in all the areas that we are discussing this morning.

Sir George Young (Ealing, Acton): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on both his choice of subject and his speech. The non-sermonising "Jimmy Young" note that he struck was exactly right. I also commend him on the large number of subjects that he managed to cover. As he hinted, his choice of subject is timely.

For much of this year, the health debate has revolved around the role and structure of the national health service and how it should respond to changing patterns of demand, changing types of illness, new treatments and changes in medical technology. This morning my hon. Friend has righly switched the spotlight away from the national health service, and back to the role that the individual must play in improving standards of health.

I strongly believe that we have reached the point of diminishing returns in trying to secure improvements in the nation's health through investment in traditional curative medicine. Of course we must maintain that investment, but the improvements in health that all hon. Members want to see are far more likely to result from changes in individual life styles than from an increase in throughput in our hospitals.

What does that mean to a party whose traditions might suggest that it should not intervene in individual life styles, and whose instincts might lead it to the view that, if people do not wear seat belts, or if they want to smoke, that is a matter for them and not a matter in which Government should intervene? I do not agree with that view. One does not have to be a socialist to appreciate that, if the resources available to the National Health Service are finite and if those finite resources are used to treat avoidable illnesses, there will be fewer resources left for unavoidable illnesses.

A consultant at St. George's hospital—before it moved from Hyde Park corner—summed up the position very well. He was about to operate on a patient who suffered from a serious but not acute illness, and who had a rare blood group. The consultant had assembled, with some difficulty, sufficient quantities of blood of that group to enable the operation to proceed. However, just before the patient was anaesthetised, there was an accident on Hyde Park corner and a motorist who was not wearing a seat belt was rushed into the hospital, critically ill. He had the same rare blood group as the consultant's patient; and, inevitably, the supplies were diverted towards the motorist and away from the patient.

That graphically illustrates the point that my neighbour's life style is of consequence to me. We live in an interdependent society, and when health care resources are rationed, we all have a stake in how they are spent.

I do not regard it as tenable for any party to claim that it should be neutral on the question of individual life styles. How a party then discharges its legitimate interest in individual life styles is another matter. An individual should be encouraged to make sensible decisions about his or her life, but it cannot be left to the marketplace, although many of my hon. Friends might like to do that.

Let us take the issue of smoking, which was touched on by my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst. If it were left to the marketplace, the information that an individual received would be wholly one-sided, and any decision based simply on that information would inevitably be wrong. For an individual to reach a relevant decision about his life style, he must have all the relevant information. As the tobacco industry will not provide that information, inevitably the Government are drawn in. They can either do what was suggested by the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) and simply ban the advertising of tobacco—with which suggestion I have some sympathy—or they can make available to the individual the contrary information, so that he has access to both sides of the equation before he reaches a view.

The same is true of the promotion of alcohol. The Government have a legitimate interest in ensuring that the information on which an individual bases his decision is well balanced. The notion that the Government should be neutral and stand back on those issues is not one that I can support.

The Government set the parameters for many of the decisions that are made. It is the Government who decide by whom alcohol should be consumed, at what age, where and at what times. The Government fix the price for both alcohol and tobacco: that is another reason for them to take a sensible and coherent approach to these issues.

As was implied by my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst, this is not just a matter for the Department of

[Sir George Young]

Health. All Government Departments have a stake in many of the issues that he touched on. The Department of Trade and Industry may have a policy on helping firms that happen to manufacture tobacco to set themselves up to manufacture something else. How does that relate to the Department of Health's interest, which is perhaps aimed at reducing the consumption of tobacco? The Department of the Environment has a role to play in sports sponsorship, to which I shall return in a moment; the Treasury has an interest, in relation to its fiscal responsibility for setting the price.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst rightly prioritised some of the issues surrounding smoking when he drew attention to the 110,000 premature deaths that occur each year. This is the area where investment in health promotion can produce the best returns. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will draw on the reserves of good will that she has at her former Department—the Department of the Environment—to secure a passage in the White Paper on the environment about passive smoking.

For millions of people, pollution is not acid in rain, lead in petrol or the hole in the ozone layer; it is other people's smoke. If we as a Government are to be credible on the macro-issues we must be credible on the micro-issues, of which passive smoking is one.

People with asthma or chest complaints find that other people's smoke makes their condition worse. For millions of people it is an irritant. In the immortal words of Frank Sinatra, smoke gets in your eyes; but it also gets in your clothes and hair. I applaud Air Canada's decision—mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst—to ban smoking on all transatlantic flights, but the White Paper should sketch out the Government's role in establishing space in public offices as non-smoking areas.

Mr. Alex Carlile: The hon. Gentleman is right to praise Air Canada's policy. Will he join me in deploring the policy of Lufthansa, the German airline? One tends to find smokers on one side of the aisle and non-smokers on the other, effectively sitting alongside one another.

Sir George Young: That is a wholly unreasonable approach for any airline to adopt. I think it would be best not to book tickets with that airline, and I am grateful to the hon. and learned Gentleman for giving me notice of which airlines to avoid.

The canteens in Government Departments would be nicer if non-smoking were established as the norm. The Government have a role to play in helping to promote a society where non-smoking is the norm, and where there is a presumption that a public area is somewhere one does not smoke. People should not have to wait for the no-smoking sign before knowing that they are in a no-smoking area. The whole debate has to be turned around now that non-smoking is the majority activity.

It also makes good business sense for pubs, restaurants and other areas of public entertainment to develop non-smoking areas, because that is what the majority of their customers want. I hope that the Government will look at a code of guidance for employers who want to know how to tackle these sensitive issues, especially where some employees want to smoke while others do not. There is now a threat, under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, from those who suffer from passive smoking. The Government have a role to play in this.

The hon. Member for Preston mentioned sports sponsorship. When the advertising of tobacco on television was banned, the tobacco industry, in a cynical move to get round the restrictions placed on it by Parliament, began sponsoring sport. It is sad that sport is as addicted to tobacco as many smokers. We have to do more to find alternative sponsors for some of the sports that get sponsorship from the tobacco industry. We also have to look carefully at the rules. If tobacco manufacturers want to sponsor sport, rather than using the brand names of cigarettes, they should use manufacturing names, which would weaken the association. It is cynical to link sport, which is essentially healthy, with smoking, which is essentially unhealthy.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst mentioned the voluntary agreement with the tobacco industry and implied that discussions about it were cosy. When I conducted those negotiations, they were far from cosy. However, if the tobacco industry knows that the Government will not legislate, what it volunteers is the voluntary agreement, because the Government have no negotiating power. We should allow the House a free vote on the advertising of tobacco and sports sponsorship by the tobacco industry. The Government resolved libertarian issues such as the use of safety belts and crash helmets through a free vote on a Government Bill. I hope that, in the next Session, there will be a Bill with a provision that will allow a debate, such as this, that can end with a free vote on whether we should phase out the promotion of tobacco, save at the point of sale.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst spoke about the problem of doctors smoking, but the problem among health professionals is not so much with doctors, among whom the consumption is declining, as among nurses, among whom the incidence of smoking is high. I hope that the NHS can do a little more work on why it is that those who must be aware of the consequences of smoking, smoke disproportionately.

Mrs. Wise: Stress:

Sir George Young: It may be stress. I welcome the initiative of Parents Against Tobacco, which has valuable support not only from my hon. Friend the Minister but from my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. It is endeavouring to shield children from the pressure to smoke until they have grown up and can take a rational decision of their own. Members of Parliament had a helpful meeting with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, who said that he was planning legislation to tighten up the regime that controls the sale of cigarettes to children. Perhaps the House of Commons can do something in this. It has always seemed crazy that the House should validate an activity of which, by and large, it disapproves by selling its own brand of cigarettes in the kiosk downstairs. I hope that the Services Committee will have another look at this to see whether we should validate this activity by putting the insignia of the House of Commons on cigarette packets.

Cycling has a role to play in promoting good health. There has been a substantial increase in cycling over the past 15 years. My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst said that some activities are inaccessible, because the facilities are not there, but this argument does not apply to cycling. Some 90 per cent. of men and 67 per cent. of women can bicycle and there are now over 15 million bicycles in the United Kingdom—as many bicycles as cars.

A growing number of Members of Parliament use bicycles to get to and from their places of work. I claim some credit for this, because I established the House of Commons bicycle pool, way back in 1975, to promote this activity. I am not sure what happened in 1979, when this Administration came into office and I lost track of it. I think that it was privatised and that the assets were sold to the Members in accordance with the principles of that Administration.

Mrs. Wise: Will the hon. Gentleman mention the need for more cycle tracks?

Sir George Young: Yes, but there is no point in installing cycle tracks if all that happens is that motorists park in them, which is what tends to happen in London. I am all in favour of cycle tracks and routes through Royal Parks to make cycling more attractive and easier, but there has to be more observation of the cycle tracks once they have been painted, because otherwise the motorists assume that they are delineated places in which to park their cars. That is what has happened in the Uxbridge road in my constituency, where we have a cycle track that is no longer visible because of parked cars.

Cycling has great health benefits. It is a form of vigorous exercise in that, in the words of doctors, it is dynamic aerobic activity involving free movement of large muscle groups—larger in the case of some people than in others. Some interesting research was done by Dr. Tuxworth, who analysed 1,394 middle-aged factory workers. He discovered that cyclists in general enjoy a level of fitness equivalent to being five years younger, and for regular cyclists, the level of fitness was equivalent to being 10 years younger.

It is estimated that the training effect of cycling four mile each way to work at 12 mph is the same as 10 minutes wrestling, 30 minutes of squash, 50 minutes of singles tennis or 24 holes of golf. The effect is doubled if one increases the speed from 12 to 17 mph. Cycling has the advantage over jogging, swimming or some of the other activities mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst, in that it is easier to incorporate into one's daily routine without it being a time-wasting chore that eats into valuable time. For those who are worried about the constraints on cycling and who think that it rains all the time, I can say that, on average, it rains between 8 am and 9 am on 12 days in the year.

Dr. Kim Howells: I am not sure whether those figures refer to Wales. I am interested in the statistics that the hon. Gentleman has given us. However, given the dangers presented by traffic, especially in great cities such as London, could not cyclists be prematurely 20 or 30 years dead as a result of cycling on some of the busiest roads?

Sir George Young: The hon. Gentleman is right. The statistics for cycling accidents are far too high—I think, about 300 deaths a year. However, when these cycling statistics are compared with those for other forms of transport, they are somewhat misleading in that cycling statistics include children, whereas motoring statistics do not. Once one isolates that and looks at adults on bicycles as opposed to adults in cars, the statistics are not so disadvantageous.

When one then allows for the fact that much of the motoring is on motorways, where the cyclist cannot go, and then looks at cycling in cities as against driving in cities, the statistics become more reassuring.

It is safer to bicycle from home to the station, take the train and then bicycle the other end than to drive a long way, so the bicycle, taken in conjunction with public transport, is safer than it may seem. However, as the hon. Gentleman emphasises, we must make cycling safer and reduce the constraints.

A combination of the NHS reforms that have just reached the statute book and the emphasis on the role of the individual given by my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst should ensure that we enter the next decade, at the beginning of the year 2000, a fitter, healthier and happier nation than the one that entered the 1990s.

10.59 am

Mr. Alex Carlile (Montgomery): As I lay in a hot bath this morning trying to unravel an episode of backache, as, a little later, I looked in a mirror—the credibility of which I doubted, and have done for some considerable time—and as I opened my post and looked at it with ever-wearying eyes, I reflected on the fact that perhaps hon. Members are not especially qualified to teach the nation what it should be doing about its state of health.

There can be few jobs that are as unhealthy as that of hon. Members—too much hot air and too many free meals are hardly a recipe for a healthy life. Indeed, I suspect that even those like the hon. Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir George Young)——

It being Eleven o'clock, MR. SPEAKER interrupted the proceedings pursuant to Standing Order No. 11 (Friday sittings).

Britoil (Special Share)

Mr. Speaker: Statement—Mr. Morrison.

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is it not usually the case that statements on a Friday must be exceptional, urgent, or agreed through the usual channels? It is not true that the making of a statement today has not been agreed through the usual channels? The statement is not urgent and it does not require any exceptional treatment.

Britoil is a Scottish company and the bulk of the people employed by it work in Scotland. Most people affected by the statement are Scottish. To have such a statement on a Friday in July makes it especially difficult for Scottish Members of Parliament. When the last statement on Britoil was made, no fewer than 15 Scottish Members of Parliament, of all parties, raised points. They are now being deprived of that opportunity by this shifty means of making a statement today.

Mr. Alan Williams (Swansea, West) rose——

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North) rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that I can deal with this matter. The Standing Order provides the opportunity for statements to be made at 11 o'clock. I am not informed of the contents and I have no idea whether they are urgent. However, it is perfectly in order for a statement to be made at this time on a Friday.

In relation to what was said by the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), I can say from experience that I very much hope that the business of the House can, in general, be arranged through the usual channels. We proceed in good order if there is the consent of both sides of the House.

Mr. Alan Williams: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your ruling. As it is virtually the last week before the recess, there will be no opportunity to debate the matter before October unless we can do so next week. Is it not true that virtually the only opportunity for debate next week would be the Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill? Is it not also true that, because this statement is being made without notice, it is now too late for any hon. Member to table this matter for debate under the Consolidated Fund procedure?

Mr. Speaker: Of course, in addition to the Consolidated Fund—the ballot for which has already been held—there is a three-hour debate on the summer Adjournment motion on Monday. Furthermore, there is still time for the right hon. Gentleman, if he so wishes, to apply for a debate on the Adjournment on the last Thursday.

Mr. Allen: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. I very much hope that you have a long and relaxing recess. During that time, would you consider the way in which the Government, not only on this occasion, but on a number of occasions during recent weeks—this is becoming more and more evident to hon. Members on both sides—have sought to use the opportunity to gain television coverage to manipulate and extend the boundaries that hitherto were agreed by all sides? Would you consider how Parliament could recapture some of its lost time?

Mr. Speaker: There was an interesting debate last night on the televising of the House and since it is now agreed that the House will continue to be televised. I can now come clean and say that I think that it has been a considerable success. However it is not for me to speculate on how time is used when the cameras are on. Our Standing Orders allow the opportunity for statements to be made on a Friday, and Friday is of course, a working day.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. Last week and the week before, there were discussions in the House, in which you were involved, about the way in which the House was being used, without the usual negotiations between the usual channels. You made a statement to the effect that the practice of using the House of Commons in that way was not good enough. The Government do not listen to your words. They think, "It doesn't matter now; a week or two has passed so we will do it again."

There comes a time when you, Mr. Speaker, must use some authority. Unfortunately, your recent words were not good enough, because the Government have decided to treat them with contempt. At some time, you must make it abundantly clear to the Government—especially as they are now using the opportunity of television—that this sort of business must stop. Never mind about Back Benchers, never mind about the Opposition—you must make that clear to the Government. You know that there are occasions when some hon. Members are present but others are not.

It is clear that those hon. Members whose constituencies are 300 or 400 miles away and who have an interest in this matter, face more difficulties than someone like me, whose constituency is only 150 miles away. I have always recognised the fact that some hon. Members, who are up in the Shetlands and elsewhere—[Laughter.]

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): The Outer Hebrides.

Mr. Skinner: Yes, and the Outer Hebrides. Some of our people actually live in Scotland. I suggest that you, Mr. Speaker, make it clear to the Leader of the House, no less, that this sort of business must stop, and follow that with a report to the House on Monday. The Government are railroading through the business and treating the Opposition, Back Benchers and yourself with contempt.

Mr. Speaker: Not at all. The hon. Gentleman is here regularly on a Friday and he well knows that it is a full working day in the House of Commons. However, undoubtedly it would have been for the convenience of hon. Members with Scottish constituencies if they had known that the statement was to be made this morning.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that I can take any more points of order. What can I say about it?

Mr. Spearing: I shall explain that, Mr. Speaker.

Is it not true that, habitually, Ministers making statements, of whatever importance and with whatever agreement, preface their remarks with the words, "With permission"? Is it not also true that those words are nothing but a courtesy and that, in fact, they are empty of meaning? When I investigated, I discovered that not even you, Mr. Speaker, or the House has to give permission. Therefore, I suggest that it is inappropriate that it be sought.

I am a London Member, and I resent my Scottish colleagues being treated in this way. Should we not refer the question of statements to the Select Committee on Procedure? For the time being at least, should those words that are empty of meaning be not uttered by the Minister? He does not have the permission of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. Gentleman wishes to refer that matter to the Procedure Committee, he should certainly do so.

11.7 am

The Minister of State, Department of Energy (Mr. Peter Morrison): With permission, Mr. Speaker——

Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. In the light of what has been said, I am not sure that that is helpful.

Mr. Morrison: I should like to make a statement on the Britoil special share. A number of substantial benefits to Scotland and to the development of the United Kingdom's oil and gas resources have been secured as a result of BP's compliance with the assurances that it gave to the Government when it acquired Britoil in 1988.

The reserves of Britoil's producing fields have been upgraded by 67 million barrels, a 24·5 per cent. increase, and well over the 5 per cent. that was promised. The drilling rate on Britoil acreage increased significantly in 1988, and again in 1989, and this year is expected to be approximately double the 1988 level. British Petroleum has confirmed to me that its plans for drilling in 1990 are designed to secure that 87 wells are drilled on acreage held by BP or Britoil at the time of the acquisition, and that it is confident that £310 million will be spent. A further £30 million is being spent on exploration-related research and development.

British Petroleum is pressing ahead with the development of a number of major fields, including Miller and Amethyst, and has made detailed proposals for the development of Bruce. In Scotland, Glasgow has now been established as the head office for BP's upstream business throughout the whole of Europe. This year alone, BP Exploration will be spending approximately £1 billion, more than half its worldwide spending, on activities run mainly out of Scotland.

The numbers employed by BP Exploration in Glasgow and Aberdeen have risen significantly, mainly as a result of the enhancement of Glasgow's role. In addition, the expansion of Kinneil is expected to generate an extra 2,500 jobs and the Bruce project 500 jobs—all of them in Scotland. BP's commitment to Scotland has been underlined by its establishment of a Scottish advisory board chaired by the chairman of the BP group.

When BP gave the assurances, the Government undertook that after a period they would review, in the light of the way that they had operated, when the special rights preference share in Britoil should be redeemed.

BP has fully implemented the assurances, which have now been working satisfactorily for some time. They have also been the subject of an inquiry by the Select Committee on Energy.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I are satisfied that BP has lived up to its word and that the Government's objectives in obtaining assurances have been met. I am therefore taking immediate steps to arrange for the special share to be redeemed.

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): As there were at least 10 references to Scotland in that statement, the protest by my hon. Friends and myself was entirely justified.

The statement is the last nail in the coffin of Britoil, which the Government privatised as an independent oil company and which used to be Scotland's largest publicly quoted company. When Britoil was originally put up for sale, the then Minister of State for Scotland, Mr. Hamish Gray, now Lord Gray, said that the arrangements that the Government had arrived at would contain effective safeguards for Britoil's independence. The golden share was a vital part of those arrangements. In 1988, Britoil was bought up by BP. The then Chancellor of the Exchequer, the right hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson) said:

"The existence of the special share has enabled the Government to secure from BP these wide-ranging, valuable public assurances."—[Official Report, 25 February 1988; Vol. 128, c. 150.]

Those assurances covered the amount of exploration and development work to be undertaken and the level of employment in Scotland to be provided by both companies, the sale of assets of former Britoil property, and the structure of the board.

The Minister told the House today that those assurances have been kept, but that is simply not true, He said:

"they have also been the subject of an inquiry by the Select Committee on Energy."

They have, but the Minister forgot to mention that the Select Committee recommended that the golden share should be retained for the time being. The Committee also said that it was not convinced that BP had acted in the spirit of the assurances given about employment in Scotland. It is simply not true that the assurances have been kept.

The Minister's carefully worded statement, obviously drafted by a first-rate Sir Humphrey, said:

"British Petroleum has confirmed to me that its plans for drilling in 1990 are designed to secure that 87 wells are drilled on acreage held by BP or Britoil at the time of the acquisition'".

Some of that acreage is no longer held by BP or Britoil but has been disposed of. How can the Minister accept an assurance from BP that it has kept its promise when the company is counting in assets that it no longer owns? That is a preposterous concept.

Will the Minister confirm that if the acreage sold off is excluded from the calculations, the expenditure commitment on exploration and on wells drilled has not been kept? Will he answer that specific question?

Will the Minister confirm also that BP's plans for work next year will mean that its activities will be cut by half, and that the Government's surrender of the golden share will allow the company to dispose of Britoil assets exactly as it wishes and to invest the proceeds abroad, rather than in North sea activities? Will the Minister confirm that both may happen if he gets rid of the golden share?

What are the tax implications of today's statement? Is it not true that BP will be able to shift assets around from one company in the group to another? BP itself calculates that this development will help to reduce its tax liability by between £75 million and £100 million this year. Is that counted in the current public expenditure round, or is it just another of the privatisation sweeteners that the Prime Minister seems happy to hand out?

The golden share existed to enforce the assurances that BP gave. They were given partly to the Scottish people, but they have not been honoured. Surrending the golden share will give BP an entirely free hand to do what it likes with Britoil's assets and staff. Frankly, for the Minister to give up the golden share at this moment is like throwing in the towel before he has even climbed into the ring. There should be much more resistance to the action that BP is covertly trying to take.

If the Minister does not know what BP is up to, he should resign for being incompetent. If he does know, he should resign for collaborating with it. His announcement will harm the ecnonomy, our efforts in the North sea, and the people of Scotland. It has one saving grace—it will also harm the Government.

Mr. Morrison: The hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) and I are at variance about the reason why the golden share existed in the first place. If the hon. Gentleman examines the original wording on that subject, I think that he would find it impossible to use the share in the way that he wants, for intervening in the running of BP or Britoil, or both. I do not believe that it is right to intervene in any company. The North sea has prospered substantially since 1979, for the simple reason that we have allowed companies to get on with running their own businesses, rather than interfering.

The hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras said that my statement was "the last nail in the coffin of Britoil", but that is utter rubbish. As my statement pointed out, there are now 500 more jobs than would have been the case in 1988. The hon. Gentleman also talked, perfectly fairly, about the acreage—

Ms. Marjorie Mowlam (Redcar): My hon. Friend can talk about whatever he wants.

Mr. Morrison: I agree with the hon. Lady.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the acreage that is now not owned or operated by BP. I can give him precise figures. Of the 87 wells to which I referred, 39 will be operated by BP, 28 will be partner-operated, 10 will be farm-outs, and 10 will be Oryx. The sale of some Britoil assets was carefully examined by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy and myself several months ago.

The hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras will be pleased to know that, where a well is not to be operated by BP, we have received a categorical assurance that the wells will be drilled—so that assurance has been honoured.

The hon. Gentleman referred to BP's tax situation. I have not paid any attention—on reflection, nor should I—to that aspect, because it is a matter for BP and the Inland Revenue. I considered carefully the letter that Sir Peter Walters, the then chairman of BP, wrote to Sir Peter Middleton, permanent secretary to the Treasury, to determine whether the company's assurances have been honoured. That was a long and detailed letter, and it was a tough negotiation at the time, and I assure the House that they have all been carried out.

Mr. John Hannam (Exeter): Can my right hon. Friend confirm that the targets set for the company two years ago were extremely tough and that all the Government's expectations have been exceeded? Is it not true that, in general, the North sea has seen tremendous success in its exploration and development over recent years?

Mr. Morrison: I can confirm that the targets set were tough. For example, in 1988 52 wells were drilled between BP and Britoil and that figure is now just under 90. I can also confirm that the level of activity in the North sea was, I am glad to say, of a high order. New investment is at an all-time record of £3·7 billion this year, and the exploration and appraisal of wells is of a high order. As a result, the number of jobs—good jobs, too—created in Scotland is much higher than two years ago, and I am delighted by the progress of the oil and gas sector of the Scottish coast and on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Wallace: I am sure that the Minister will accept that there has been a number of job losses since the take-over of Britoil by BP, particularly in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce). There has also been a significant number of job losses in my constituency with the withdrawal of BP from its oil supply base at Lerwick, about which I have seen the Minister. Many people will wonder whether the golden share is worth anything at all when a Government who proclaimed the independence of Britoil when it was privatised and believe in competition were unable to use it to stop the takeover of Britain's largest independent company by one of the biggest companies in the United Kingdom as a whole.

In the Select Committee report there was a suggestion that BP had brought forward oil drilling into 1990. The Select Committee specifically recommended that his Department should monitor BP drilling in 1991 and beyond. What powers does he now have to take action if that level of drilling in 1991 and beyond falls far short of what would have been expected from the assurances given by BP at the outset of the take-over?

Mr. Morrison: I fully accept, as the hon. Gentleman said, that there have been some job losses. However, as I have said, there have been some job gains, and just over 500 is the net figure of the increase. I am sure that he will agree that the proper structure of the organisation—the way it balances its labour force and so on—is a matter for BP. The net figure has more than met the assurances.

The hon. Gentleman said that he does not believe that the special share was of any particular use. The letter written two years ago by Sir Peter Walters to Sir Peter Middleton giving the assurances demonstrated precisely what use it was. That would have been no good on paper if the assurances had not been met, and in practice they have been. The letter referred to the period "up to 1990". That is the period we have had to consider and monitor carefully. I can assure the hon. Gentleman that we have done so.

As for the future, BP will be able to operate in the North sea in the same way as any other international oil company and, if I may say so, it should be able to do so.

It is because of the freedom of movement that so many major international oil companies, including BP in a big way, are pouring literally tens of millions of pounds into further exploration on the United Kingdom continental shelf and particularly the North sea. The interest I have found in the 12th and frontier rounds is of a high order and I suggest that that is because of the free market we operate. Those companies could just as easily put their money into Indonesia or offshore Brazil or Australia. They choose to come here because, subject to the licence and a tough safety regime, they are allowed to be free agents. We should welcome that.

Sir Hector Monro (Dumfries): Does my right hon. Friend agree that this is exceptionally good news for Scotland for investment, expansion and the long-term future of the oil industry? Does he agree that the Scottish Office and my hon. Friend the Minister responsible for industry have played a part in achieving it? Can my right hon. Friend give a breakdown of jobs in the future? How many does he anticipate being in the headquarters in Glasgow and how many does he anticipate in the north-east, particularly around Aberdeen?

Mr. Morrison: I can certainly confirm that the discussions that my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office and I have with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy about the North sea are perhaps not on a daily basis, but they are on a weekly basis. We could not work more closely together. I agree with my hon. Friend that the news for Scotland, as well as for the United Kingdom as a whole, is unadulteratedly good in terms of what is happening in the oil and gas sector and the knock-on effects that brings with it in terms of the supply company, the fabrication yards and so on.

I have with me the most up-to-date figures I have for the number of jobs in Glasgow and in Aberdeen, and I hope that it will be helpful to my hon. Friend. There will be 3,500 in Aberdeen, 1,155 in Glasgow and 880 in places such as Sullom Voe and elsewhere. In total that is 5,545. That is direct BP employment. There will be related jobs because of BP orders being given to the yards and so on.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): I came in quite by chance just as the Minister was getting to his feet. It is a disgrace that this statement has been made this morning. It is far from the action of a decent and honourable Government to do such a thing, given that so many of my colleagues are in their constituencies in Scotland.

The offshore oil and gas industries have not made Scotland a land of milk and honey in terms of employment. My constituency has had a long and often not very happy relationship with Britoil. It will surely agree with the comment made by the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) that job losses were suffered by constituents of mine who worked for Britoil. For many people in and around Glasgow who work for Britoil—the Britoil-BP company is chaired by a Greenockian, Sir Robin Duthie—the golden share was seen as a sort of insurance policy. It was seen as a guarantee that their interests would be cared for.

With regard to jobs, has BP given an assurance that orders for offshore structures will be placed with Scottish companies? There is still under-capacity in the offshore yards in Scotland, particularly at Scott Lithgow. The Minister has not played the game with people in Scotland today.

Mr. Morrison: I am sorry that the hon. Gentleman feels that it was a mistake to make a statement. In previous announcements about golden shares, there have been statements and written answers. I offered the Opposition a statement if that was what they preferred, because I realised that there was considerable interest. That is why I have come to the House to answer any questions that hon. Members may wish to put.

The hon. Gentleman said that the employees of Britoil in Glasgow lay much store with the special share. That is true. They thought it important at the time of the takeover that the assurance should be sought and given and should be adhered to. That is precisely what was happened. The hon. Gentleman will be aware that, a week or so ago, BP announced that it was to form a Scottish advisory board under the chairmanship of the chairman of the BP group, with Sir Robin Duthie as the deputy chairman. I believe that I am right in saying—I will be corrected if I am wrong—that that advisory board has been welcomed. It was welcomed in an editorial in The Scotsman.

With regard to the terms of reference of the advisory board, the chairman of BP said:

> "I believe it is important that decisions relating to our Scottish activities should get the benefit of sound advice from a Scottish perspective. The Advisory Board will achieve this and also help BP to meet its wider obligations to the Scottish community."

That is a strong and firm commitment to Scotland by the chairman of BP.

The hon. Gentleman will be aware that the level of United Kingdom content of services, including fabrication, for the North sea is just over 80 per cent. By any stretch of the imagination that is a lion's share, and we have achieved it because we happen to be more competitive, more professional and better than our international competitors. I would not expect any company operating in the North sea to give a categorical undertaking that it will always buy British. If I did expect that, I would frighten those companies away and they would not spend the hundreds of millions of pounds that they do spend on exploration and appraisal, and the 12th and frontier rounds would not be a great success.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I ask hon. Members to bear it in mind that this is a private Members' day. I will endeavour to call those hon. Members who are rising, but we should get back to private Member's motion in 10 minutes. I ask hon. Members to be brief.

Mr. Peter Rost (Erewash): Would my right hon. Friend confirm that the Select Committee on Energy very carefully considered BP's takeover of Britoil? The Select Committee took all the evidence, saw all the documents and concluded that the accusations that BP had not met its original agreements and commitments were totally unsubstantiated and quite contrary to the misleading statements made by the Opposition Front Bench Spokesman, the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson). As I am the only member of the Select Committee present in the Chamber today who worked on that report, I hope that my right hon. Friend the Minister will persuade the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras to withdraw his quite misleading comments.

Mr. Morrison: I am most grateful to my hon. Friend. He will recall that I was a witness before the Committee. When the Committee had considered carefully what BP had to say and considered how the Department was monitoring the assurances, it reached the same conclusions as those drawn by my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mr. Rost). I am afraid that I cannot make the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), who speaks for the Opposition, withdraw his remarks. I am not responsible for him, no matter how wrong he may have got it in this case.

Mr. Alan Williams: Does not the Minister realise that the Government will be seen as cowardly and shifty for making this statement without warning on the last Friday before three months of parliamentary recess? Is not the impact of the Minister's comments today the fact that, having sold off an important national asset, he has now given away the last protection of the national interest? Will he spell out what the taxpayer will get in exchange for this surrender? Will he also give us a clue about the future? After the next reshuffle or election, which ex-Minister can we expect to see joining the board?

Mr. Morrison: I do not think that coming to the House and making a statement is either cowardly or covering up. I have allowed myself to be cross-questioned by Opposition Members. I cannot look into the crystal ball and say what benefits might accrue in future in terms of BP and its contribution to the economy. However, BP is wholly committeed to its investments in the United Kingdom, and the United Kingdom Treasury benefits substantially from the company's success and the profits.

Mr. Peter Viggers (Gosport): Does my right hon. Friend agree that the golden share mechanism is a blunt instrument which has no part to play in the longer term structure of a company? Is it not surprising that Opposition Members have made no reference to the Opposition's oil policy? Does my right hon. Friend recall the busted flush or five-legged camel known as the British National Oil Corporation? Does he agree that, since 1979, the Government have freed the oil industry? My right hon. Friend's announcement today will continue to free the oil industry, and that is a great benefit to workers and taxpayers.

Mr. Morrison: I certainly agree with my hon. Friend that in this case the special share had run to the end of its useful life. I have seen what one Opposition Front Bench spokesman has had to say about the Opposition's policy on oil and gas, and I quite understand why the Opposition now want to cover it up as fast as they can.

Mr. Skinner: Now that the golden share has been removed and any participation by the state has been lifted, will the Minister guarantee that no ex-Tory Minister, Cabinet or otherwise, will get a job on the board? Will he also give a categorical assurance as an ex-vice chairman of the Tory party that the Tory party will never collect funds from BP or any of its subsidiaries? Will he give us that guarantee?

Mr. Morrison: My answers to the hon. Gentleman are no and no. Of all people, the hon. Gentleman likes freedom and it would be wholly wrong for me——

Mr. Skinner: Are you going to moonlight?

Mr. Morrison: He likes freedom and it would be wholly wrong of me to restrict anybody from being asked or joining any particular board.

Mr. Spearing: Can the Minister give any reason why his statement could not have been made on Monday or any other day next week? Does he agree that, while statements and other actions in the House may be important, actions that go against general understandings are not acceptable unless there is very good reason for them? Is it not clear that, if the Government cannot properly give a square deal to the nation of Scotland, which is part of our United Kingdom and Union of nations, we cannot expect the Government to properly defend the interests of England, Scotland, Wales and Ulster in any wider union of nations that may be proposed?

Mr. Morrison: On the second part of the hon. Gentleman's question, outside of London and my constituency, I visit Scotland more than any other part of the country, and rightly so.

Mr. Dobson: You own part of it.

Mr. Morrison: No, my eldest brother does.

The contribution which the oil and gas sector makes to the Scottish economy is significant and we want that regime to continue in the way that I have outlined.

With regard to the first part of the hon. Gentleman's question, it is not for me to meddle in matters of business management. Suffice it to say that I gather that there are a number of statements pending for next week and I thought that it was best, as I have said, to come to the House as soon as the decision had been made to be cross-questioned by whomsoever wished to put questions to me. I informed the Opposition last night.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): Would not most independent analysts conclude that, with the sophistication of the international oil exploration markets, blocking mechanisms like the one we are discussing today have outlived their usefulness?

Is it not also rather depressing that some hon. Members according to the exchanges in the Chamber today do not seem to have learnt the lessons of the past 10 years? Large companies like the one that we are discussing really must be allowed to run their own affairs. Despite all the glitz and glitter of Labour party documents claiming that Labour has understood that, the Opposition clearly have not. They want to go back in history, interfere and return to the bad old days. My right hon. Friend's announcement today is very timely.

Mr. Morrison: My hon. Friend is 100 per cent. right. However much the Opposition protest, they would not for a second stop interfering in the activities of many oil companies operating off the Scottish coast. That would lead to much less investment in exploration and appraisal and that would lead to fewer jobs.

Mr. Peter L. Pike (Burnley): Does not the Minister accept that any sensible Government would have retained the golden share to maintain an influence on this country's energy policy and on investment in jobs in Scotland? Has the right hon. Gentleman not put party dogma first and sold those down the river today? Has he not sent out a clear signal to the other industries with a golden share that that share means nothing at all because the Government believe in market forces and not in the prosperity of the country as a whole?

Mr. Morrison: There is nothing dogmatic about doing what one said one would do. We said that, once the assurances had been met, we would release the golden share—the special share—and that is precisely what we are doing today.

Mr. Anthony Beaumont-Dark (Birmingham, Selly Oak): Does my right hon. Friend accept that, apart from spurious assets, some of the other comments expressed today have been unfair to the biggest and most profitable British company, which is one of the top four companies in the world? The taxation income brought in by British Petroleum and the thousands of millions of pounds that it has invested in North sea oil brings us huge tax revenues, huge sums of which go to support the Scottish economy. Have we now reached the stage where Scotland does not look upon itself as part of the United Kingdom, but wants to operate only in this little narrow vessel, which is what makes Scotland so unappetising to many industrialists?

Mr. Morrison: I agree with my hon. Friend. The frightening thing is that the international oil companies will read what has been said this morning and will therefore see what the Labour party would do in the unlikely event of it coming to power in, say, the year 2020. A significant number of hon. Members still want to intervene in the North sea in a major way, and that is what will drive away lots of investment and cut the labour force substantially.

Mr. Allen: There is not a great deal of family silver left to sell, but with the Government's economic problems, it is pretty clear that they will sell off every thing they can. I ask the Minister to talk to his colleagues, and I ask him and them to give the House an assurance that the golden shares and other Government shareholdings in British Telecom, British Aerospace, British Steel Enterprise Ltd., the water companies, Jaguar, Sealink, Cable and Wireless and other companies will be retained. Many of us feel that this announcement is a prelude to the grand closing down sale of the Thatcher Government.

Mr. Morrison: The hon. Gentleman would not expect me to give such an assurance because, as he appreciates, all the golden shares to which he has referred are matters for my right hon. Friends the various Secretaries of State concerned. That is how the matter lies. In future each will be looked at over a period on its merits.

Mr. Dobson: As the hon. Member for Erewash (Mr. Rost) has cast some doubt on the accuracy of what I said about the report of the Select Committee on Energy, will the Minister confirm that, as recently as 13 December last year, the Select Committee on Energy stated of the employment assurance:

"we are not ourselves convinced that BP's recent policy is fully in accord with the spirit of that assurance".

It also stated:

"The Special Share in Britoil should remain in existence for the time being."

In what the Committee then described as its "main conclusions"—those are the Committee's words, not mine—it stated:

"It is debatable whether the proposed asset sale to Oryx can properly be considered to be 'in the ordinary course of trading'. Further substantial asset sales would not be consistent with the assurances."

Will the Minister confirm that, by removing the golden share he can no longer prevent further substantial asset sales and, indeed, that that is a likely consequence?

Finally, will the Minister clarify what he said and confirm that the decision taken on the golden share by the Secretaries of State for Energy and for Scotland, which may cost the Treasury as much as £100 million in lost revenue, was taken without any consideration being given to that loss of revenue?

Mr. Morrison: On asset sales, I am sure that the hon. Gentleman knows that, when there is a change of ownership, there is a process within the Department by which the Department looks at it carefully and either approves or does not approve it. In that respect, the Department will keep some control, as it would be for any asset sale in the North sea—and rightly so, because the licences were given to a particular group, which gave certain undertakings in its application for the licence.

It would be wholly inappropriate for me to delve into the matter of——

Mr. Dobson: Why?

Mr. Morrison: Because I am concerned about whether Sir Peter Walters's assurances were or were not met. That is what the special share was about and that is what I have adhered to, taking into account the Select Committee's thorough consideration of the matter. I have concluded, with my right hon. Friend's, that all the conditions have been met and that is why the special share will be redeemed.

Mr. Speaker: We now return to the——

Mr. Wallace: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman's colleague, the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) is on his feet——

Mr. Wallace: I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker. You will have noted that the Minister said that he had informed the official Opposition last night that this statement would be made. While my hon. Friends and I do not expect to be consulted about whether a statement is to be made, do you agree that it would have been a courtesy to tell other Opposition parties about the statement, especially since my party and hon. Members from the Scottish National party represent constituencies that have a significant interest in the oil industry.

Mr. Speaker: That will have been noted by those on the Front Bench. We now return to the debate on the importance of the promotion of good health. Mr. Alex Carlile.

Good Health

Question again proposed.

11.45 am

Mr. Alex Carlile: I am grateful for the opportunity to resume the sentence that I was in the middle of when we reached the statement.

I had been just about to commend the hon. Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young) for his well publicised energy on a bicycle. He has done much for the image of those hon. Members who strive to draw attention to the need for public health awareness. However, I fear that, like many cyclists, the hon. Gentleman finds riding a bicycle in central London a risky business not only because of traffic problems, but because of the incredible pollution that hits every cyclist as he tries to cycle along the roads of London.

Nevertheless, cycling is undoubtedly a healthy activity and everthing possible should be done to enable cyclists to use the streets of London in a far more congenial way than is available at present.

One thing about cycling concerns me on safety grounds. I am referring to the prevalent use of Walkmen by cyclists. I do not know whether the hon. Member for Acton listens to a Walkman as he cycles——

Sir George Young (Ealing, Acton) indicated dissent.

Mr. Carlile: I am glad to see the hon. Gentleman shaking his head about that. It seems dangerous for cyclists to ride in the rush hour listening to loud music which obscures the sound of the approaching traffic. Even as a car driver, I find it useful to hear the sound of the traffic around me, and I am sure that cyclists should find it even more useful.

This Friday morning, right hon. and hon. Members who are smokers are conspicuous by their absence—with one or two exceptions. I wonder whether they find that a four-day week is about as much as they can manage, whereas those of us who do not smoke can also leap to our feet in the House on a Friday morning.

We face an incredible number of hazards to our health, which are increasing daily. We have heard quite a lot this morning about tobacco advertising and about the sponsorship of sport by tobacco companies. It is extraordinary that a cigarette company should sponsor a grand prix for racing cars, for example, because if one were to light up a cigarette in the pits, I suspect that one might run the risk of causing a major disaster.

Equally, it seems extraordinary that the most energetic form of county cricket—not the form that I prefer, which is the slower five-day variety—is sponsored by a tobacco company. I doubt whether some of our more athletic young cricketers who score the largest amount of runs on a Sunday would find it easy to achieve their greatest successes if they were heavy smokers.

The increasing use of tobacco by young people, especially by those under 18, is a particular hazard to their health.

We have all heard the evidence about the number of young people in that age group who become alcoholics before they reach the age of 18. That is a shocking fact.

In my years as a criminal lawyer, I have noticed all too often how crime is committed by young people who have drunk to excess. It is committed not by people who are blind drunk—they are usually incapable of committing crime—but by people who have simply had rather more than they can safely manage which makes them, to use the psychiatrists' word, disinhibited, to the extent of committing crime. Such people tend to ask their lawyers to tell the judge that they were drunk, as if that was a mitigating factor.

Young people ought to understand that crime is just as serious if it is committed when they are disinhibited by drink as at any other time. The Government—indeed, all political parties and all groups with an input in education and which have contact with young people—should stress that alcohol leads to crime. There is a direct relationship between alcohol and crime. I am not talking about shop windows being broken. I am talking about the commission of offences such as rape and robbery as a result of young people becoming disinhibited by taking drink.

We continue to face increasing hazards to our health in the workplace as a result of industrial practices. The Health and Safety Executive, under its excellent chief inspector of factories Mr. Linehan, has done a great deal to improve the position. However, the funding of the Health and Safety Executive still leaves a good deal to be desired. I should like the executive to send factory inspectors out on a much more frequent random basis, particularly to smaller factories and workplaces. It is often in smaller workplaces that the worse practices are followed —for example with machine tools—which lead to many wholly unnecessary accidents.

I represent an agricultural constituency. Indeed, I believe that it is the most agricultural constituency. There are far too many agricultural accidents. A better funded agricultural safety inspectorate could do much to obviate that.

A more general issue affecting public health is town and country planning policies. They way in which they are operated causes a great deal of anxiety. Although there is a tendency to allow areas which were not traditional industrial centres to be developed—I commend the success of the Development Board for Rural Wales in my constituency and neighbouring areas on that score—town and country planning policies continue to concentrate jobs in conurbations. That compels huge numbers of people to travel to work on congested routes, which often leads to accidents, stress and consequent disruption of family life.

Those of us who sometimes drive alone in the rush hour from our London homes to this palace—I admit with some shame that I am one—are all too accustomed to the flash of anger which the rush hour can cause as one sits in one's car surrounded by other people who travel to work alone in their cars in this great city of London. I should like far more energy to be spent on finding imaginative ways of improving our public transport system. The state of London Regional Transport is very bad, as those of us who use it frequently can testify. The buses are unpredictable and infrequent——

Ms. Harriet Harman (Peckham): And filthy.

Mr. Carlile: —and filthy.

The underground is unpredictable, sometimes infrequent, and filthy. Indeed, recent weeks have seen the virtual closure for several days of the District line, a line used not only by many Members of parliament, but, more importantly, by vast numbers of members of the public who try to lead reasonably well-organised lives in London. The consequence of that closure is that they all get into their cars and sit in queues in the rush hour suffering stress and anger with all the consequences to the health that that causes.

The hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) mentioned homelessness and the consequences for people's health. When I first came to the House in 1983, there was no homelessness in my constituency to speak of. There may have been a small handful of people who were homeless, but if people in need came to me and asked me to help them to obtain a house of flat, the Montgomeryshire district council or the Development Board for Rural Wales could generally help within a reasonably short period. That is no longer so.

Newtown is the largest town in my constituency, with about 11,000 inhabitants. There are at least 50 young people living rough there, many of whom have good, regular jobs in factories and service industries in Newtown. There is a waiting list for homes of between 400 and 500. That is only part of the constituency. It is a reasonably affluent rural area. It has low wages but low unemployment, so it is reasonably affluent, taken overall. We have a waiting list for rented accommodation of about 1,000 people: those are the ones we know about.

I have one of the smallest electorates in the House, although I have one of the largest constituencies geographically. If we have long waiting lists in Mongomeryshire, what on earth is it like in other places with much denser populations? From what I have read, it seems that, particularly in London, the problem of homelessness is desperate.

We know what homelessness does to young people, because we can see it for ourselves. There is a risk that young people who are homeless will be driven on to the streets, into crime, into drink and, in some cases, into prostitution. Of course, it does not happen to all of them;. but the real risk does not seem consistent with the housing policy of a Government seeking to promote public health seriously. If young people are to be healthy, it is vital that they are given a reasonable prospect of having a home.

I am also worried about the privatised water industry. Again I can relate the matter to my constituency. The privatised water companies have inherited a large and elderly sewerage burden. In Montgomeryshire, in the town of Welshpool there is an historic problem of poor drains and decrepit sewers. A further problem which affects areas such as mine must be tackled. A statutory responsibility has rightly been placed on the district council to ensure the cleanliness of private water supplies. I am willing to lay a substantial bet that most of the private water supplies in Montgomeryshire are a good deal more healthy than the public water supply yet it is right that we should be sure. I make no complaint about the public water supply as such, but there are some excellent private water sources.

In my constituency, over 4,500 dwellings have a private water supply. That is an extraordinarily high proportion when one considers that the area has a population of not much more than 50,000. To fulfil its statutory responsibilities, the district council will have to foot an enormous bill, running into hundreds of thousands of pounds. It cannot meet that bill. It simply cannot pay for its responsibilities unless the Government are prepared to devote substantial extra resources to it. I have written to the Secretary of State for Wales and he has set up a consultation exercise to deal with the matter. We await the result with keen anticipation.

I hope that the Minister and her colleagues in the Department of Health will pass on to the Secretary of State for Wales the view that it is extremely important that resources should be made available to enable a district council, such as Montgomeryshire, to test private water supplies, without detriment to the other services which it provides. In other words, extra money should be supplied for that purpose.

I join in the congratulations to the hon. Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on choosing this important subject for debate today. He and I have the privilege of serving together as appointed lay members of the General Medical Council. Although our appointment is fairly recent, I know that he, like me, already takes it seriously and regards it as extremely interesting and important. We have the opportunity to learn a good deal about the way in which modern general practice operates. Certainly, I did not know much about it before. Some of it has been a source of pleasant surprise, but some of it has caused me a good deal of alarm.

The health of the nation is not assisted by the prevalence of a substantial number of single-handed general practitioners, particularly in our cities. I do not want to run down every single-handed GP because undoubtedly, some are among the best. Generally speaking, a practitioner who is working on his own is forced to use contractual on-call services for night visits and days off, with all their unpredictability. Generally, they are unsatisfactory. He is not providing the same level of service to the community as a practitioner who operates in a group practice, which has duty doctors on call, most of the time at least, servicing the patients of the practice.

Mr. James Arbuthnot (Wanstead and Woodford): As always, I agree with a great deal of what the hon. and learned Gentleman says. In my constituency, there is an abnormally high level of single-handed practitioners. One result is that constituents who are unhappy with the idea of going to a locum doctor if their GP is on holiday, spend far too much time going to the casualty departments of local hospitals. That is putting a huge strain on local hospitals. My constituents then complain that the waiting lists in casualty departments are too long. It is hardly surprising if the health service is misused in that way. That flows, at least partly, from the prevalence of single practitioners.

Mr. Carlile: I agree entirely with the hon. Gentleman. It is not merely casualty departments that are affected. Recently, the professional conduct committee of the GMC heard a case—in which, I hasten to add, the doctor was found not guilty—of serious professional misconduct. A family was anxious about the mother—the wife of the complainant. The patient, having had an unsatisfactory response from an on-call service, twice called out an ambulance. The family was uncertain whether to ask the ambulance to take her to hospital or to wait for a GP to turn up. The end result was detrimental to the patient's health.

There are two important aspects to this GP problem. First, it is a matter of sheer management common sense in relation to the organisation of a medical practice to have group practices. I speak with some indirect experience, because my late father was a GP. When I was a child he worked single-handed, and as I grew up he went into what is now a well-developed and successful group practice in the north-west of England. My friends in that practice undoubtedly offer a far better-organised service than was offered in the early 1950s. It is much better for the patients and more efficient for the doctors in management terms if they are working in a group.

The second aspect can be highlighted by an analogy with the Bar. The Bar is a collegiate profession, as are most modern solicitors' offices. Practitioners work together in groups and exchange ideas. We are sometimes accused at the Bar—my wife always accuses us of this—of being a gossipy profession; in a sense, that is true, but it is only a symptom of the fact that, when problems fall on to our desks, we share discussion of them.

It is certainly of great benefit to the client that we can bounce large numbers of ideas and problems off our colleagues. Senior colleagues have experience, and junior ones are full of ideas. Medical practice, particularly general practice, would benefit greatly from an increase in size of group practices, so that collegiate aspect of the learned profession of medicine could be more effective.

The personal relationship between the individual patient and the individual doctor has diminished, because it is often difficult to see the doctor on whose list one is registered. That does not matter greatly, unless a patient is seriously or chronically ill, in which case most practices ensure that one doctor sees the patient regularly. Much can be gained from allowing that one-to-one relationship to slip a little and replacing it with medical efficiency and patients' confidence that the doctors will know about the problems which they are asked to treat. That is important for all of us.

Over the years, we have seen a considerable shift of emphasis within dentistry. At one time one thought of the dentist as the person who pulled teeth; now he is the person who saves teeth. Dentistry has made enormous strides, from treatment to prevention. In the years to come, the same can be done with general medicine. The right place to invest money for the future, while maintaining a good treatment service, is in the prevention of illness. I urge the Government to invest ever greater sums in that direction.

Mr. Toby Jessel (Twickenham): The whole House has heard the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) with great interest. I warmly agree with his support for the concept of larger, joint general practices. They will come about increasingly and will assist in preventive medicine. I was interested in his reference to dentistry. Although he did not tell the House whether he was in favour of the fluoridation of water, I noticed that earlier in his speech he mentioned water, which is important in preventive medicine.

I warmly congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on his motion on preventive medicine. The House and the country are in his debt. The central part of his motion is that this House "recommends the adoption of healthier lifestyles to help protect against major disabling and premature death causing conditions such as heart disease, stroke and cancer".

Our prime object must be to delay or defer death for as long as possible. In the Gilbert and Sullivan opera "The Yeoman of the Guard" the character Fairfax, who was under sentence of death, began his famous song:

"Is life a boon?
If so, it must befall
That Death whene'er he call,
Must call too soon."

Fairfax, a young man when he sang that, was awaiting execution. One often hears the young say, "I do not want to live over 80". They may feel differently on reaching 79. [Interruption.] I hope that the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) will chat to her hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) a little more quietly because I am finding it distracting.

Enormous improvements in medicine have occurred this century, and particularly in the last 10 years. The Library informed me this morning that the average expectation of life for a child born in 1986—the last year for which accurate figures are available—was 72·1 years for a boy and 77·8 years for a girl. Apparently girls and women have an expectation of life five and three quarter years more than boys and men.

That differential has greatly increased in recent generations. For example, a boy born in 1932 had an expectation of life of 58·7 years, and a girl, 62·9 years. That gave an average difference of four years, where as today it is five and three quarter years. It is not clear why that should be the case, but it is clear that the expectation of life has improved substantially for both sexes.

There has been a remarkable improvement in the infant mortality rate in the last decade—and the Minister may have up-to-date figures. The trend given in the Library figures shows that in 1981, the infant mortality rate was 11·2 per thousand and in 1989, projected, it was 8·4 per thousand. It is remarkable that the infant mortality rate should have dropped by about a quarter in the eight years 1981 to 1989.

There have been other significant improvements in mortality rates. I note in the analysis of causes of death given in the official year book for Britain that, for example, in respect of bronchial disease, the number of deaths from pneumonia dropped from 54,000 in 1981 to 26,000 in 1988, a fall of more than half in the number of deaths from pneumonia in seven years. The number of deaths from bronchitis and emphysema dropped from 17,000 in 1981 to 9,000 in 1988, a drop of nearly a half. It seems highly likely that preventive health measures had much to do with that improvement.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ealing Acton, (Sir G. Young) who I am pleased to see has returned to his place, referred in his interesting speech to the wearing of seat belts. In 1981, the year when seat belt wearing in the front two seats of cars became compulsory, the number of deaths from road accidents was about 5,500. By 1988, that number had dropped to 4,500. I have no doubt that in the significant drop of 20 per cent. in the number of deaths from road accidents during those years the introduction of seat belts played a part.

One could go on giving examples of improvements, but there remain two great killers, cancer and heart disease. The number of deaths from heart disease amounts to nearly half of all deaths. In 1988, it was 268,000 out of 568,000. The number of deaths from cancer of all sorts totalled about 144,000, or about a third of all deaths.

We must all die at some time and from some cause, but undoubtedly those two areas of illness provide great scope for preventive medicine. That is why my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst is right to refer in his motion to heart disease and cancer. He is also right to advocate "the widespread dissemination of advice and information" in the context of the national health service.

In welcoming the increasing emphasis on preventive medicine I commend the excellent work of the Maddison clinic at Teddington in my constituency. It was founded by the late Dr. Maddison to enable elderly people to have regular health checks and be given information about, among other things, what to eat to protect their health. It is a highly popular institution which is widely patronised.

There are occasional rumours about the clinic closing. Such rumours were circulating seven years ago. We conducted a great campaign, and it was saved. There have been rumours in the past few months to the effect that it might close, but I am glad to say that the general manager of the Richmond, Twickenham and Roehampton district health authority has confirmed to me that the clinic will remain open.

I hope that the Minister will note what I have said about the valuable work done by that clinic and what the district health authority has said about it not closing. I emphasise that because some local general practitioners have shown a noticeable lack of enthusiasm for the clinic; they prefer patients to receive all the health checks from the GPs and not from the clinic. I repeat that the clinic is extremely valuable, and I hope and believe that it will long remain to serve this and future generations of elderly people resident in my constituency.

The concept of preventive medicine contains a large proportion of what can be done to reduce the incidence of premature death. I would not object to an element of compulsion, as occurred with seat belts, or as would be the case with water fluoridation. We need more discipline in preventive medicine, as well as compulsion, and we need more incentives. We should pay doctors more to achieve a high target of immunisation of babies against diphtheria and smallpox. That is part of the purpose of recent legislation, which we were right to pass, because it should be compulsory for babies to be immunised in that way. Parents who are so ignorant as to seek to prevent immunisation should be overridden by the law, as in the case of seat belts.

Mrs. Wise: Is the hon. Gentleman aware that vaccination against smallpox no longer takes place?

Mr. Jessel: Well then it ought to take place, and so should the immunisation against diphtheria because one never knows when such things will break out again. There should also be other vaccinations.

I can tell the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) of the greatest episode of compulsory immunisation in recent times when I was on a delegation in 1971, 10 million refugees went from Bangladesh to India because they were being ill-treated by the Pakistan army, based in West Pakistan. A massive number of refugees had to live in the most appalling conditions, in the ditches and fields in the open, when they went into India. The Indian Government wanted to feed those 10 million people, look after them and protect their health until they were able to get back into their own territory of East Bengal.

But there was a terrible threat of a cholera epidemic. The Indian Government insisted that every one of those refugees was injected against cholera and produce a certificate of inoculation before being entitled to receive a food ration card. That must sound tough, but it was toughness based on the motive of compassion. It forced everyone to have an inoculation against cholera before they could get food. That was done and in that way, the number of deaths from cholera was kept down to 3,000 out of 10 million refugees. Without that policy, probably hundreds of thousands of people would have died of cholera. That is what I mean by compulsion in preventive medicine. The Indian Government were right, and that episode made a great impression upon me. Ever since, I have believed that there is little place for freedom in preventive medicine, and there should be more compulsion, discipline and inoculations where necessary.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am listening to my hon. Friend with increasing nervousness. About two centuries ago, if my hon. Friend's philosophy were followed, it would have been compulsory to have cupping and blood-letting of everyone as a matter of course. Medical science moves on, and from time to time things that are thought to be good are later thought to be bad. If such progress can be achieved through encouragement and incentive, that is all to the good, but doing it through compulsion makes me wary.

Mr. Jessel: I am sure that if my hon. Friend had been a Member of the House in the late 1970s and early 1980s, he would have voted against the compulsory wearing of seat belts. We had passionate debates on that subject when people who thought like my hon. Friend thought that it would be a monstrous interference with individual liberty for people to be compelled to wear seat belts and people should make their own decision about it. The other argument prevailed, and we are saving 600 or 700 lives a year, preventing 10,000 serious injuries a year and saving the National Health Service £8 million or £9 million a year from treating people who would have been severely injured on the roads and might, in some cases, have been human cabbages and taken up beds in national health service wards, which are now available, instead, to other people who need the treatment.

I am, at heart, as much of a libertarian as my hon. Friend, except in health matters. That may sound inconsistent, but my hon. Friend should remember the wise words of Emerson:

> "A foolish consistency is the hob-goblin of little minds," and . . .

> "Speak what you think to-day in words as hard as cannon balls, and to-morrow speak what to-morrow thinks in hard words again, though it contradict everything you said to-day."

It is a most barren and foolish form of politics for people constantly to try to look for remarks, quotations or attitudes that are in conflict with what someone has said or thought in a different context or at a different time. We have to say what we believe is right at any particular time. It seems monstrous that young babies should not be protected against the risk of diphtheria because they happen to have a misguided mother. It is better to make a few mistakes than to make a lot.

I remind the House that a few years ago we were constantly being told that there were 2,000 deaths a year from cervical cancer in women and being asked why the Government and the House of Commons were not doing more about it. People said that something must be done about it. We have done something about it in the recent legislation. We have introduced targets for general practitioners to ensure that a certain percentage of women have checks, cervical smears and screening against cervical cancer. Now, those same people who were saying that we must do something about it are beefing and complaining, whining and whingeing—the usual lobby—saying that it is an interference with their professional liberty. We should disregard that sort of lobby and get on with what we believe to be right. It is wrong to pay too much attention to people who complain in that way. In public life, sometimes we must lead public opinion and not just follow it. It is right to do so in this matter.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst, who introduced the debate, was one of the supporters of compulsory seat belts, as was my hon. Friend the Member for Acton. If I may say so, I was also active in that. That was the right philosophy and I regard the prevention of accidents as part of preventive medicine.

Much of the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst was devoted to smoking. He is famous for the lead that he has given in that subject. He should have more backing from the House as a whole and from within my party. In an intervention in his speech, I mentioned that it is more difficult to book a non-smoking seat in a crowded aircraft than a smoking seat. I suggested that he should invite the Minister of State for Health to make representations to Ministers with responsibility for transport that there should be international co-operation among Transport Ministers from different countries to remind airlines that they should keep ahead of the public demand for that instead of lagging behind it, and ensure that there are more non-smoking seats available to meet that public demand in view of the decreasing proportion of people who habitually smoke when travelling.

There should be higher taxation on cigarettes. The tax on cigarettes should go up in every Budget systematically and regularly so that over a period of five or 10 years cigarettes become at least relatively twice as expensive as they are. Whenever they have gone up a little, due to tax changes introduced by successive Chancellors of the Exchequer, there have been complaints from tobacconists in my constituency, but never by more than three or four of them. People quickly settle down to a 5p or 10p increase in the price of cigarettes. The Government then have the extra revenue to spend on the health service or whatever they and the House believe to be right. I should like the tax to be increased progressively, year by year, until cigarettes become much more expensive. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst that cigarettes should not be included in the cost of living index.

I am greatly concerned about the number of children who smoke, and particularly about girls at school, who seem to smoke more than the boys. I do not know why that is and I would be grateful if anyone could throw any light on it, but it is a worrying trend. I am glad to have heard from my hon. Friend the Member for Acton that the Home Office intends to tighten up its regime for the prosecution of shopkeepers who sell cigarettes to minors.

Cancer remains a major cause of death, and within the total figures there has been no significant reduction in the number of deaths from lung cancer. There were 35,000 in 1988, compared with 34,000 in 1981. That remains a great cause for concern because it is preventable to a large extent.

I turn now to heart disease. We are all told these days that we must cut down the proportion of cholesterol in our diets. My hon. Friend's motion refers to "the widespread dissemination of advice and information."

But in some respects there is not yet enough information about diet. I could not help noticing when there was anxiety about beef three months ago and about eggs 18 months ago—[Interruption.] I must ask my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) to whisper a little more quietly as I find her distracting, too——

Mr. Irvine Patnick (Sheffield, Hallam): That is a sexist attack.

Mr. Jessel: It is not. I am always interested to hear what my hon. Friend has to say——

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): But the hon. Gentleman would prefer to hear it when the hon. Lady takes the Floor and makes her own speech.

Mr. Jessel: Absolutely, Madam Deputy Speaker, and I am grateful for your assistance.

I could not help noticing when we heard so much about eggs in the winter 18 months ago or about beef in the spring of this year that hardly anyone mentioned that eggs and beef contain a high proportion of cholesterol, which enters into people's diets.

Fish are another area of diet. We are all told to eat more fish, but there is little reference to shellfish. It is far from clear whether a healthy diet includes shellfish in the same way as it includes flat fish, white fish or oily fish. At least one eminent heart specialist, who is a fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, has written that shellfish are just as healthy as white fish and that there is no reason why we should not all eat a large amount of them. But that is not reflected in the information put out by the societies that advise on diet, so there is a conflict of information.

We should remember that if we are told to reduce our intake of milk, cream, butter, cheese, eggs and meat, there is not much left that does not contain those foods. We cannot live all the time on kippers, cabbage and aspirins. If people could include a substantial proportion of shellfish in their diets that would add to the variety of what they can feel free to eat.

There are two main classes of shellfish: crustaceans and molluscs. Crustaceans are crabs, lobsters, shrimps, prawns and crayfish. Molluscs include winkles, whelks—which are described as sea snails on menus in France—clams, mussels, cockles and oysters. It is sometimes suggested that shellfish, whether crustaceans or molluscs, are luxuries, but I see the hon. Member for Peckham in her place, and I hope that she will not mind my mentioning that in 1964 I was the Conservative candidate for Peckham; indeed, I had been the prospective candidate there since 1960, which may well be before she was born. When I was there I had a drink in every pub in Peckham. They then numbered 117, and at least 20 of them had shellfish stalls outside. Peckham is not one of the richest areas in the country, as I am sure the hon. Lady would not deny. The consumption and enjoyment of shellfish was widespread throughout the whole of society in Peckham.

Of course there can be tremendous changes in relative food prices. We all know that salmon has come down in price. I was told by the main fishmonger in Twickenham, Mr. Ray Sandys, that the price of salmon last week was lower than the price of cod. That is absolutely astonishing: no one 10 years ago would have believed it possible. We all know that chicken is now much cheaper than beef, and 50 years ago it was the other way around. The same applies to certain shellfish.

When Lewis Carroll wrote "The Walrus and the Carpenter" in the 1880s, the oysters which feature prominately in that poem were a dish regularly and frequently eaten by working men in London. It would not have been surprising in those days for carpenters to eat oysters; these days, oysters are more likely to be consumed by yuppies. I believe that the wheel will turn full circle because, owing to improved fish-farming methods in Brittany and all along the west coast of France—methods which I hope will be extended to include places like Whitstable and Colchester in this country—the price of oysters has gone down. One can now buy 12 big ones at a fishmonger in Brittany for 20 francs, which is £2. I believe that it will not be long before some enterprising business man finds a way of importing oysters into Britain far more cheaply, so that their dissemination can be much more widely enjoyed among the population as a whole. In the context of preventive medicine, it is all the more important that we should know whether oysters are good for health and ought to be enjoyed as much as possible.

Next, I turn to eels. When we are told by health experts that we all have to eat more oily fish, they invariably mention herrings and kippers, but they make little mention of eels. Jellied eels are a traditional British dish, and they can be bought outside pubs in Peckham and outside a few pubs in Twickenham, which I have the honour to represent.

We should be told whether the consumption of eels ought to be encouraged to promote health, as well as that of kippers and herrings. They are high in calories—that is known—but they are a delicacy that is enjoyed less and less often than used to be the case, because so many people have a snobbish attitude towards eels. They think jellied eels in particular a proletarian dish, although smoked eels are considered more smart—or eels in a green sauce, as one would eat them in Belgium or Holland. I want my hon. Friend the Minister for Health to obtain departmental advice, and to let me know in writing whether eels are as healthy as herrings and kippers. I shall make the result of this inquiry known in my constituency.

I now turn to lobsters. I spoke of food farming in relation to oysters which could make them much cheaper here. Recently I was on a visit to Canada, where I was representing the Council of Europe at a conference in Ottawa on global warming and the ozone layer. I flew back via Toronto. There is in the heart of Toronto a restaurant where one can eat as much lobster as one likes for 24 Canadian dollars, which is about £13. It is analogous to the carvery that one might come upon in a British restaurant, where people can eat as much pork or beef as they want for a certain sum.

I went into this place, and I must confess to the House that I ate seven lobsters for 24 Canadian dollars. I had never had more than half a lobster in my life before, so it was a tremendous treat to eat seven lobsters. They told me in that restaurant that the record was 35 lobsters. I did not aspire to emulate that; I might have expired if I had.

I have never felt better than I felt on that occasion. Lobsters have become much cheaper in Canada because there is farming of lobster taking place, either in Hudson bay or Newfoundland—I do not know where exactly. If it takes place there, presumably it can take place around the coast of Scotland and I think that lobster will become much cheaper here in future years. We should be told whether lobsters are a healthy diet so that in future we know, because if we are not told, we shall not know.

Mr. Arbuthnot: My hon. Friend has several times mentioned fish farming, but I wonder whether this is the best route to healthy eating. Some of the fish farming in Scotland produces, for example, salmon that are fatty because they do not have the proper lifestyle of wild salmon. They do not taste nearly as good, and presumably they are not nearly as healthy for us as wild salmon. I should have thought that the same would apply to lobsters. While I am sure that one and even two lobsters would be a healthy part of one's diet, 35 are probably not.

Mr. Jessel: I did not eat 35, I ate seven. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his intervention because he raises an important point to do with whether farmed salmon are a healthy part of a diet in terms of preventive medicine. As I said earlier, the country has been advised by the Department of Health and oily and fatty fish are good for health, and it mentioned herrings and kippers. I asked my hon. Friend the Minister for advice about eels, but now my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) asks about fatty salmon. He believes that salmon that are farmed are more fatty than salmon caught in the wild on the River Tay. In view of the fact that the price of salmon fell last week below the price of cod, the public should be told whether salmon, albeit slightly fatty salmon, is as healthy as other types of salmon or other fatty fish such as herrings, kippers or, dare I say it, eel.

I think that I have said enough about fish and I now turn to the important subject of back pain. The national headquarters of the Back Pain Association is at Teddington, in my constituency, where it was founded by Mr. Stanley Grundy CBE, who happens to be the patron of my constituency Conservative association. He is an industrialist, and he is extremely fit. The Back Pain Association has been running for about 15 years. This is a subject in which my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) takes a great interest, because he has the Anglo-European College of Chiropractic in his constituency.

I believe that much more can be done to relieve the country of the scourge of back pain, by preventive health measures. People do not usually do anything about back pain until they are hurt and afflicted by it. If only people learnt to bend in the right way when picking up heavy articles, and were trained at an earlier age in physical recreation and physical training classes at school, the incidence of back pain would be greatly reduced. Much can be done to prevent it.

For example, far too many nurses—I mention them in particular because this has to do with the national health service—suffer from back pain because, when they are lifting patients, they do not follow the instructions that they have been given on how to stand or bend their knees when lifting patients or turning stroke patients in bed. Back pain is not a glamour cause in the health service or in the charitable sector, but it afflicts a great many people, and I should like the Government to devote more of their time and resources, and more of their share of the preventive medicine budget, to the prevention of back pain.

Earlier I mentioned fluoride. I used to represent the Greater London council on the Metropolitan water board—when it was the forerunner for Thames Water. I took an interest in the fluoridation of water. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to report to the House, either now or at some convenient time, what progress is being made. The great law suit in Strathclyde three or four years ago—a case to end all cases, which lasted for many months and took massive medical evidence—clearly established that fluoridation is not only safe but is the most effective measure that can be taken to protect children's teeth. Unfortunately, we are making rather slow progress. I hope that the whole process will be bucked up and that my hon. Friend will give us some information about it. I did not give her notice that I intended to raise the matter, so I should be content to accept a letter from her if it is not convenient for her to reply now.

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher): I am grateful to my hon. Friend and neighbour. Is he aware that the chairman of the anti-fluoridation campaign lives in my constituency? I listened with interest to what my hon. Friend said and I wonder whether he would like to receive correspondence from my constituent, rather than my constituent writing to me.

Mr. Jessel: No, I would not. I have had correspondence from the person in question for some 20 years.

Mr. Sims: Have not we all?

Mr. Jessel: Indeed we have. I admire the gentleman's tenacity, but he never seems to learn anything. He just churns out the same old stuff, and I see no point in reading it again. I do not want to hear from him. Indeed, I once had to threaten to sue him. I hope that the process of fluoridation will now proceed more rapidly.

I was pleased to hear the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery refer to water, because water is the basic foundation of health. A year ago, when water was still nationalised, some horrible green midges appeared in the pools of water waiting to go into the water supply at the waterworks at Hampton. Since water was privatised, those green weevils have not reappeared. That is an argument in favour of the privatisation of water.

I have one complaint about the water administration, and it is that the water pumping station——

Mr. Alex Carlile: Does the hon. Gentleman believe that there is a cause and effect relationship between the privatisation of water and the disappearance of those monsters? If so, can he explain why quantities of green algae have now appeared in water sources in Wales?

Mr. Jessel: The green things that appeared in my constituency were not algae; they were midge larvae. They wriggled, they were shown on television and they alarmed a great many people, even though they were perfectly harmless. I do not know whether the algae are harmless, but I am sure that they do not wriggle. They are therefore less likely to bring about fear, anxiety and despondency, and so are a less worrying matter.

I want the waterworks in my constituency to stop sounding a hooter at 9 am. It is a Victorian relic summoning people to work and it annoys those of my constituents who are still asleep—and there are a few. I hope that the chairman of Thames Water will stop the hooter noise forthwith, after which I shall cease complaining about it.

Ms. Harriet Harman (Peckham): It is a challenge to follow the hon. Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel), who has much in common with the green things that he found in his water supply: he too is perfectly harmless but frightens many people.

I am grateful to the hon. Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) for taking the opportunity provided by his success in the ballot to debate such an important topic, and for drafting a motion with which I and many other right hon. and hon. Members agree. His speech was wide ranging and struck the balance interestingly between private and Government responsibility.

Every individual has a responsibility to take care of themselves, and it is the responsibility of every parent to care for the health of their children. The Government also bear a major responsibility in caring for the nation's health —to promote good health and to prevent ill health—but they are failing to meet it. There has been progress in cutting deaths from preventable disease, but it has been too slow. Heart and liver disease and lung cancer are still major killers, but many deaths from them could be prevented.

We know much more now about the causes of disease and of accidents, and about their prevention. We know of the link between alcohol and liver disease, smoking and lung cancer, poverty and ill health. That knowledge places a moral obligation on the Government, which they should discharge by setting targets for preventive medicine and formulating strategies that will meet them. They should also monitor progress. That will not happen by itself, so the Government must take the lead.

Of course there must be a partnership between individuals, local authorities, health authorities, industry, and the Government, but they must take the lead. The reason they are failing to do so is that all their health initiative and enterprise is bogged down and tied up with their efforts to press ahead with national health service reforms that the public do not want. If one goes to any district health authority or family practitioner committee, one finds it discussing not public health strategy but how it can manage to make ends meet and to implement the Government's ludicrous reforms.

A further obstacle to the Government being the real champion of preventive medicine and good health promotion is their hostility to planning and regulation, which, as other hon. Members have remarked, are a vital element in maintaining public health. Nor are the Government prepared to invest the resources necessary to improve it.

I shall mention some of the aspects involved, though I am afraid that I shall not range as widely as the hon. Member for Twickenham. I hope to shed more light on family planning than he was able to do, but I cannot compete with the hon. Gentleman when it comes to the price of lobsters in Toronto.

Lung cancer, which is caused by smoking, is a major killer. We know that smoking is also a major cause of disability and premature death. Recently, I visited a hospital in my constituency whose patients included those who had just undergone amputations as a result of circulation problems caused by smoking. I went from ward to ward seeing babies born prematurely because their mothers smoked, and adults struggling to breathe as they tried to talk to me about smoking. The toll that that habit takes on public health is intolerable. The facts and figures, as the hon. Member for Chislehurst said, are appalling.

We did not always appreciate how dangerous smoking can be, but we do now. I remember an advertisement from the 1950s which was shown recently on television. It was a public information advertisement to encourage people to go to see their general practitioner. A woman was invited into the GP's surgery but one could hardly see the GP for the cloud of smoke from the fag he was puffing on. He invited her to sit down and, in order to show how to take it easy in a GP's surgery, and how a GP can set patients at their ease, he offered her a fag, she lit up and the cloud of smoke deepened.

One of the people I met in hospital who had had an amputation said that he was given cigarettes as part of his rations in the armed services. He said that he had not chosen to be a smoker but had become addicted to smoking at a time when information about the link between smoking and ill health was not known.

Now that we have information about the effects of smoking and ill health, we must have clear and unambiguous policies to cut down smoking and prevent ill health. The facts are appalling. In its strategy document for 1990-95 entitled "Strategic Plan", the Health Education Authority says:

"Cigarette smoking is the greatest cause of preventable death and disability in this country. It is estimated that some 110,000 deaths each year in the United Kingdom are attributable to tobacco products. This is the equivalent of one million years of life lost annually."

It is the equivalent of 300 people dying every day from smoking. Smoking causes 90 per cent. of deaths from lung cancer, 90 per cent. of deaths from chronic bronchitis and emphysema and 20 to 25 per cent. of deaths from heart disease.

Smoking rates are still much too high. A total of 32 per cent. of the British adult population are regular cigarette smokers. Worryingly, at the age of 15, 22 per cent. of girls —more than one in five—and 17 per cent. of boys are regular cigarette smokers. We have to act decisively on this issue.

We have to have a target. That target should be to reduce by the end of the century the number of adult smokers from 32 per cent. to 20 per cent. We should aim to cut to 5 per cent. or less the number of children under 16 who smoke. That would be a realistic target. I too support the Parents Against Tobacco initiative which is looking at new ways to deter children from smoking.

We need to have regular increases in the price of tobacco. We should have an advertising levy on tobacco promotion which could be used for health education. Really, we should abolish advertising for tobacco and tobacco products. We know that smoking kills. Why do we still allow advertisements for a product that causes major ill health and death? We should have a total ban on advertising and sponsorship. It is horrifying to see in toy shops toy cars with the name of cigarette companies all over them and during motor racing on television the cars whizz past with highly visible adverts. Cigarette sponsorship runs throughout sport.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Will the hon. Lady say the same about alcohol advertising? Is she saying that a Labour Government would ban advertising of both products?

Ms. Harman: I shall come to alcohol advertising shortly. If the hon. Gentleman reads "Looking to the Future", our policy document, which was quoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise), he will see that we are committed to a total ban on advertising and sponsorship. We must be clear about that.

The ceiling for permitted tar yields must be reduced and there should be no Government subsidies, through any Department, for the production, import or manufacture of tobacco products. That will be hard, because the tobacco industry, including the manufacture, importing, sale and supply of tobacco products, accounts for many jobs in this country. However, the Department of Health should not have to pick up the pieces of illness caused by smoking while the Department of Trade and Industry is subsidising the tobacco industry in this country.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Does my hon. Friend agree that one of the most distressing problems at the moment concerns the export of high-tar tobacco products to poorer countries and the promotion by British companies of tobacco in Third world countries? Does she agree that those companies should be rapidly encouraged to adopt product diversification instead of promoting the sale of those dangerous tobacco products to poorer people in poorer countries?

Ms. Harman: I agree with my hon. Friend. The Government should have an honest and coherent approach to smoking across all Departments. Smoking cannot be dangerous in this country but safe in the third world. Different Departments should not be pulling in different directions.

There should be more resources for health education targeted at smokers and to prevent people from taking up smoking. We need more training in the risks of smoking for health professionals, and smokers who are trying to give up should be supported and receive counselling.

We also need legislation to control all public and workplace smoking, because that smoking involves a twofold problem. Firstly, non-smokers are smoking passively and that is a problem for everyone, but particularly for people with respiratory diseases and for children. Secondly, workplace and public smoking seems to create the idea that smoking in public is somehow acceptable and that we can expect to see people on buses, in restaurants or at work smoking.

Smoking should not be allowed in day rooms in hospitals. It is an amazing irony that a mother who has given birth prematurely to a low birth weight baby with a health risk as a result of smoking can go and have a fag in the day room. We must have a public health strategy in which the Government take a lead in their role as an employer and provider of facilities and services. Cigarettes should not be sold on health service premises. Selling them there is a contradiction in terms.

The hon. Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young) made an interesting point about the sale of cigarettes bearing the House of Commons insignia. I would be interested to hear what the Minister for Health thinks about that.

Ms. Harman: The Minister is shaking her head. It seems that she is going to try to avoid that point. However, I hope that she will consider the matter.

There must be a named individual in each health and local authority to co-ordinate action. Smoking control plans should be part of every local and health authority's strategy.

There has been a great advance in child immunisation, as several hon. Members have said. However, there should be more stringent checks to discover whether children have had the correct immunisations. Those checks should be made when children enter school, because if children have missed out on immunisation before then, they can be caught and their parents can be encouraged to have their children immunised.

The Government must back that kind of service with resources. The Government took up on the excellent MMR vaccination campaign. Obviously, we should aim to stamp out rubella; it can have a terrible effect on a child if its mother had rubella when she was pregnant. That illness is entirely preventable. However, it is ironic that, when the advertising campaign for MMR was at its height, district health authorities were rationing the vaccine because they could not afford it. Parents were told to bring their children back on a different day because there was not enough vaccine available. They were told that, although their children were eligible for vaccination, they were not in the main target group and therefore they should bring their childern back on another occasion. We should take every oportunity to ensure that children have received their immunisations and vaccinations.

More and more stress is being placed on health visitors yet their posts are being frozen as a result of cuts and difficulties with health budgets. Health visitors play a vital role in promoting public health and in encouraging women to have cervical smears and to take their children for vaccinations. They must be an important part of any health promotion strategy. Their posts should not be frozen because health authorities are having financial difficulties.

I should like the Minister to respond to my next point, about vaccine-damaged children and their eligibility for compensation. As I understand it, a child is eligible for compensation only if he or she has suffered 80 per cent. disability. As the compensation scheme does not cost very much in any case—because vaccine-damage is rare—it seems unfair that children who have been vaccine-damaged should not be eligible for campensation unless they cross the threshold of 80 per cent. disability.

We know that health inequalities relating to income are as deep as ever. The map of the variations in health and disease patterns shows that the picture remains largely unchanged since the Black report. Our health strategy and our targets for health promotion should focus not only on certain diseases, such as those caused by smoking or alcohol, but on the ill health that exists in different regions and individual cities. We need to set targets for cities and to encourage healthy city projects such as those in Liverpool and Sandwell, and the one that I have visited in Oxford. We need public health profiles so that the agencies concerned and the local community can join in setting and achieving targets to improve the health of their region or city.

Many hon. Members have referred to food safety. Our discussion has ranged across salmonella, botulism, listeria and the problems of a contaminated drinking water supply. Our knowledge of food safety and of the link between poorly stored food and ill health is growing as food science is becoming more developed and microbiology is telling us more.

The Government should not lag behind. They should see the research as an opportunity. They should not bring in controls reluctantly, only when everybody is screaming and shouting; they should look closely at what science can now tell us about food and ill health, which it could not previously, and be poised to cut the incidence of ill health caused by food.

The Government should not be dragged kicking and screaming to introduce new regulations. As my hon. Friend the Member for Preston has said, we need a sufficient number of environmental health officers to enforce the regulations, because regulations by themselves have only a limited value if there are insufficient environmental health officers to police them. No local authority has sufficient environmental health officers to ensure that the current law is being complied with, let alone to make the improvements in the regulations that we are seeking.

While I am dealing with food and nutrition, I must emphasise that the low level of breast feeding in this country is a scandal. All the evidence shows that the best food for a child when it is born is its mother's breast milk. However, the companies that produce artificial milk are still giving out free samples of their products in hospital maternity wards. Although that is against the regulations, it is still happening because the milk manufacturers have been clever and have recognised that maternity wards no longer give out packs to new mothers.

In the past, a new mother could take a nappy, some baby lotion or vaseline and some talcum powder from the hospital supplies. The national health service used to provide such things, when it was not so strapped for cash. That is one of the cuts that has taken place. Therefore, milk suppliers provide what are called "bounty boxes" for expectant mothers. In the bounty box there is stacks of commecial advertising material for artificial milk.

Despite the increase in the number of babies being born, the number of maternity beds has been cut. That has led to mothers being discharged sooner after they have their babies. The amount of time that women spend in hospital after having a baby is rapidly decreasing. One of the casualties of that is that women return home with a new baby without having established breast feeding with the support of the midwives in the hospital. The community support of the midwives is the hospital. The community midwife service is too stretched to enable mothers who have nothing wrong with them to establish breast feeding.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Ms. Harman: We have an expert on breast feeding; I shall give way.

Mr. Arbuthnot: As the hon. Lady will understand, I am not an experienced breast feeder. Would she cope with the problem by banning the advertising of babies' milk?

Ms. Harman: A Department of Health regulation states that hospitals should not advertise babies' milk. I simply argue that that regulation should be enforced. I am sorry if I did not make myself clear. The Minister will confirm that it is already Government policy that milk should not be advertised in hospitals but that the regulation is not enforced. The milk companies encourage hospitals to break the regulation by offering free samples which hospitals stretched for cash take up.

Mrs. Wise: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend's point. Does she agree that the community midwife service needs to be strengthened and that it would be a good thing if new mothers were again given a home help so that they could rest more and give more attention to the baby? That would help in the establishment of breast feeding.

Ms. Harman: I absolutely agree with my hon. Friend. The home help service was introduced to assist mothers with new babies, but it is now almost entirely devoted to the elderly and people with disabilities.

I wish to touch briefly on maternity services. We must increase pre-conceptual care and promote understanding of the issues behind it, but we must also increase the number of women who come forward for ante-natal assistance and screening.

There is still an appallingly high toll from industrial illness and accidents at work. Many of those accidents simply should not happen. There is an unacceptable level of accidents among employees of cowboy builders. My hon. Friend the Member for Preston mentioned repetitive strain injury. Ill-health and disease is caused in the chemical and nuclear industries. Farmworkers are affected by chemicals and machinery used in agriculture.

We need a combination of openness, so that people know and assess the hazards in their workplace, and good inspection by the Government which is properly resourced, so that employers know that, if they breach regulations, there is a substantial chance that they will be discovered and fined. We need unionisation so that management can negotiate with strong unions acting in the interests of their members to ensure their safety.

I wish to touch briefly on ill health caused by poverty. A severe winter always brings an epidemic of hypothermia, which is preventable. The Scandinavian countries, which have far harsher climates, do not experience the increase in deaths by hypothermia that we have in Britain. If people had a decent income, if there were good incentives for insulation and if the cost of fuel was lower, we would not have that unacceptable Dickensian epidemic of death by hypothermia that arises every time that there is a cold winter.

We have too many accidents in the home. We need to have better regulations to ensure that unsafe toys and electrical goods do not reach the market. My hon. Friend the Member for Preston mentioned the safety of people in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. In her previous incarnation as a social worker, she will have visited families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. Such accommodation lacks cooking facilities. The electric kettle is inevitably without a table because there is no space between the beds, and its wire snakes across the floor. That is of particular danger to children. Several families share the same toilet and inadequate washing facilities. They are prone to infectious diseases, such as gastroenteritis. It is a contradiction in terms to claim an interest in public health promotion when so many families live in these squalid, unhealthy hostels for the homeless.

As I came here today, I went down Haygate street in SE17 and saw a touching shrine of a little dog made up of flowers. Obviously, a child has been killed there recently. Recently I went to Doncaster royal infirmary and chatted to two children who had been hit by a car. We have an unacceptably high level of road accidents. It is ridiculous that, when one argues on behalf of one's constituents for a school crossing, better enforcement of the speed limit or more school crossing attendants, one is told, "Yes, we recognise the need, but you will have to wait because spending restrictions mean that you are 50th in the queue."

We need improvements in public transport and deterrents to private cars—for example, road humps and parking restrictions. Hon. Members have talked about cycling, and it is welcome to see more people wearing cycling helmets. Sometimes cyclists wear elaborate masks because of the appalling pollution in central London and our other cities.

In any accident and emergency department there are people who have injured themselves by falling down when they were drunk. There are people, certainly in my constituency, with punch or stab wounds from being hit by someone who is drunk. As the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) said, in court people give as a defence, "I hit him because I was drunk." In every hospital there are people suffering from liver and other diseases caused by drink.

A cut in the volume of alcohol consumed, particularly high consumption, must be a target in improving the nation's health. Alcohol consumption should be cut by 20 per cent. by the year 2000. In particular, we must halt the increasing alcohol consumption by women, reduce consumption among high risk occupational groups and reduce the proportion of the population drinking more than the recommended number of units. The Government have a responsibility in that. Advertising plays an important part. We should have mandatory, clear labelling of alcohol content and the recommended limit on consumption on all containers. There is more information now that even small levels of alcohol can damage health.

Family planning clinics are an important health promotion and preventive medicine resource. The Government are wrong to allow hard-pressed, cash-starved, district health authorities throughout the country to cut those clinics because they are desperate to reach the end of the financial year without going over budget.

Research recently undertaken in Warwickshire showed that 45 per cent. of those presenting themselves for abortions had not used any form of contraception. In the light of that appalling figure, a strategy has been developed in that area with the aim of reducing the number of abortions by a third by the end of the century.

Family planning clinics and sex education are important in the prevention of unwanted pregnancies and it is wrong to reduce such services in the face of a possible epidemic of a sexually transmitted disease. Family planning clinics are a good base from which to conduct health and sex education and to provide people with information about sexually transmitted diseases such as AIDS.

There are about 180,000 abortions in Britain every year. If nearly half of those involve people who have not used contraception, it is clear that a major objective of the Government should be to reduce the number of people not using contraception.

Giving evidence to the Select Committee, the Secretary of State made an astonishing remark. He seemed to think that family planning had no relationship to contraception and that contraception had no relationship to unwanted pregnancies. He seemed to think that, in any event, none of that had anything to do with him.

It is difficult to have a sensible strategy to promote good health and prevent ill health when financial spending restraints are placed on the national health service in such a way that the service cannot improve in the way it should. People who are diagnosed as needing heart surgery must wait for that surgery and they become more ill all the time they are waiting. People requiring hip replacements are having to wait, and they suffer immobility and further disability while waiting for their operations.

The same is true of cuts in provisions for the menopause clinic in my constituency at King's College hospital. Menopause, pre-menstrual tension and post-natal depression services all have the aim of preventing situations from deteriorating. It is a false economy to cut their financing. A doctor recently told me, "Unless we can help women suffering the effects of the menopause, many of them will end up as in-patients across the road at the Maudsley." I am sure that the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) will have more to say about that.

My hon. Friend the Member for Preston was right to talk about the importance of our commitment to abolish the charges for eye tests and teeth checks. Such checks are major preventive measures against glaucoma, diabetes, brain tumours and many other ailments. The hon. Member for Twickenham seems to appreciate that, if the price of a packet of fags goes up, fewer people will smoke. Yet he seems to think that, if a charge is slapped on eye tests and teeth checks, people will continue to go to the optician and the dentist. That does not make sense.

Does the Minister share my concern about the mushrooming of bogus advertisements for slimming aids, which clearly are not aids for slimming? Numerous magazine and newspaper advertisements urge people to spend their money on such projects, which would either not have any effect or, if they did, would harm people.

Likewise there are a growing number of advertisements for cosmetic surgery. We are constantly told, "Get your nose done," "Get your breasts fixed," "Have a slice taken off your thighs," and "Have a face lift." We do not want to go down the path that they have trodden in the United States, where one sees increasing numbers of elderly women with faces like a baby's skin, stretched thin. The Government should take a view on such matters. It is obscene.

The path that people are encouraged to take—cosmetic surgery for no good reason so that doctors in private clinics can make a fat profit—is wrong. I do not say that there is not a place for cosmetic surgery under the NHS. There are important uses for such surgery, but at present it is turning into a racket, and I promised to say that one need not have a face lift to look young. Look at the hon. Member for Billericay.

I should like the Minister to comment on the adverts about hair loss. There are increasing numbers of adverts encouraging people to spend money on hair transplants that will no doubt mutilate their scalps without making them look as though they have thick hair. Other adverts encourage people to spend money on potions that will allegedly thicken the hair shaft. There are also bogus adverts inviting people to spend money to deal with memory loss. There are many quasi-medical claims in those adverts. If they are to have a serious and scientific approach to educating people about health and what effects their bodies, the Government should take a stance on such adverts and do something about them because they are becoming a scandal and a rip-off.

The Government must also ensure that there are adequate resources for research. We are able to have a cancer screening service because the research has been done, so that we know how to detect the early signs of cancer and prevent it. We have made major breakthroughs in a number of cancers such as Huntington's disease and childhood leukaemia, but we still need more research to prevent ill health caused by cancer. We need an integrated, comprehensive, well-resourced health service, with local government working in partnership with health authorities, partnerships between unions and management, the Government acting to prevent environmental pollution, and above all, a determination to end the poverty that is the cause of so much ill health.

1.26 pm

The Minister for Health (Mrs. Virginia Bottomley): I shall not follow the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) by ranting about the shortcomings of the private sector and what basically sounded like the need for a national plan. I thought that even her party had abandoned the idea of such a salvation from the difficulties that we faced some years ago. I strongly support the sentiments expressed by many hon. Members who paid a most warm and fulsome tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) for his motion and the manner in which he delivered it. I echo the words of my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young), who paid a tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst for his non-sermonising Jimmy Young style. That was an excellent description of the way in which my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst presented the motion and drew together its main strands.

I shall seek to describe the steps that the Government are taking and the reforms that are already under way in the health service, which for the first time will, we hope, achieve a health service rather than a disease service. It is a recognition of the emphasis that we put on health promotion that a major, central section of the leaflet that we distributed to every household in the country relates to health promotion matters such as looking after the heart and the importance of healthy eating. I must tell my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) that I fear that it does not cover lobsters, shellfish or eels, but it covers smoking, alcohol and other matters of great concern. It explains in a clear and direct manner how the new reforms will lead to enhanced and better care for our people.

It is well known that health promotion has had a long history. The bible describes dietary laws to prevent disease and contains detailed passages on the control of leprosy. In the middle ages, communities took steps to avoid the plague. Quarantine later helped to control the spread of diseases such as cholera. Modern health promotion stems from the major sanitary revolution of the previous century. I suspect that plumbers, rather than pharmacists or physicians, had the largest part to play in the improvement of health standards of our and other nations.

Sound engineering, the separation of sewage and clean water revolutionised health care and reduced mortality from water-borne diseases such as typhoid and cholera.

The hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) referred to housing. The revolutionary concept of having a sink inside the house led to a marked decline in food-borne killing diseases such as infantile diarrhoea. The gradual reduction in overcrowding reduced the airborne infections such as streptococcal disease, rheumatic fever and tuberculosis.

The second era, of medical intervention, dramatically increased people's opportunities of surgical and medical treatment. I refer to the remarkable development of antibiotics and then to the era of vaccination and immunisation, of which more in a moment. The result has been that polio, diphtheria and many of the killer diseases of childhood of the past are scarcely seen in our country any more.

The new challenge is to combat the diseases in which personal responsibility and individual action can play a major part. Heart diseases, strokes and cancers, the great modern killing diseases, are the areas on which so much of our debate today has centred. We know only too well that the key risk factors in strokes overlap with those for coronary heart disease—high blood pressure and cigarette smoking; we know less of the causes of cancer, but cigarette smoking is certainly the cause of 30 per cent. of all cancers in this country. My hon. Friend the Member for Acton spoke about the influence of smoking on other chest diseases, too.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst and others mentioned how the developments in the health service are for the first time placing responsibility on district health authorities for analysing and assessing the health needs of their populations. The Acheson report on public health made a major contribution to the way in which we analyse and study public health, as has the appointment of a director of public health in each district health authority with a crucial part to play in carrying forward the district health board's responsibilities to provide for health needs and to draw up contracts. Let no one underestimate the significance of the new and enhanced nature of the role of the district health authority or of the prominence that will inevitably be given to public health matters and the prevention of disease by analysing the needs of the local community and purchasing services to meet those needs.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst also mentioned the changed nature of the general practitioner's contract. There, too, there has been a marked shift towards recognising the importance of health promotion. I pay tribute to the Royal College of General Practitioners which, in its policy statement in response to our Green Paper "An Agenda for Discussion", said that many of the problems brought by patients to doctors are best understood by the doctors who know the patients as people, who understand their fears and feelings and who know the problems in their daily lives.

More and more the principle of healthy living and much of the management of chronic disease depends on people making changes in the way that they eat, drink and smoke. Personal preventive medicine is now a major feature of the modern health service, and it is logical for people to be offered preventive services in the same place and by the same team as offers them treatment services. Fusing prevention and treatment into comprehensive clinical care is an exciting development in modern practice.

As the House will know, we decided to make health promotion an explicit part of the GPs' new contract. I was interested in the remarks by the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile); his role on the General Medical Council, like that of my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst, is an important new development. The hon. and learned Gentleman spoke about the collegiate ethos of the Bar and about how that could apply in general practice, thereby registering a point that was also picked up by my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot). So often those who cannot gain access to single-handed practitioners might make excessive use of a casualty department.

Our reforms in the recent National Health Service and Community Care Act mean that doctors who choose to become fund holders can invest in their own practices. They can develop services, provide anti-smoking clinics and diet-exercise clinics, and they can make sure that health promotion becomes the key to their work. There will be extra help for the over-75s, who will be offered an assessment of their medical needs. There will be a requirement regularly to assess both current and new patients on doctors' lists.

We are already seeing in practice the effects of that important new work. The general practitioner service—the family practitioner service—is the gatekeeper to the national health service: it is where most people go first when they are worried about their health. It is essential that the key messages from the debate should be echoed by the general practitioners, and by the new groups of practice staff who have been able to join general practice thanks to the investment that the Government have made.

Throughout the health service all members of staff—doctors, for instance, and the health visitors to whom the hon. Member for Preston paid especial tribute—have a role to play. We have seen a dramatic increase in the number of health education officers, from about 200 in the mid 1970s to nearly 700 now. Their job is to ensure co-operation, and to ensure that the messages that are spread from the centre—from the Health Education Authority and others—are properly disseminated.

I should like to refer particularly to the appointment of Professor Michael Peckham as the new director of research and development for the national health service. I think that he will be able to inform and enlighten the service from the top to ensure that the latest research is properly evaluated, and that we draw on those lessons in carrying out our health promotion campaigns.

The major arm of Government, in health promotion and disease prevention, is the Health Education Authority. Since it was established as a special health authority, it has had a substantial increase in funding, and its work in carrying out health promotion is a force for good. Its recent strategic plan for the first half of this decade identifies seven key programmes as priorities for the next five years: HIV and AIDS prevention, and sexual health; "Look After Your Heart"; cancer education; smoking education; alcohol education; nutrition education; and family and child health. All those issues have been raised by hon. Members in the debate.

The plan identified key settings in which the programmes should operate—primary health care, schools and colleges and youth settings. I think that all of us would agree about the importance of education at school in encouraging health promotion. Health Education is a cross-curricular theme in schools. The chief medical officer has recently had discussions with the chairman of the National curriculum Council to discuss how that can be carried out further. If people can understand the importance of healthy living, of exercise and of avoiding smoking at an early age, it sets a good pattern for life.

The strategic plan for the Health Education Authority also identified the special needs of women and members of the ethnic minorities. We want good health to be available to all groups in our community. The other day I went with my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, North-West (Mr. Malins)—my Parliamentary Private Secretary—to his constituency to meet a group from the Commission for Racial Equality, where we discussed what more could be done to ensure that the ethnic minorities were informed about, and had access to, high-quality health care and services.

Addressing the health needs of elderly people is of major importance, and Age Concern has carried out a considerable amount of work in that area. The Health Education Authority and my Department have been developing—in consultation with health professionals—the concept of a personal health record, which would be provided for GPs to issue to their patients. It is intended to organise a major consultation exercise to examine how those proposals can be implemented.

The idea of a personal health record is a powerful statement in itself. We have just taken through Parliament legislation concerned with access to medical records. It demonstrates a change in culture and attitudes that there is now an expectation that individuals should have their own personal health record. In the past, many felt that they were being denied access to vital information about their own health. That is a message about individual involvement and responsibility.

Many hon. Members spoke about coronary heart disease, prevention of which has to be a high priority for us all. In April 1987, the Department and the Health Education Authority launched a joint "Look After Your Heart" campaign, in response to concern about the high level of coronary heart disease. We know of the success of health education campaigns in other countries with initially far higher rates of death and disability from the disease. The original aim was to increase knowledge of the risk factors for coronary heart disease. In its first three years, the campaign enjoyed considerable success. Although there are other notable campaigns against coronary heart disease, we believe that ours is the first national campaign of its kind in the world. All Health Authorities have been involved in it. "Look After Your Heart" has sponsored more than 270 projects at a cost of over £500,000.

The involvement of the campaign with industry has been a great success. The hon. Member for Preston said that industry believes that it owns its employees body and soul. If that means that employers are increasingly aware of the contribution that they can make by promoting good health and passing on health education messages, that is a welcome development.

I know that this is an interest of my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) and there is no doubt that, in the "Look After Your Heart" campaign, an excellent example has been set. Some 300 major organisations, with around 3 million employees, are actively involved in the campaign, both in the public and private sectors, including large organisations such as ICI and smaller organisations, the TUC and most Government Departments.

The "Heartbeat Award Scheme", which is run in conjunction with local environmental health officers, encourages not only good standards of hygiene but health menus and no-smoking areas in all eating places from canteens to restaurants. Although it was launched nationally only two months ago, already 40 per cent. of local authorities are taking part. Many of the remarks by hon. Members today lead me to think that they will welcome that development and that they understand how vital it is that people should take steps to promote healthier eating and to discourage smoking.

I have had any number of invitations to take up the issue of smoking on aeroplanes with Ministers in the Department of Transport. It would be less than generous of me to fail to do so after the strength of the remarks made on that subject.

The "Look After Your Heart" campaign has also been working with the food industry and last year developed a "Less Fat Fortnight". This year, it will be mounting a month-long promotion called, "Food For the Heart". These are all ways in which a campaign that is determined to meet with success can draw together people from the public and private sectors and from Government Departments. It is vital that they work successfully together. The campaigners have worked continuously with the National Forum for Coronary Heart Disease Prevention and the coronary Prevention Group to inform and enlighten their work further.

In that context, I am pleased to announce that we are able to give further section 64 resources this year to the Chest, Heart and Stroke Association, which we shall be funding to the tune of £35,000 this year and £36,000 in each of the following years for the important work that it does in promoting nurse facilitators associated with doctors' practices, particularly in the north of England, to make sure that the lessons on heart disease are fully incorporated and understood.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst mentioned the recent report of the standing medical advisory committee on whether opportunistic cholesterol testing can make a cost-effective contribution to combating heart disease. Copies of the report are available in the Library and a consultation period is under way. I hope that my hon. Friend and others will contribute to those consultations.

Another subject that has been the source of a great deal of comment today is smoking. The effects of smoking are devastating, as my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst made clear. Each year, it kills more than 100,000 people and costs the NHS around £500 million. What it costs in forgone earnings, and in personal misery and bereavement can scarcely be accounted for in terms of money. The habit accounts for millions of days of absence from work. It is a staggering toll in both human misery and cost.

There can be little doubt that if cigarettes were introduced today, their production and sale would probably be banned, but the habit has a 400-year history of acceptance and approval and it is too firmly established for a ban to be imposed now. However, when new tobacco products are introduced in the United Kingdom, we can consider a ban. Indeed, at the end of last year we responded to the evidence that oral snuff products were linked with mouth cancer by banning their sale.

We can and do use the law to protect children. Tribute has been paid to the "Parents Against Tobacco" campaign and discussions are taking place on how further we can strengthen the law to ensure that young children do not gain access to cigarettes and tobacco products. It is not only a question of the law; it is a question of public perception and social accountability. The more that can be done to make the sale of tobacco products to children unacceptable and offensive, the better. That is certainly an area in which the good will of the campaign is important.

Smoking harms not only the smoker. As hon. Members said, there is a growing rejection of the effects of passive smoking. There is an increasing demand for smoke-free areas, both in public places and in the workplace. We welcome that change in public attitudes. I shall take up the suggestion of my hon. Friend the Member for Acton and ask the Health Education Authority to accept his invitation to draw up guidance on passive smoking for general distribution.

Another important plank in the Government's response to the grave health risk posed by tobacco has been to strengthen and refine the system of voluntary agreement with the industry. As hon. Members will know, recent developments in the European Community mean that there must be changes, and we are still considering the implications of some of the latest directives. We are all committed to ensuring that smoking is reduced, that there are proper controls over advertising, and that needless deaths are avoided at all costs.

Nutrition has also been a subject for debate today, and it has been a long-standing debate over recent months and years. I cannot furnish my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham with detailed replies on all the various products that he identified, such as eels, oysters, herring, kippers, salmon and so on. However, I can give him some good news. Next week the Department of Health, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Health Education Authority will jointly issue joint guidelines for a healthy diet. They are intended to be exactly what hon. Members wish—a clear statement of guidance about healthy eating and the importance of nutrition, to try to develop a sense of coherence and understanding in an area that is easily moved to emotion rather than common sense. "An apple a day keeps the doctor away" is an old maxim. The importance of diet for health cannot be understated.

I want to speak briefly about the importance of alcohol. I agree with the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery, who spoke about the effects of alcohol not only in terms of disease and illness, but in terms of crime, and especially domestic violence. I am closely associated with a Minister who is committed to the eradication of drinking and driving. He has been most successful in making people think through the dangers of drinking and driving. We could spread the message more widely.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Lord President currently chairs the ministerial group on alcohol misuse. In launching "National Drinkwise Day" this year, he said most aptly that alcohol can either be a good friend or a bad enemy. We all know of the many circumstances in which alcohol makes a very bad enemy.

My right hon. and learned Friend co-ordinates that group, which draws together Ministers from different Departments to ensure that policies are developed and initiatives planned in a co-ordinated way. A report describing the progress that has been made in combating alcohol misuse will be published early next year. When sensible drinking rules are breached, that poses a serious threat.

In our proposals announced this week for phasing in the implementation of community care, a commitment was made to introduce a specific grant for the treatment of those with drug and alcohol misuse problems, which demonstrates the seriousness with which we view alcoholism. Alcohol Concern provides an important service in that regard. The Government are funding it to the tune of £500,000 this year, but by 1992-93 that figure will rise to £2·5 million.

Little mention has been made of the dangers of drug misuse, but we are committed to ensuring not only that supplies from abroad are reduced but that enforcement is effective, that there are strong deterrents, and that improved rehabilitation treatment is available. Above all, we want education and prevention to be spread as widely as possible.

My hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham, the hon. Members for Preston and for Peckham and others, mentioned child health. We have seen a dramatic reduction in infant mortality, from 12·8 per 1,000 live births in 1979, to 8·4 in 1989. Perinatal mortality fell from 14·7 per 1,000 births in 1979 to 8·3 in 1989. The figures are now at an all-time low, and that achievement is a source of considerable pride. However, none of us is satisfied that we have gone as far as we can. We must encourage every group and community throughout the country to take every possible step to ensure that children benefit from all the advantages of modern health care.

Immunisation rates have also dramatically improved, from 85 per cent. to 89 per cent. between 1985 and 1990, provisionally, in respect of tetanus, diphtheria and polio. Immunisation against measles improved from 68 per cent. to 88 per cent. in just five years, and against whooping cough from 65 per cent. to 82 per cent. That is a remarkable and impressive achievement.

Our efforts will not stop there. Recently, we published a handbook, "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease", which has been sent to all doctors and health visitors. It reminds them of the continuing importance of the immunisation campaign. In September, we shall launch with the Health Education Authority a further publicity campaign, "Immunisation, the safest way to protect your child", which will carry forward that work. We have learnt the lessons of the past as to how easy it is to allow a campaign to become forgotten. The momentum must be kept up, and there is no better way of doing that than the commitment in the general practitioner contract to provide an incentive for GPs who go out of their way to ensure that the children on their lists are properly immunised. Again, we are seeing important and impressive results already, which will lead to further improvements in child health.

I take issue with the hon. Member for Peckham's remarks concerning maternity services, which have continued to show a considerable improvement. This week, I was pleased to speak at the annual conference of the Royal College of Midwives, when I emphasised that our maternity services provision is based, as it has been for the past 10 years, on the reports of the Maternity Services Advisory Committee, and that we recognise the importance of the continuity of the midwife's role and of a coherent and integrated service. Those are precisely the policies that we shall be pursuing. The process of contracting is being examined carefully in two areas—Maidstone and Lewisham. I have invited the Royal College of Midwives to discuss the effects on maternity services, to ensure that all the aspects about which it may have concerns are properly addressed.

To pay tribute to the midwives, only this week they launched a new video on "Rights and choice in maternity care" particularly intended to ensure that those from ethnic minorities receive the services and are aware of the importance of protecting their child as they approach childbirth and in the months afterwards. It was funded by the Department and is an excellent and professional video. It will be a force for good.

The hon. Member for Peckham mentioned breast feeding. We recognise the importance of breast feeding and have been involved in a joint initiative funding three voluntary groups. We are determined that the messages should be carried forward because, as the hon. Lady said, there is no doubt that breast feeding in the early stages can make an important impact on health, apart from the relationship that develops between the mother and child.

I should not be doing justice to the great programme of work that the Government have been undertaking if I did not refer to the important breast and cervical cancer screening programme. We are the first country in the Community to introduce a nationwide breast and cervical cancer screening programme based on inviting women by computerised call and recall. We have been setting the pace in terms of preventive health care for women.

There is no doubt that on the basis of the Forrest report on breast cancer screening and the inter-collegiate report on cervical cancer screening, early detection and intervention can mean that many lives will be saved. It is vital that throughout the country women should accept the invitation for a test and ensure that the family practitioner committee is aware of any change of address. They should ensure that in following up their invitation they encourage others to do the same. It is a waste of resources to have failed appointments but, my goodness, it may be a waste of years of a woman's life if she fails to take up the appointment. We know, sadly, that the vast majority of those who have died from cervical cancer have never been screened or have not been screened in the recent past. It is possible to save lives and to promote health.

Concern has been expressed by some about the availability of results. There has been a substantial increase in those going for cytology testing but I can assure the House that about 80 per cent. of results come through within the four weeks in which health authorities are asked to provide them. We are looking carefully at local authorities where there may be difficulties or delays.

This is an important programme, which is a force for good for women. It is backed up by the GP contract, where the incentive is such that we are going out of our way to encourage GPs to ensure that the women on their lists have taken advantage of screening. We have also asked the national co-ordinating network for the cervical screening programme to ensure that the lessons that are learnt in terms of the fast implementation of the programme are properly disseminated throughout the country.

Women are a particularly important group, not only in terms of the health issues that affect them, but in terms of their role so often as the communicators about the health service within their families. They are often the gatekeeper to the health service for their family. They are often responsible for their family's food habits and many of their social habits and the way in which they conduct their lives. It is right to make a special effort to inform and work with women's organisations to ensure that those messages are spread.

I regularly have meetings with a series of women's organisations to ensure that all those lessons are properly understood and that they take steps to inform their members. I have meetings with the National Council of Women for Great Britain, the British Federation of University Women, the Townswomen's Guilds, Women's Gas Federation, the Fawcett Society, the Business and Professional Women's Federation, the National Federation of Women's Institutes and the National Association of Women's Clubs. Not only are women so often the gatekeepers to the health service, setting the tone for their families, but the majority of health service workers are women, so they play a particularly important part.

I must briefly refer to a subject that has been strangely absent from our debate. More resources are spent on AIDS by the Health Education Authority than on anything else. It would be unacceptable for any Government to fail to recognise the great importance of that major modern threat to public health. For a disease for which there is no known cure, prevention and education—the theme of the motion before us—must be fundamental.

We are committed to a programme of prevention, to monitoring, surveillance and research and also to treatment, care and support. Dramatically and significantly, those in the groups most affected by AIDS seem to have been able to change their behaviour as a result of health education messages. It is easy for us to agree what the messages should be, but it is much harder to turn those messages into action in terms of diet, sexual behaviour, smoking or drug addiction.

We have launched a further publicity campaign about AIDS and HIV. It is important that we have introduced an anonymous screening programme and before long it will be possible to debate the subject on the basis of facts rather than fiction. Sometimes the debate on AIDS seems to suffer from too much heat and too little light. However, we continue to give AIDS a very high priority, working closely with the Health Education Authority.

I have not been able to respond to all the points that have been raised. If hon. Members feel that I have not covered their points, perhaps I can write to them. My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst asked about the progress that we are making on the European region of the World Health Organisation's "health for all by the year 2000 targets". We have been making good progress in several areas, particularly on cardiovascular disease and infant mortality. We are doing as well as any on accidents. The next formal response is due in 1993. However, those matters are carefully monitored by the Department's central health monitoring unit. I shall ensure that we look carefully to see whether there are any other ways in which the information can be provided before the next formal reporting date.

This has been an important debate, with many thoughful and considered contributions. I hope that I have left the House in no doubt that the Government take enormously seriously the challenge that confronts us. We believe that our proposals for reform in the national health service will ensure that health promotion and disease prevention are given the proper consideration that they deserve and that we will indeed well and truly have established a national health service.

Mr. Simon Coombs (Swindon): Since this debate started about four and a half hours ago, more than 100 of our fellow citizens have died of coronary heart disease. To put it another way, every day in this country a number equivalent to a Boeing 747 jumbo jet full of passengers die from that crippling disease.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on moving his motion and I thank him for the opportunity to debate this subject. This debate has ranged widely over the whole question of health promotion and illness prevention. I shall concentrate on one aspect—coronary heart disease. It is particularly appropriate to discuss this issue now, just after the third anniversay of the establishment of the Health Education Authority, the "Look after your heart" campaign, the publication of its five-year plan, "Beating heart disease in the 1990s" and the recent publication of the report on cholesterol testing by the Standing Medical Advisory Committee, which has been mentioned by several hon. Members.

Much has been said in the debate and both inside and outside the House on many occasions about the incidence of coronary heart disease, what causes it and where it is likely to be found in the United Kingdom. The four countries of the United Kingdom have an appalling record with this disease. Of the top six countries in terms of the incidence of coronary heart disease, four are Northern Ireland, Scotland, England and Wales. The other two are Finland and Czechoslovakia. Naturally, I welcome the progress that has been made in the past three years, but we started late on the journey and we have a lot of catching up to do.

I should like to give the House one or two pieces of information about the incidence of coronary heart disease in this country. In Scotland, for example, the Scottish Medical Journal says that people in social classes 3, 4 and 5—especially men—are "closely associated" with a high mortality rate. Male unemployment is also strongly associated with coronary heart disease death rates. A Whitehall study of civil servants showed that men in the lowest grades, including messengers, had three times the coronary heart disease mortality rate of men in the highest grades, the administrators. The Health Education Authority has said that a man's unemployment is a strong predictor of his subsequent risk of getting coronary heart disease and that unemployment is more significant than any other risk factor. Coronary heart disease is more prevalent among manual rather than professional social groups. A man in social class 5 has nearly three times the chances of dying prematurely from coronary heart disease than a man in social class 1.

However, it is only fair to say that coronary heart disease death rates are falling fast in the younger age groups. Since 1972 death rates from coronary heart disease in England and Wales in the 35 to 74 age group have fallen by 18 per cent. for men and 11 per cent. for women. That seems good, until one compares it with the decreases in other countries such as the United States and Australia, where the decreases are three or four times greater than those which I have just quoted. In the past 15 years, reductions in coronary heart disease mortality rates for women aged 35 to 44 have been nearly seven times greater than for women aged 55 to 64, and two and a half times greater than the rate for men. It is undoubtedly true that mortality rates are falling faster in the younger age groups than in the ones that I have quoted.

Much has been said inside and outside the House about the location of high rates of mortality from coronary heart disease and about the north versus the south. According to the figures, Scotland and Northern Ireland have high incidences, with the north-east, the north-west, Merseyside, Yorkshire, the Trent area and the west midlands all having high figures; but so it must be said have the east end of London, Plymouth and Cornwall. We should not talk about a north-south divide in coronary heart disease, nor should we say that simply because someone happens to be of a certain age and class, he is certain to contract the illness.

However, what has to be said—I echo the comments at the beginning of the debate by my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst—is that it is up to the individual to decide whether to have a healthy life style. There is no reason why people on a low income, for example, should not eat wisely. The food that is harmful to diet is often more expensive than that which is good for the diet, but it is rejected.

I support my hon. Friend the Minister in saying that in 1990 we are more likely to perish of a self-inflicted disease than from a contagious disease. That is a complete reversal of the situation 100 years ago. In 1890 we were likely to die of cholera, typhoid or another of the water or air-borne diseases. That it is not so today is a triumph for technology, engineering and, as my hon. Friend the Minister said, plumbers. Today our lives are literally in our own hands, not in those of others or of the environment.

It has already been said that we spend a relatively small amount of public resources on prevention of coronary heart disease. We spend about £10 million a year in England and Wales. Let us set that against the cost of treating coronary heart disease, which is £500 million a year. Another even more alarming statistic is that 40·5 million working days are lost in Britain as a result of the disease. That represents 11·6 per cent. of all the days of sickness. That lost production costs £1·8 billion a year. Yet we spend only £10 million encouraging people to avoid the habits which lead to coronary heart disease.

The Public Accounts Committee in its report last year, just 13 months ago, said:

> "We are concerned at the stark contrast between the levels of expenditure on the prevention and treatment of coronary heart disease. We conclude that our examination illustrates our predecessors' concerns about the Department's failure to evaluate the full potential for spending on prevention to save on treatment costs."

I ask my hon. Friend the Minister, what more we can do to counter that charge? I listened with interest to what she said, of course, and I recognise that more is being done, but we are not yet doing enough to counter coronary heart disease.

There are two main causes of the disease—diet and smoking. There is a third cause—alcohol—but in view of the time I shall restrict myself to a few remarks on the first two. The major factor in diet is an excess of fat in the diet of ordinary British men and women, particularly of saturated fats. We were told six years ago by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food that such consumption should not exceed 35 per cent. of total energy intake. But the figure remains above 40 per cent., despite all the best efforts of experts and politicians to advise people to reduce their intake of saturated fat.

There has been a slight improvement from saturated to unsaturated fat, but the total amount of fat in the diet is still far too high. It is true that people consume less butter, milk and red meat and have changed to semi-skimmed and skimmed milk. But when I hear people say, "Oh well, we cannot afford to eat the things that the experts tell us to eat", I look at the price of 250 grammes of butter. It is two and a half times the equivalent cost of 250 grammes of margarine. So it can be done.

Smoking accounts for approximately 20 per cent. of deaths from coronary heart disease in Britain. Those who have hypertension, are overweight or have high blood cholesterol are more likely to contract the disease than others. The risk is two and a half or three times greater for smokers than for non-smokers. In men under 45, 80 per cent. of heart attacks are due to smoking cigarettes.

It is even more appalling that schoolchildren aged between 11 and 15 are taking up smoking. In that age group 7 per cent. of boys and 9 per cent. of girls smoke regularly. There is tremendous public support for reducing the level of smoking. A recent survey showed that 82 per cent. of the population supported banning smoking completely in restaurants; 72 per cent. supported a ban in banks and post offices; and 70 per cent. supported a ban at work. Even 42 per cent. of the population said that they would support a complete ban on smoking in pubs. That is a substantial and remarkable figure. Seventy-four per cent. of hon. Members support bans on smoking on public transport, 63 per cent. support bans on smoking in school buildings and 60 per cent. support bans on smoking in shops. The will is there. We must translate it into action.

In 1987 "Look After Your Heart" produced a guide to healthy eating. It recommended the need to cut down on fat, sugar and salt and to eat more fibre-rich foods and plenty of fresh fruit and vegetables, to go easy on alcohol —a weak way of putting it—and to get plenty of variety in food. As my hon. Friend the Minister has already spoken, perhaps later she will let me know how many copies of the guide were produced and what happened to them. What monitoring was done to see whether they went to the people who needed to read them? Although a large proportion of people think about what they eat and try to eat healthily, a substantial proportion of them ignore advice and dismiss any suggestion as ludicrous. They are the ones who are at risk from this killing disease. Clearly, we must do far more to get the message across to those who, until now have been deaf to it or have refused to listen.

Unless we tell people the contents of food, it is unlikely that they can make the right choice of what they should eat. The Standing Medical Advisory Committee estimates that if every adult adopted its dietary recommendations, those needing clinical supervision due to elevated blood pressure would decrease by two thirds. Information on blood pressure and diet would influence public attitudes and behaviour, thereby influencing good manufacturers' approach to labelling.

Professor John Goodwin, the chairman of the National Forum for Coronary Heart Disease Prevention, recently said:

"To help achieve a healthy diet, we need compulsory food labelling so that people can put into practice the advice given in the healthy eating leaflets."

How much longer will we talk about food labelling? Surely the time has come for action. We are in the middle of yet another consultation period, this time involving all the European Community countries. We should be taking a lead in those talks. For the benefit of producers, manufacturers and, most important, consumers, we need to bring the talking to an end as quickly as possible and make it abundantly clear to the population exactly what they are eating so that those who wish to make the right decisions can make them in the full-knowledge of what they are buying.

This month the SMAC published its report on blood cholesterol levels. It states:

"An elevated level of blood cholesterol is one of the chief factors which lead to an increased risk of coronary heart disease. . .Some programmes of opportunistic blood cholesterol testing and treatment have the potential to make a cost-effective contribution to CHD prevention, whilst others are likely to perform less well."

We have some decisions to make following the consultation and I hope that we make the right ones. The committee suggests that doctors give priority to high-risk categories, such as those with high blood pressure, smokers, diabetics, people with a family history of CHD or hyperlipidaemia, and those who already have CHD, and in particular that high priority should be given to people with more than one of those symptoms. The committee states:

"If blood cholesterol testing and treatment programmes are to remain cost-effective the proportion of prescribed drugs must be kept to a minimum by careful dietary counselling."

I say amen to that. Let us not get into the position where GPs, faced with a patient who has a high level of blood cholesterol, simply prescribe pills to help get rid of it. This is crucial. We must not turn another group of people into pill pushers. The answer lies in the life style and the diet of the people, not in having people think, "I can eat, drink and smoke what I like because a magic pill will put it all right." Unless we get that right, the NHS will have another problem with its drugs bill.

To give an example of what it could cost, if the figures for people with high levels of cholesterol in their bloodstreams in this country are anything like the figures in the United States—the evidence suggests that, in all probability, the figures here are much higher than those in America—we could be talking about well over £1 billion a year for the drugs needed to bring blood cholesterol down to safe and acceptable levels. I cannot believe that such expenditure is the answer to the problem that undoubtedly lies ahead.

The opportunity to do the testing of cholesterol levels on GPs' patients must be grasped. We must ensure that GPs have the training to be able to cope with those who come to them presenting high levels of blood cholesterol so that they can give the right advice about the diet and life style necessary to bring down cholesterol levels.

There is no doubt that physical activity and exercise can help to reduce obesity, blood cholesteral and blood pressure. Again, men and women in professional groups are more likely to go in for physical activity in their leisure time than are men and women in unskilled manual groups. So the people who are eating the wrong foods are likely to be doing nothing about it in terms of taking exercise.

In socio-economic groups A and B, 15 per cent. said in a recent survey that they had taken no exercise the previous week, compared with 35 per cent. in group E, who similarly said that they had taken no exercise. Nearly twice as many people in socio-economic groups A and B went running or jogging than those in C2, D and E groups.

Younger people said that they exercised to feel fitter. Older people said that they exercised for health reasons. In either case, it was predominately the people who were already eating more sensibly who were taking more exercise, rather than those who were taking risks with their diets or life styles.

We must also consider the younger section of the population, those at school eating school meals. The national forum for CHD prevention has demanded national nutritional standards, and I support its call. School meals account for a third of children's energy intake, and 45 per cent. of that comes from fat, well above the levels recommended by the experts to whom we turn for advice.

Two years ago the Government introduced the FEAST —fun eating at school today—campaign, which was designed to promote healthy eating and attract as many pupils as possible to eat healthy, nutritious school meals.

The problem with a debate such as this—we are grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst for initiating it—is that it is answered by a Health Minister, and we are grateful for her presence. But we see no sign of Ministers from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food or from the Department of Education and Science, both of which have a key role in the promotion of healthy living. I hope that that message will be passed to those Departments, although I welcome on the Front Bench my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Department; the Home Office is always anxious to see that we are looked after in every possible way.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. John Patten): I am obliged to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Coombs: It is essential to check what youngsters at school are eating and to make sure that they do not eat the wrong foods, and I hope that the message that was given to me last year by the former Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South-West (Mr. Butcher)—that the Government were anxious to see local authorities taking up the chance to participate in the FEAST campaign—means that that campaign continues and has the Government's support.

With regard to home economics and health education, it is crucial that the new national curriculum should take into account the need to teach children how to look after themselves when they grow older and have responsibility for themselves and their children. Having looked at the national curriculum guidelines, I am not entirely satisfied that the emphasis is sufficiently clearly placed on the need for healthy eating and cooking with unsaturated fats. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to pass on the message to the Department of Education and Science about the need for action on that.

I congratulate the Government on what they have achieved so far. I hope that nothing that I have said in the past 20 minutes or so gives the impression that I do not welcome the progress that has been made. I believe, in concert with large numbers of people outside the House, that we still have a great deal to do to beat coronary heart disease. Other countries have tackled the problem and produced major reductions in the number of people suffering from CHD.

Last year, the Public Accounts Committee said:

"We are also concerned at the varying levels of local commitment to the heart disease prevention programme in England, and by the slowness of the Department of Health in obtaining essential monetary information from health authorities."

We must continue to monitor the work of local health authorities in this matter because some of them are doing a great deal more than others. I pay tribute to my health authority in Swindon, which is well advanced. Not all the others have managed to achieve the same amount of progress in the past three years.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Coombs: I shall stop in a moment, if my hon. Friend will allow me.

I welcome the large number of projects related to looking after the heart that are being undertaken, particularly the Allied Dunbar national fitness survey. That company, which is located in my constituency, has taken an important lead.

In relation to food and its impact on health, I hope that the Houston initiative on the common agricultural policy of the European Community will be given every encouragement to succeed—principally and ideally through the end of the CAP. It is ludicrous that we are spending 800 million ecu on community support for the tobacco industry in Europe, when tobacco is a killer drug.

The CAP does not mention food or consumers, only farmers. We must remember that there are more consumers in every constituency in Europe than there are farmers. They are the people who will count in the future. We need to promote greater consumer confidence in food safety. I welcome the National Farmers Union suggestion of an independent food assessment and monitoring body; it deserves careful consideration. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to be unremitting in her efforts to secure more money from Treasury Ministers to enable the prevention of coronary heart disease to continue in the future, with an ever greater determination to beat that dreadful disease.

Mr. Sims: With the leave of the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I shall speak again.

I thank all those who have spoken in the debate. It has been time well spent. I appreciated the kind comments about my initiative in tabling the motion. I am sorry that our proceedings were interrupted by a statement over which we had no control, which has precluded two or three of my hon. Friends who were anxious to contribute to the debate from doing so. That is unfortunate, but that is how things happen in Parliament, and we have to take the rough with the smooth.

I hesitate to refer specifically to any of the speeches because all of them either picked up points that I had touched on or elaborated on others which simply due to lack of time, I had been unable to mention. I hope that the debate has brought home to hon. Members and the country the importance of preventive medicine and what we can do to promote our good health. I particularly appreciated the comprehensive reply by my hon. Friend the Minister, who covered a great deal of ground in a relatively short time. It will be interesting to hear whether she has more to tell us about the extraordinarily fishy speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel).

I am grateful to all hon. Members who have supported me in the debate and I hope that the message that I was endeavouring to put across—that individuals have responsibility for their own health, and that the Government have a responsibility to take measures to promote good health and disseminate information—has got through to the House and to the country. I am grateful for the opportunity to have had this debate.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Mr. Tony Banks: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am in no way challenging what you have said, but Opposition Members heard not a word when the title of the Protection of Badger Setts Bill was read out. In view of the earlier experiences of some hon. Members. I understand why others do not wish to be associated with objections to that Bill. Nevertheless, will the hon. Member who objected—if indeed it was an hon. Member—identify himself or herself? Will he or she at least have the courage to admit it, so that we can all see who it was?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the hon. Gentleman and the House know very well, we have been round this course many times before. The procedure is well established: one objection stops a Bill proceeding any further, and—whether it happens at 2.30 pm on a Friday, at 2.30 pm on a main sitting day or at 10 pm—no hon. Member need identify himself in such circumstances.

Let me also remind the House that an objection does not necessarily mean that the hon. Member concerned objects to the Bill; he may simply be objecting to the Bill going through a stage without any discussion or debate.

Mr. Banks: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I fully understand that, but there is some confusion on these occasions. People are objecting to Bills, ot trying to move Second Reading motions for Bills that have already been passed. There is a general climate of confusion.

All the hon. Members who were in the Chamber at the beginning of the process through which we have just gone are still present; none has admitted to objecting to the Protection of Badger Setts Bill. It could well be, Sir, that you heard something that was not actually said. No one is admitting to having objected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We cannot pursue the matter any further. As I say, this is a well-trodden path.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am somewat surprised at the Opposition's concern. Opposition Members objected to three Bills that have received general consent in the House—the Road Traffic (Temporary Restrictions) Bill, whose Second Reading I moved, the Sexual Offences Bill and the Radioactive Materials (Road Transport) Bill. The Road Traffic (Temporary Provisions) Bill was objected to by the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) if a fit of pique because his Bill was objected to before.

Several hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have let hon. Members on both sides of the House get the matter off their chests and we must now move on.

Bangladeshi Communities

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Wood.]

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I am grateful——

Mr. Ken Livingstone (Brent, East): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is now cutting into the time for the Adjournment debate. I am sure that he does not want to do that.

Mr. Hughes: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I hope that we can be encouraged by the prospect that we might get further with this subject than we did with the ones set down for consideration earlier.

I am pleased to have secured at last an opportunity to debate the needs of the Bangladeshi community in Britain. I say that because, like other hon. Members, I have got this opportunity by lottery and one can apply often without success.

Mr. Jeremy Hanley (Richmond and Barnes): Could not the hon. Gentleman have persuaded his party to take one of the Supply Days that it is allocated to debate this matter?

Mr. Hughes: That is true. Had we more than about two days a year, we might have been able to find some time, but we have little time. My party has discussed the possibility of debating the matter, but the Government and the Labour party have far more opportunities than we do and have never used them to debate this subject.

Specifically, we could have debated this subject at any time since December 1986. I say that conscious that much of the work done by Committees does not get debated in the Chamber. But the Home Affairs Select Committee reported nearly four years ago on Bangladeshis in Britain. It investigated the Bangladeshi community, reported and made a series of recommendations because it believed, and this belief was confirmed by its report, that the Bangladeshi community is "considerably the most disadvantaged" of Britain's minority ethnic communities.

For example, the Committee found that Bangladeshis live in some of the worst accommodation of any community, and that 78 per cent. of 15-year-old Bengali speakers are not fluent in English. The Committee called that an "educational and social disaster". It also found that many Bangladeshis are unskilled and that the percentage of unskilled workers among Bangladeshis is much higher than in any other group and that many Bangladeshi women have a high incidence of depressive illnesses. It concluded that it is even unclear how many Bangladeshis live here.

Those concerns have led me to introduce this debate, so that we can consider the range of social provisions that we afford—or, sadly, too often do not afford—to people who come from Bangladesh to make their home here with us. They come from a country that is one of the most disadvantaged in the world in its own right, because of its geography and because it lacks natural resources.

The Government responded to the Select Committee report in July 1987. There was then a follow-up check by the Home Affairs Select Committee. I now challenge the Government on what has been done about the recommendations of the Select Committee.

[Mr. Hughes]

For me, and I am sure that I speak for other hon. Members, the Bangladeshi community is a welcome addition to the complexity of our society. The figures are unclear, but there are over 100,000, and perhaps approaching 150,000, of them. They are to be found mainly in a few cities and towns and there are more in Tower Hamlets than anywhere else. I therefore particularly welcome to our debate the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore), who is a former Secretary of State for the Environment and has shown a career-long concern in this community for which we are grateful.

Other large towns and cities have large numbers of Bangladeshis, too—Birmingham, Luton, Oldham, Bradford and, in London, Camden and my borough of Southwark. I know from my dealings with those in my community and elsewhere that they are a committed, industrious and persuasive people in terms of what they want to contribute. I had that confirmed by the privilege that I had last year of visiting Bangladesh for the first time. I was lucky to go with three of my Liberal Democrat colleagues from Southwark—Councillor Anna McGettigan, Martin Downs and Paul Hobbs. We went for almost a fortnight and had a fascinating and informative time. I had always taken the view that I could not properly represent Bangladeshi and Bengali-speaking people without visiting the country from where they came, and I am very glad to have done that.

Unfortunately, there is little time available, so I shall highlight the matters of greatest concern. I begin with housing. The Select Committee rightly drew attention to housing issues which are still the most immediate concern. The dual problem is overcrowding, coupled in many instances with the fact that the housing stock is poor. Homelessness has affected Bangladeshis more than any other ethnic group in the community. The report says that 67 per cent. of Bangladeshi households contains five or more members, compared with the national average of 10 per cent. There is no doubt that there is a tradition of difficulty in obtaining equal treatment. The Commission for Racial Equality and many local authorities have accepted that there is often an inherent disadvantage in the meeting of Bangladeshi housing needs because of the nature of the stock and because of the way the people are dealt with as a result of the lack of linguistic ability to put the case as well as others might. I shall single out one action that we must take to meet those needs. We must ensure that the test of the amount of housing that we provide is that which meets the needs of the people, not just the demands of the market economy. Above all, in the allocations of housing funds or approvals from the Department of the Environment budget, whether directly to and through local authorities or via the Housing Corporation, we must specifically provide more housing for larger families. Without that, Bangladeshi families will often remain grossly overcrowded or be unable to stay together. This week the Prime Minister made a key speech on the family. It is no good talking about rights of maintenance and divorce if social policy does not allow the families who wish to stay together to do so.

Education lies at the heart of many of the needs and problems currently affecting the Bangladeshi community —not just the young, but the middle-aged and older generations. As I said, the report shows that five years ago, 78 per cent. of 15-year-olds were not fluent in English. Another report, published by the Inner London education authority in its last days, showed the poor educational performance of Bangladeshi youngsters compared with those from other ethnic minorities. For example, Indian families, who have often come from East Africa, attain much better results. The problem has been exacerbated because the areas in which there are many Bangladeshi youngsters at school have been among those with the greatest teacher shortage.

There are certain actions that we could take to help. There should be more mother tongue teaching for the very young. All the evidence is that cognitive functions are improved if that is provided at an early age. Last year, I argued in Committee that rather than having only European languages as first choice foreign languages in the national curriculum, non-European languages should also be available as first choice languages. We need more English as a second language teaching provision for all ages. In particular, we must ensure that we meet the educational needs of the older communities, especially those who otherwise would be handicapped or house-bound because of their lack of skill in English.

Of course, all this is directly related to employment problems. About 62 to 65 per cent. of the Bangladeshi community who wish to work are unskilled, compared with 16 per cent. of the white community. That leads to disadvantage. We know that of all the ethnic groups, the Bangladeshis earn least. That is partly because of language and discrimination problems, because they do not have sufficient knowledge of the way the system works. It is all cumulative. We could alleviate the housing problems fairly quickly, but educational disadvantage causes a much longer-term problem. I want the Minister and other Departments to address several linked issues. Most people wanting to set up a small business in Tower Hamlets or Southwark, for example, must compete against a big developer and will be confronted by high land costs. Unless we as a society intervene to help, that will be impossible to overcome. Accommodation must be made available as well as skills provision.

Social services departments have a supportive role to play. Soon, there will be many elderly Bangladeshis to care for. We have an elderly population as a whole, and we are adapting our social provision accordingly, to allow them to participate in society. As an example, I can say that it took years to arrange in Southwark the handover of land for a community centre where, for example, women past working age can meet others who share their interests and aspirations. Only this week, I attended the opening of a Turkish centre in my borough which clearly offers a great advantage to that section of the community. We must do the same for Bangladeshis.

A sense of alienation and isolation gives rise to illness, particularly depressive conditions. We must ensure that people do not feel alienated from the health service and that they can find at the hospital or doctor's surgery someone to whom they can talk. This year, the London hospital introduced a language line so that members of the ethnic communities can communicate in their first language. That sort of practical help counteracts the feeling that barriers are being erected.

A high proportion of the Bangladeshi community are women. Women have enough problems in society anyway, but those from the ethnic minorities have particular difficulties. That is even more true of women from the black or Asian communities. They often carry the burden of an overcrowded home, a lack of suitable skills to allow them to join the work force, and language difficulties. Earlier this week, I mentioned to the Minister that I am encouraged to believe that the lessons learnt from our Overseas Development Administration in Bangladesh are being considered for translation into the development of policy in Britain. However, I should like to know what are the initiatives regarding women proposed by the committee that the Minister chairs, and what are the plans for increasing the opportunities available to women from Bangladeshi communities.

Bangladeshi young people represent our future as much as do white young people. They have an enormous contribution to make to the arts, sport, the academic world, and practical employment, yet often we write them off. That is not done intentionally but because there is insufficient provision to ensure that they succeed. Certain features of Government policy are intended to help. For example, there is a provision known to those in the trade as section 11 grants, made specifically to deal with the needs of the ethnic minority communities. However, I was disappointed to learn from a parliamentary answer that this year section 11 grants look likely to be reduced, for the first time, from £115 million to £110 million.

Mr. Hanley: That provision is not cash limited.

Mr. Hughes: Perhaps not, but it is not enough to say that such a reduction is justifiable, even if there are many other demands. I am not asking for something that is incapable of being answered, or suggesting that money is not being made available in other forms, but the Government's key mechanism for helping such people must not be cut.

Britain is coming to terms with the Bangladeshi community, as it has with others in the past. I recognise that some action has been taken. For example, the Home Office has entered into a commitment to reduce the height and chest measurement requirements for recruits entering the police and there are many agencies now serving that community. But I do not see sufficient changes to ensure no discrimination against Bangladeshis who are already in this country, let alone those who have still to arrive here.

I could have dealt with immigration or the problems of racial harassment and racial attacks because they are also important. However, I have concentrated on the general point so that Parliament has a springboard from which to jump to pressurise those in power to take more steps more quickly and to ensure that we do not ignore a community which, because of its economic and social status, currently depends more on others for help. I hope that after today's debate there will be increased awareness of our obligation to ensure that all these people, as part of our community, have the opportunities that we would wish for ourselves.

Mr. Peter Shore (Bethnal Green and Stepney): I congratulate the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on his successful initiative in bringing the important subject of the Bangladeshi community in the United Kingdom to the Floor of the House. I have the honour to represent the constituency of Bethnal Green and Stepney, which contains a substantial number of Bengali settlers. I am as conscious as anyone of the great problems that they face.

However, I do not think that the story is one of unrelieved gloom. When one looks at the enormous number of people who come from the entirely different environment of Sylhet in Bangladesh to live in the east end of London, the enormous adjustments that both they and the settled host community have made in accommodating each other reflect creditably upon all concerned. It is admirable to see people of Bengali origin occupy some of the seats on the local council as properly elected members. We all wish to see greater integration of the community in the future.

I want to deal with three important points. First, as the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey said, racial harassment is a major problem. There are more racial incidents and more violence due to racial causes in the borough of Tower Hamlets than anywhere else in England with the possible exception of Newham. That requires an energetic police presence as well as a continued stream of advice, warning and encouragement from everyone in public life so that there is a proper appreciation of the difficulties of both communities and so that the racial tension underlying attacks can be reduced.

Education is the second great problem. I have been to see the Minister and raised on the Floor of the House at least three times in the past 12 months the appalling problem of the 300 to 400 children of school age who are not receiving any education, let alone making up for the special difficulties and problems that a recent immigrant community is bound to face in the education system and with the English language. That problem must be dealt with. I urge the Minister to agree to the proposition that a timetable should be laid down for when we can expect every child in the Bangladeshi community and in Tower Hamlets to have the same right to education provision that is guaranteed to all our citizens.

Thirdly, our housing problem is appalling. It is difficult to describe and I shall not even attempt to do so. It is Dickensian. It is overcrowded and there are many homeless people, particularly Bangladeshi families. The housing stock in Tower Hamlets is in a pretty bad state of repair. The Select Committee report, which underlies much of what we have said in the debate, said about the effect of housing on race relations:

> "It is hard to imagine anything more damaging to racial harmony in Tower Hamlets than competition between different communities for increasingly scarce housing. It is not adequate for the Government to deplore racial hatred but to accept no responsibility in respect of situations which forment it. For these reasons, we recommend that Tower Hamlets' HIP allocation be significantly increased, to at least the extend needed to prevent further deterioration in housing conditions in the borough."

I regret that that recommendation has been ignored. The housing investment programme for Tower Hamlets in the past two years is just under 34 per cent. of what it was 10 years ago. That is a problem that Ministers can address urgently and I hope very much that the Minister will urge it on his colleagues.

2.59 pm

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. John Patten): It is always a pleasure to follow the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore), who has an unparalleled reputation for personal integrity both inside and outside the House and I know that he looks after the interests of his Bangladeshi constituents as carefully as he can and never plays politics with the race issue. In that regard, I listened with care to the moderate and moderately phrased way in which the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) spoke to the House. I found his tone characteristic of the way in which he normally speaks, but surprising when compared to a press release that he issued on Monday, in which he gave an entirely different account and flavour of what he would say this afternoon.

The press notice issued by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey was more political and, alarmingly, was inaccurate and might cause some distress to the Chair. I shall place a copy of the document in the Library so that hon. Members may read it. The press release states that the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey

"is to force a Commons debate on 'The needs of the Bangladeshi communities in Britain.'"

I had always thought that Adjournment debates are raised somewhat differently and are not forced upon the Chair. I have heard about muscular Christianity, but muscular liberalism is a contradiction in terms. The idea that the Liberal party could force anything on anyone, inside or outside the House, is ludicrous. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will take the earliest opportunity to write to Mr. Speaker and apologise for his doubtless inadvertent mistake in suggesting to the outside world that he had somehow heroically forced this debate.

I have also indulged in a little textual criticism of the hon. Gentleman's press notice, which was brought to my notice by my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) who I am happy to see is in the Chamber now. He has given distinguished service to the Select Committee on Home Affairs and has travelled to Bangladesh on an important fact-finding mission. I believe that he was surprised at the tone of the speech made by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey and his references to the Home Affairs Select Committee report and the Government's attitude to it. My feeling of unease was reinforced when I opened my mail and discovered a letter from the Chairman of the Home Affairs Select Committee, my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler), who cannot be present today.

My hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North is a most distinguished Chairman of a distinguished Committee and he has given me his authority to quote his letter. I shall place a copy of my hon. Friend's letter in the Library. In his letter, my hon. Friend refers to the press notice and then states:

"I am afraid this"— and "this" refers to the press notice—

"does not reflect the truth and the most generous interpretation I can place upon these remarks is that Mr. Hughes is not familiar with the work done."

My hon. Friend draws my attention in his letter to various reports from the Home Affairs Select Committee and states:

"In each of these reports, my Committee dealt in detail with the needs of the Bangladeshi community, and following the publication of these reports, the Home Office replied setting out in detail what was being done and the achievements made. In particular, I would draw attention to"— and he then refers to several responses from the Home Office and continues:

"as well as statements made by ACPO and the Metropolitan Police Commissioner.

I am concerned that the interests of race relations may be harmed by selected statements which do not represent the truth concerning these issues."

It is important that the House and in particular the Bangladeshi community is made aware as widely as possible of the views of the Chairman of the Home Affairs Select Committee.

I want now to consider the welfare of the Bangladeshi community, which I have got to know quite well over the past three years particularly, interestingly enough, in Tower Hamlets—the constituency of the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney. He knows that I have made a number of visits there recently.

Any member of the Bangladeshi community would resent the implication that Bangladeshis are making no contribution to British life. I was delighted to hear the right hon. Gentleman refer to the considerable contribution that that community is making to British life and to local government, and to the fact that Bangladeshis do not simply present a problem that needs to be solved. When taking about delicate issues, it is important that we balance the problems—and the right hon. Gentleman certainly pointed out some problems—against the successes and contributions of the Bangladeshi community. I pay due tribute to their successes.

The Government accept that, despite its capacity for self-help, to which I have just referred, and some individual successes, the Bangladeshi community is among the more disadvantaged of the ethnic minority communities in this country. I, personally accept that also. The Bangladeshi community suffers especially in those areas where the Bangladeshi population is relatively small, sometimes located next to members of other Asian groups. We must all make a substantial effort to recognise that the needs of Bangladeshis in this country may be different from the needs of other Asian groups. They must be differentiated.

In defence of the problems that the Bangladeshi people face, they would be the first to recognise that they are among the newest arrivals to this country. Young groups of Bangladeshi men and women—and especially young women—who have arrived here as recently as 18 months ago, have been to see me at the Home Office to talk about the problems that they face. They recognise that it will take some time for them to establish themselves in the mainstream of British life. Family reunions mean that there has been a fairly regular flow of people needing time to adjust to this country, its culture and language.

If one looks to the success of slightly older-established Asian minority communities to see how they have managed to enter the mainstream of British life, that makes me full of hope for the future of the Bangladeshi communities, notwithstanding the problems of Tower Hamlets, and Southwark and Bermondsey. Their achievements have been widespread—in the professions and in business. I wish that the Hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey had mentioned the contribution made by the Bangladeshi community.

Mr. Hanley: Will my right hon. Friend also confirm that as a result of the report of the Select Committee on Home Affairs, the Metropolitan police are considering relaxing the height restrictions for entry to the police, so that the Bangali community can play a full part of the policing of London?

Mr. Patten: Yes, the Metropolitan police and police forces in other parts of the country wish to have as many recruits as possible from the Bangladeshi communities, as soon as possible. I am a great believer in community policing and in communities policing themselves, although not totally. Obviously, having more people from the Bangladeshi communities in our police forces can only help.

I want to see the Bangladeshi communities being able similarly to contribute to many other parts of British life. We hear quite a bit about Islam these days, and the Islamic values of many Bangladeshis, such as the commitment to family life and the belief in hard work and enterprise, correspond closely to some core elements of British society. I am sure that hon. Members of all parties would agree with that.

I refer now to some points in detail. I was asked why the findings of the Select Committee on Home Affairs have not been debated on the Floor of the House. We sit long and hard—longer than any other legislature anywhere else in the world, as you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will doubtless reflect from time to time late at night. It would be impracticable for the Government automatically to initiate debates on every Select Committee report that is produced. However, the Government published a comprehensive reply to the report in July 1987, and an update was published in 1988. Copies have been placed in the Library.

I was also asked about how many fellow Bangladeshi-British citizens we have. The current estimate, which is based on the 1986-88 surveys, is of a Bangladeshi population of about 108,000. For those who are statistically minded, that is about 0·2 per cent. of the total population of the United Kingdom. The 1991 census will solve the problem because it will contain a question that asks people to classify themselves, if they so wish, as Bangladeshis.

Housing is another important issue. I certainly do not think that all Bangaldeshis live in the worst housing in the country, but I acknowledge the considerable problems in inner London boroughs where the Asian community has chosen to live and where there are large concentrations of Bangladeshi families. The Department of the Environment, and my right hon. Friend—and namesake—the Secretary of State for the Environment, looks to the housing authorities to identify housing measures that will help Bangladeshis and other ethnic minorities and asks them to include provision to address such problems in their bids to the Department.

I fear that time is probably about to run out, Mr. Deputy Speaker, so I seek the permission of the House to write to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey and so deal with all the points that I have been unable to cover in the debate.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at nine minutes past Three o'clock.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Attorney-General what progress has been made by the Lord Chancellor's Department towards the implementation of the Children Act 1989.

The Attorney-General: The Children Act 1989 represents a major step towards the Government's objective of providing proper and rationalised arrangements for hearing and determining family proceedings. It brings together in one statute all the public and private law on the care and upbringing of children with the overriding purpose of promoting and safeguarding the child's welfare. It also establishes a new jurisdictional structure encompassing the magistrates court, county courts and the High Court in which children's cases will be heard at the appropriate level of tribunal by trained lay and professional judiciary, according to uniform rules and procedures.

An extensive programme of work is being undertaken by the Lord Chancellor's Department, in conjunction with the Home Office and the Department of Health, to ensure that the Act can be implemented in October 1991.

First, new rules of court, embodying the recommendations of an advisory committee on procedure chaired by Mrs. Justice Booth, will be drafted for consultation this autumn. There will also be public consultation on the criteria to be laid down by the Lord Chancellor for the allocation of cases between courts.

Secondly, it is intended that children's cases in the higher courts should be heard by judiciary who, by reason of their experience and training, are specialists in family work. An amendment will be tabled to the Courts and Legal Services Bill giving the Lord Chancellor the power to nominate such judiciary, with the concurrence of the president of the family division. The Judicial Studies Board has already embarked on a programme of 17 inter-disciplinary seminars throughout the country to explain the guiding principles of the Act to both lay and professional judiciary and these will be followed next year by more detailed training in the new procedures.

Thirdly, all courts with divorce jurisdiction will continue to deal with such cases, but work requiring the attention of a circuit judge will be concentrated on a network of family hearing centres. Some 52 of those courts will also act as centres for care cases transferred up from the magistrates courts.

Finally a central advisory committee will be established to advise on whether the guiding principles of the Act are being achieved and the new system is working effectively. Local groups will also be set up before October 1991 to ensure that the system is properly established at local level by the date of implementation and thereafter maintained.

ENVIRONMENT

Architects

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Southend, East of 18 June, Official Report, column 419, if he will make inquiries with the Governments of (a) Germany, (b) France and (c) Italy as to whether they have any records of the numbers of United Kingdom qualified architects who have been registered by the appropriate professional bodies in each of these countries as qualified to practice as architects.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The European Commission has recently invited all member states to provide statistics on the registration of migrant architects. It is expected that the responses will be available later this year.

Ferro Alloys (Emissions)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the arrangements to monitor air emissions from the Ferro Alloys chimney stack in Glossop, and of air emissions from the stack in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Trippier: The darkness of the emissions is monitored continually by measuring transmitted light. Sulphur dioxide emissions are assessed by calculations based on the levels of sulphur fed into the plant. Tests made by an HMIP sampling team in December 1988 confirmed this correlation.

Information on sulphur dioxide calculations covering the period July 1989 to June 1990 is shown in the table.

Ferro Alloys and Metals Ltd—SO_2 Calculations July 1989—June 1990

Month	Total SO_2 (Tonnes)	Days Production	Average SO_2/Day (Tonnes)
July 1989	248	31	8·0
August 1989	132	17	7·7
September 1989	252	30	8·4
October 1989	263	31	8·5
November 1989	248	30	8·3
December 1989	247	31	8·0
January 1990	242	31	7·8
February 1990	242	28	8·6
March 1990	240	31	7·7
April 1990	235	30	7·8
May 1990	231	31	7·5
June 1990	212	30	7·1

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the sulphur dioxide emissions were required to be reduced following the decision by the Secretary of State for the Environment to uphold the appeal to extend the planning permission for the Ferro Alloys chimney stack in Glossop; and if the process will be covered by IPC.

Mr. Trippier: The sulphur dioxide emissions were required to be reduced to a rate not exceeding 113 kg/hour by 31 August 1992, a reduction of 70 per cent. on previous emission rates.

The process will be covered by IPC.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information held by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution or his Department concerning (a) emissions from the Ferro Alloys chimney stack in Glossop, and (b) other producers of sulphur dioxide in the area, has been exchanged with the Peak Park planning board.

Mr. Trippier: Glossop is within the High Peak district council area and not the Peak Park planning board, and there has been no exchange of information with the latter.

The Ferro Alloys chimney stack is the only registered works within the Glossop area producing sulphur dioxide.

Pollution Inspectorate

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give full details of all contracts awarded in the last year by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to private consultants, university departments and other bodies, and include the value of each contract, the research/analysis to be undertaken and the duration of the contract.

Mr. Trippier: The research contracts listed in the table were commissioned by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution during the year ending 30 June 1990.

In addition, a number of short-term consultancy contracts were awarded during the same period by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average time taken in 1989-90 by each regional office of the Department of the Environment to process completed applications from the private sector for city grant.

Mr. Moynihan: Although city grant applications are initially submitted through the Department's regional offices, they are considered by the appraisal team which is based in London. The average time to decide applications made in 1989-90 was 13 weeks.

Single Homelessness

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those places which have obtained approval and agreement following his consultations under his plan to tackle single homelessness;

(2) if he will list those (a) Church organisations and (b) other organisations he consulted when drawing up his plans to tackle single homelessness.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We had informal preliminary discussions with a number of voluntary and church groups. My announcement stressed the importance of co-operation with voluntary groups, housing associations and local authorities in developing our package of measures. We are now taking forward these consultations urgently.

Air Emissions, Sellafield

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give full details of the arrangements for monitoring air emissions of radioactive substances at Sellafield.

Mr. Trippier: Emissions of radioactive gases from the main discharge points are monitored continually; emissions from approved places other than those monitored points are estimated from air concentration data obtained at the site boundary.

Planning Applications

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the calling-in procedures over planning applications, so as to give greater protection to the general public interest.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has no plans to modify the Government's policy on calling in planning applications for his decision. That policy was set out by my right hon. Friend the Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) on 5 May 1987. I am satisfied that the procedures for operating that policy generally work well, and I have no present plans to review them.

Orlit Housing, Ealing

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been paid and when the money was paid to Ealing council in respect of defective Orlit housing relating to (a) owner-occupiers and (b) council tenants in the Ferrymead avenue area of Greenford; if he expects to make further payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The following payments have been made to Ealing London borough council in respect of 11 Orlit dwellings under the housing defects legislation:

These payments represent the notional loan charges on 75 per cent. of the difference between the repurchase price and the defective market value of the dwellings, and will be payable for a period of 20 years.

The market value of properties repurchased is included in the calculation of the authority's entitlement to main housing subsidy (to 1989-90) and to housing revenue account subsidy (HRAS) from 1990-91. The costs incurred by the authority in maintaining and repairing its housing stock are similarly included in those calculations.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each urban development corporation in 1989-90 the number of sites sold to private developers which were (a) smaller than an acre, (b) between 1 and 5 acres in size, (c) between 5 and 10 acres in size and (d) larger than 10 acres.

Mr. Moynihan: The table gives the information requested.

Land sold to private developers in 1989/90 by size of site

Urban development corporation	Number of sites smaller than 1 acre	Number of sites between 1 and 5 acres	Number of sites between 5 and 10 acres	Number of sites larger than 10 acres

Canals

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail the mechanism of accountability to him or his Department for decisions made by British Waterways about the management and operation of canals in its remit.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The British Waterways Board is a nationalised industry which the Department sponsors. The board acts in accordance with broad policy objectives agreed with Government, but decisions about day-to-day waterway management are entirely the board's responsibility.

Weston Shore (Pollution)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he intends to make to the legal proceedings opened by the European Commission in respect of the pollution of the waters off Weston Shore in Southampton Water; and what action he intends to initiate to ensure that these waters meet European Community standards.

Mr. Trippier: By convention legal proceedings of this kind are not conducted in public. However, it is the Government's intention to respond firmly to the complaint. We are at present consulting the National Rivers Authority and Southern Water Services Ltd. to confirm the relevant facts.

Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the membership of the public interest panel of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; and what public interest groups are represented on the public interest panel.

Mr. Trippier: Attendance at the public interest panel of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee (RWMAC) is by invitation. The following organisations were invited to send representatives to the meeting of the panel in February 1990:

Environment Council
Caithness Against Nuclear Dumping
Institute of British Geographers
National Federation of Women's Institutes
Cumbrians Opposed to a Radioactive Environment
Institution of Environmental Health Officers
Society for Radiological Protection
Institution of Water and Environmental Management
Nuclear Free Zones—Scotland

Council for the Protection of Rural England
Council for the Protection of Rural Wales
Dounreay Action Group
Friends of the Earth Ltd.
Friends of the Earth—West Cumbria
Green Alliance
Highland Anti-Nuclear Group
Institute for European Environmental Policy

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what vacancies are current or forthcoming on the public interest panel of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; if meetings of the public interest panel are open to the public; and if there is funding available to facilitate public attendance at these meetings.

Mr. Trippier: The public interest panel has no fixed membership. The chairman invites representatives of environmental organisations to attend, according to the topics on the agenda. The meetings are not open to the public.

Global Warming

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what approximate calculations have been made of the relative importance of car and aircraft emissions in global warming.

Mr. Trippier: The total fuel consumption of road traffic compared with aircraft gives a good approximation to their relative importance in terms of global warming. World figures for 1986 show that aviation accounted for about 12 per cent. by weight of the combined consumption of motor fuel, jet fuel and aviation gasoline.

Housing, Exeter

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what amount he has given his consent for Exeter city council to spend this year on the building of houses from its general fund capital receipt.

Mr. Chope: Under the new system of local authority capital finance local authorities are free to use all their usable capital receipts for capital expenditure on any service and no consents are required.

House Prices

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state (a) the average percentage rises in house prices, by region, annually in the last 10 years and (b) the current average house price for each region.

Mr. Chope: Dwelling price indices showing the annual change in the prices of houses and flats bought with building society mortgages, and adjusted to take account of the mix of dwellings sold, for the years 1978 to 1988 are in the latest annual volume of "Housing and Construction Statistics—Great Britain" (Table 10.8), a copy of which is in the Library. The corresponding indices for 1989 and the average dwelling prices for the same year are as follows:

	Index 1985 = 100	Price[1] £s
North	170	37,374
Yorkshire and Humberside	194	41,817
East Midlands	207	49,421
East Anglia	221	64,610
Greater London	203	82,383
South East (excluding Greater London)	216	81,635
South West	219	67,004
West Midlands	219	49,815
North West	184	42,126
England	207	58,458
Wales	193	42,981
Scotland	144	35,394
Northern Ireland	124	30,280
United Kingdom	202	54,846

[1] These are simple average prices of dwellings purchased with building society mortgages, not adjusted for the mix of dwellings. Figures for earlier years are in table 10.11 of the publication referred to.

European Environment Agency

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the establishment of the European Environment Agency.

Mr. Trippier: The EC regulation establishing the agency was adopted by the Council of Ministers on 7 May 1990 but will not come into force until a decision has been taken by the Council on where it is to be located. The agency will not start its work until then.

Dilapidated Buildings

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from (a) Eastbourne borough council or (b) any other borough or district council that the powers conferred upon local authorities by section 79 of the Building Act 1984 are inadequate; what proposals he has to strengthen those powers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received no such representations. I am not aware of any general feeling that the powers available to local authorities under section 79 of the Building Act 1984 are inadequate and I have no proposals to strengthen those powers.

CITES

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 7 June, Official Report, column 689, if he will make a statement regarding his consideration of the World Wide Fund for Nature's request for a contribution towards the costs of the investigation and enforcement officer employed by the CITES secretariat.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The World Wide Fund for Nature's request is still under consideration. I will write to the hon. Member when a decision has been reached.

Local Government Finance

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to take any action to help parish and town councils with the community charge bills because of the loss of income from the business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Parish and town councils have the same access to the income from business rates as do county and district councils. I see no need for action to change this position.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects those people who have a holiday caravan on a protected site within the meaning of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 to receive the benefits of the changes to the Local Government Finance Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 30 March at column 346.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), 27 June, Official Report, columns 258-59, whether the quarterly statistical survey referred to will be published, placed in the Library and sent to all individual right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Chope: I am willing to place an analysis of the returns from local authorities in the Library of the House, once sufficient returns have been received. We would also make the analysis available to the local authority associations, but I have no plans to send them to all individual right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he used in reaching his decision to vary from his original proposal the budget reductions required of (a) the London borough of Brent, (b) the London borough of Southwark and (c) the metropolitan borough of Wigan.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 5 July 1990]: My right hon. Friend's decisions on caps for the 17 authorities, including Brent, Southwark and Wigan, which did not accept the caps which he proposed for them and which put forward alternative amounts within the statutory 28-day period, represent in each case his view of what is achievable and appropriate in the light of all the circumstances of the individual authorities concerned, on the basis of all the information available to him.

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate of the additional borrowing requirement of local authorities in England and Wales arising as a direct result of late payment and non-payment of the community charge.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 July 1990]: No analysis is available of the separate effects of the many factors which influence the borrowing requirements of local authorities. The indications are that the vast majority of community charge payers are already making payments to their local authorities. However, the Government have paid 25 per cent. of authorities' revenue support grant in the first two months of the financial year to compensate them for any cashflow problems caused by the introduction of the new local government finance system.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the borough or district council element of each community charge in Essex in descending order from the highest to the lowest.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 5 July 1990]: The operation of the collection fund means that the community charge is not split between the councils providing services in each Essex district.

If all authorities had provided a standard level of services the community charge could have been set at £278 throughout Essex, before safety net adjustments. Each additional £1 per community charge payer that a district council raises above the amount needed to provide a standard level of service adds £1 to the community charge in its area. The effect of district councils' 1990-91 budget decisions on community charges in Essex is shown in the table.

	Effect on community charge £
Basildon	+154
Harlow	+113
Thurrock	+75
Brentwood	+73
Southend-on-Sea	+45
Castle Point	+38
Chelmsford	+36
Rochford	+31

	Effect on community charge £
Tendring	+25
Braintree	+16
Epping Forest	+15
Maldon	+5
Uttlesford	−3

Notes: The figures for each district show the level of demands on the collection fund minus the standard spending assessment, expressed as an amount per head of relevant population. The standard spending assessment covers services provided by both parish and district councils. For consistency, the effects shown above include parish as well as district council spending.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the future of the Property Services Agency office in Leeds.

Mr. Chope: PSA Services has a number of offices in Leeds, including a regional headquarters, design office, estates office and district works office.

PSA Services is reviewing all its organisation as part of its drive towards greater efficiency and in the light of future business needs.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the reasons for the delay in placing in the Library the letter from his officials to the National Rivers Authority referred to in his answer of 3 July, Official Report, column 504, until 5 July.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The letter was placed in the Library without undue delay and was sent direct to the hon. Member.

Acid House Parties

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations or guidelines his Department has initiated with local authorities concerning acid house parties.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government are supporting a private Member's Bill which would increase the penalties for infringement by party organisers of the licensing laws. The working party on my Department's review of noise has been looking into the problems posed by acid house parties. Subject to its recommendations, my Department with the help of the Home Office will be issuing guidance to local authorities.

Dolphins and Porpoises

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to protect dolphins and porpoises in British waters and internationally.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 5 July 1990]: All species of cetacean already receive protection through their listing in schedule 5 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. This means that it is an offence to kill, injure, take or sell any wild cetacean.

At the third North sea conference at the Hague, Ministers of states bordering the North sea signed a memorandum of understanding on small cetaceans. The agreement specifies a series of measures to improve our knowledge of the health and status of these species and threats to them and gives a commitment in principle to take appropriate regulatory action where it is clear that human activities are causing damage.

At the meeting of the International Whaling Commission now taking place in the Netherlands, the United Kingdom has fully supported the proposal by New Zealand to bring small whales, dolphins and porpoises within the remit of the commission.

Whales

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that investigations are carried out to establish the causes of death of whales washed up on the British coast.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 6 July 1990]: I am pleased to announce that the Department of the Environment is commissioning three new research projects which will focus primarily on dolphins and porpoises but will extend as appropriate to other species in the cetacean or whale group. The first project establishes a co-ordinator based at London Zoo to oversee a systematic collection of samples from strandings and to arrange post mortems on appropriate animals. This project will apply to English and Welsh coasts and separate arrangements are being made to establish a similar system in Scotland.

A second contract, co-ordinated by the sea mammal research unit of the Natural Environment Research Council and also involving the British museum of natural history will cover the cost of tissue analysis, particularly for contaminants. A third project, with the United Kingdom Mammal Society, will update and improve information from sightings surveys.

The Department of the Environment is contributing £180,000 to the cost of these projects with additional contributions from the Welsh Office, the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and the Welsh region of the National Rivers Authority.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on cases of toxic waste sites being in close proximity to underground water supplies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 6 July 1990]: This is a matter primarily for waste disposal authorities in carrying out their disposal licensing functions under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Prior to their assuming these responsibilities, the Department and Institute of Geological Sciences co-operated with local government and water authorities in 1973-74 on a desk survey of disposal sites which might pose risks to water. The survey results were published in 1975. More recently a list of the sites has been supplied to the National Rivers Authority to assist in its review of groundwater monitoring requirements.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the terms of reference given to Deloittes, in respect of the Crown Suppliers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Deloitte, Haskins and Sells—now known as Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte—was appointed to provide accountancy advice on the sale of the Crown Suppliers in May 1989. I have put the terms of reference for that work in the Library. In addition it has recently been given a commission based on the expansion of some of that work, but the terms of that commission are commercially confidential.

DELOITTE HASKINS AND SELLS

TERMS OF REFERENCE

1. Advice on taxation matters relating to the transfer of TCS
To advise on taxation issues which may require special attention in TCS legislation. To prepare long form reports on those activities of TCS indentified by the Secretary of State as being businesses to be privatised.
In addition to the long form reports, to provide abbreviated reports if required for publication in any documents related to the privatisation of TCS which are to be made available to prequalified potential purchasers. The abbreviated reports will include a reconciliation between the statutory accounts and the accounts of the businesses which are being sold.

3. Other matters
To attend as required various meetings leading up to an invitation to bid. Also as required to carry out further work associated with the invitation document(s), including consideration of any accounting matters which might arise in the course of the sale, and reviewing any financial information which is to be released, together with the issue of formal comfort letters.

Rural Areas (Planning)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to review the planning procedures for rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for the City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) on 27 June, Official Report, column 273.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent consultations he has held with the Council for the Protection of Rural England on planning issues in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Doncaster, North (Mr. Welsh) on 27 June 1990, Official Report, column 272.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those urban development corporations (a) which have elected members of the relevant local authorities on their boards and (b) which have on their boards elected members of the relevant local authorities nominated by those same local authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: The board of each English urban development corporation normally includes one or more elected members from the local authority, or authorities, in its area. These appointments are made only after consultation with the relevant local authorities. There are currently temporary vacancies for such members of the boards of Leeds, London Docklands and Sheffield development corporations.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Development Education

94. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of funding for development education in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: With schools as a main focus, most of the ODA's information budget is spent on development education, raising public awareness of the interdependence between developed and developing countries. So far in the current financial year over £300,000 of this budget has been committed to specific development education activities.

Guyana

95. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria his Department employs in deciding on the funding of aid projects in Guyana; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Our criteria are Guyana's priority needs and Britain's ability (along with other donors) to help meet these. We have not given financial aid in project form since the capital aid programme was suspended in 1984. The new capital aid programme (begun in 1989) is being used to finance essential imports in connection with Guyana's IMF and World Bank supported macroeconomic reform programme. Our technical co-operation is concentrated on the key areas of training in the United Kingdom and local training for both public administration and the private sector.

Population Growth

96. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution Her Majesty's Government make to international programmes aimed at slowing population growth.

Mrs. Chalker: We are major contributors to the three multilateral population programmes. We also support bilateral projects and programmes and research and teaching at United Kingdom institutions aimed at reducing population growth. Aid programme spending on activities directly related to population concerns has increased from £6·5 million in 1981 to £17·3 million in 1989. We intend to increase the level and quality of this assistance and help promote awareness of population issues within developing and developed countries.

106. Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department is taking to reduce the growth of the world's population; and whether he will make a statement.

113. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution is made through the overseas aid programmes to international efforts to slow population growth.

Mrs. Chalker: We are major contributors to the three multilateral population programmes. We also support bilateral projects and programmes and research and teaching at United Kingdom institutions aimed at reducing population growth. Aid programme spending on activities directly related to population concerns has increased from £6·5 million in 1981 to £17·3 million in 1989. We intend to increase the level and quality of this assistance and help promote awareness of population issues within developing and developed countries.

109. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made, and what action they propose to take, with regard to the United Nations report on estimated world population growth.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Newport West (Mr. Flynn) on 22 June at column 718.

Third World Debt

97. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives Her Majesty's Government will be proposing at the G7 summit in July to promote debt relief for developing countries.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government keep the debt strategy under continuous review, and we are hoping to discuss its achievements and prospects at the summit, with particular attention to the needs of the poorest debtors.

98. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the sufficiency for developing countries of the Toronto plan for the poorest indebted countries.

Mrs. Chalker: The impact of concessional rescheduling on the financing needs of the poorest countries is kept under close review; 17 countries have already benefited, and other creditor Governments have joined us in writing off old aid loans to the poorest.

Southern Africa

99. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the level of aid to the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference's programme by (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other donor countries.

Mrs. Chalker: United Kingdom pledges to the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference's programme total £70 million: information on pledges from other donors is not readily available. In 1988 net bilateral aid to the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference member states from DAC donor countries totalled $2,668·46 million (nearly £1,500 million) of which the United Kingdom provided $247·62 million (£139 million).

124. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Overseas Development Administration has to introduce new initiatives to help black people in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 19 March at column 431.

101. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's support to SADCC programmes.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 24 May at column 368.

128. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has recently had discussions with non-governmental organisations on the subject of aid for people in Southern Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 18 June at column 391.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current levels of each of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference countries' external bilateral debts to the United Kingdom broken down into concessional and non-concessional categories.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State on 28 November 1989 at column 200.

Ethiopia

100. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Ethiopia in respect of food supplies.

102. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent information he has in respect of the famine in Ethiopia.

103. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the famine situation in Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: The situation remains essentially as stated in my replies of 18 June at column 394 to the hon. Members for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) and Stockton, North (Mr. Cook), respectively. We have since been pleased to hear that both the Government and rebel sides have agreed to an early visit by United Nations personnel to assess the extent of damage to the port of Massawa and the prospects for reopening it to relief shipments. We await the outcome of the visit with great interest.

Cambodia

104. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has given further consideration to the idea of sending another British delegation to review the situation in Cambodia.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 18 June.

127. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the development needs of Cambodia.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 5 July. Britain is helping to meet the basic humanitarian needs of the people of Cambodia by supporting the projects of British NGOs under the ODA's joint funding scheme and by contributing to the programmes of international agencies.

114. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the refugee camps on the Thai-Cambodian border.

Mrs. Chalker: There are approximately 300,000 Cambodian displaced persons living in camps administered by the Cambodian resistance factions. The United Nations Border Relief Organisation (UNBRO), other international agencies and NGOs provide humanitarian assistance. In common with other members of the international donor community, the United Kingdom provides financial support for these humanitarian relief activities. Support is channelled through the various relief agencies and is aimed at providing food, water, shelter and medical services for the non-communist groups.

Environmentally Sustainable Development

105. Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the call in the OECD's development assistance committee 1989 report for a stronger concern for environmentally sustainable development.

Mrs. Chalker: I welcome and endorse the DAC chairman's comment on this point.

Namibia

107. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to help relieve Namibian debt incurred before its independence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 3 July.

115. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government are making in support of a substantial beef quota and least-developed country status for Namibia under the Lomé convention.

Mrs. Chalker: We favour generous terms of accession both as regards a beef quota and least-developed country status under the Lomé convention for Namibia. We expect to receive proposals from the Commission shortly.

Development Assistance

108. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of British official development assistance.

Mrs. Chalker: Net official development assistance in 1989 is provisionally estimated at £1,579 million, compared with £1,485 million in 1988.

Caribbean Bananas

110. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what position the Government will be taking towards the Caribbean banana producers when the European single market comes into effect in 1992.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Commission is currently considering the arrangements to apply to bananas post-1992, but has not yet come forward with proposals. We are encouraging the Commission and other member states to ensure that any new arrangements fulfil our commitments to Commonwealth Caribbean suppliers and that they take account of consumer interests, trade policy considerations and the competition and efficiency objectives of the single market initiative.

Environmental Projects

111. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support Her Majesty's Government are giving to proposals by President Mitterrand for a special global environmental facility to finance programmes to tackle environmental problems through the World Bank.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Cummings) on 14 May.

123. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any environmental projects or initiatives in the third world have been funded by money additional to the existing aid budget.

Mrs. Chalker: Britain's contribution of up to $15 million to the funding mechanism to help developing countries meet their obligations under the strengthened Montreal protocol will be separate from the aid budget to developing countries. It will form part of a new and separate item in the ODA's expenditure plans.

Hazardous Imports

112. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on efforts by the Overseas Development Administration to build technical expertise and institutional structures within developing countries for the regulation of hazardous imports.

Mrs. Chalker: The ODA has been involved in a number of projects designed to help developing countries to tackle a range of environmental issues associated with hazardous substances. For example in 1988 expert advice was provided to Nigeria on the status and disposal of a toxic waste dump in Bandel state. I am ready to consider providing further assistance of this kind if so requested by developing countries. To help developing countries to strengthen their capacity to deal with pollution and hazardous substances, amongst other environmental problems, the ODA funds training in the United Kingdom for developing country nationals, for example, in environmental education, environmental pollution control and industrial waste management.

Women (Adult Education)

116. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is given by the Overseas Development Administration to provide adult education for females.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes, we provide such support in a variety of ways: as component parts of ODA projects; through in-country training and training on courses in British institutions; through distance learning; and in joint ventures with non-governmental organisations and in our contribution to the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM).

Forestry Projects

117. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the cash limit for the 1990-91 aid programme has been increased in respect of the extra £100 million for forestry projects announced by the Prime Minister in November.

Mrs. Chalker: The planned aid budget for 1990-91 of £1,587 million set out in this year's Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm. 1002) was £75 million higher than the earlier planning figure for 1990-91 set out in Cmd. 602. This covers in part the increased expenditure arising from the Prime Minister's announcement in November 1989 that we aimed to commit a further £100 million on forestry projects over the next three years.

Global Warming

118. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how his Department is measuring the impact of Britain's bilateral aid programme on global warming; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. Hughes) on 18 June.

121. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives Her Majesty's Government will be proposing at the G7 summit in July to assist developing countries to adapt to global climate change and a rise in the sea level.

125. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives Her Majesty's Government will be proposing at the G7 summit in July to help developing countries implement policies to reduce the growth rate of carbon emissions.

Mrs. Chalker: The summit is an informal meeting between Heads of Government and I cannot predict in advance what will be discussed. However, it is likely that the issue of global warming and developing countries will be debated.

Pesticides

119. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Government are giving developing countries in their efforts to regulate imports of pesticides.

Mrs. Chalker: The ODA attaches great importance to the promotion of pesticide safety in developing countries and has carried out a wide range of activities aimed at strengthening the capacity of those countries to address pesticide safety issues. For example, last year we helped to fund a training workshop in the United Kingdom for government and parastatal organisations from developing countries on the FAO international code of conduct on the distribution and use of pesticides. I am writing to the hon. Member giving further examples of our activities.

India

120. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of British aid to India in the past 10 years has been spent in projects in the Punjab or Kashmir.

Mrs. Chalker: Statistics for the British aid programme are not collated for the regional distribution of aid within recipient countries.

However, assistance has been offered for projects in both states in response to requests from the Government of India. This includes an aid agreement for £17 million concluded in 1989 for the Uri hydroelectric power station in Kashmir and the offer of aid in connection with a coach factory in the Punjab, as well as technical co-operation projects.

Animal Conservation

122. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding support from Her Majesty's Government for animal conservation schemes.

Mrs. Chalker: We regularly receive such representations, from a wide variety of sources, ranging from interested members of the public to official requests for assistance from NGOs and overseas Governments. No central record of such representations is kept, but recently many have concerned support for elephant and rhino conservation in east Africa. We are already funding a number of such activities and are always ready to consider new requests for help.

Nicaragua

126. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what purposes the recent United Kingdom allocation of £600,000 to Nicaragua will be used.

Mrs. Chalker: The funds will be provided as grant in support of activities crucial to Nicaragua's economic recovery. Specific uses will be agreed with the Nicaraguan authorities shortly.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on what criteria have been used for providing the recently announced £600,000 aid package to Nicaragua.

Mrs. Chalker: We decided to provide this aid to assist the new, democratically elected government of Senora Chamorro in its efforts to revive the Nicaraguan economy.

South-East Asia

129. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's aid to Cambodia, Vietnam, Laos and Thailand.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government are supporting British NGO activities in both Cambodia and Vietnam. We are also funding humanitarian aid programmes administered by international agencies in Vietnam. We have no bilateral aid programme to Laos. In Thailand we have a technical co-operation programme of about £1·5 million per year, focused mainly on the provision of training awards and English language teaching. Financial aid is also available to Thailand under the aid and trade provision.

Aid Budget

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the relative trends in the British aid budget since 1979 and that of other G7 countries.

Mrs. Chalker: The level of net official development assistance since 1979 of the United Kingdom and other G7 countries is as follows:

Net official development assistance from G7 countries 1979—1989 (£ million)

Country	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989

El Salvador

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial assistance Her Majesty's Government have provided to the Government of El Salvador between 1984 and 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: Between 1984 and 1988 we provided bilaterally £1 million of financial aid, all for disaster relief; and £113,000 of technical co-operation. The provisional figures for 1989 are £140,000 (disaster relief) and £4,000 (technical co-operation). European Community aid commitments in 1984-89 totalled 45·79 million ecu; expenditure in 1984-88 was 8·3 million ecu; the United Kingdom share of this aid is about 20 per cent.

Chile

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have considered granting financial help towards the newly established solidarity and social investment fund in Chile, along with other European Governments.

Mrs. Chalker: We have a bilateral technical co-operation programme for Chile which we have recently decided to increase. We have given careful consideration to the Chilean Government's request for further bilateral assistance, but have had to conclude that we cannot help.

We also assist Chile through multilateral channels such as the World Bank and European Community action; in 1988 expenditure on Chile by the EC amounted to just under £1 million, of which the United Kingdom share is about 20 per cent.

Environmental Conference, Japan

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects it is proposed to discuss at the conference the Minister for Overseas Development is attending in Japan on the environment, in relation to Japanese treatment of the rain forest.

Mrs. Chalker: Development Ministers visiting Japan for the annual Tidewater meeting will discuss a wide range of current and development issues, including the environment.

Zambia

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what provisions Her Majesty's Government have made to cancel Zambia's aid debt.

Mrs. Chalker: As I told the House on 5 April at column 734, as part of our support for Zambia's present programme of structural adjustment and economic reform we have offered to reschedule all repayments, totalling some £12·85 million, of aid debt due from Zambia in the current (1990-91) United Kingdom financial year. These include accumulated arrears since Zambia ceased to service its aid loans in 1987. We hope to finalise the arrangements shortly.

Mozambique

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is considering making additional funds available for refugees and displaced people in Mozambique.

Mrs. Chalker: I announced in April a grant of £3·5 million and 10,000 tonnes of food aid for displaced persons within Mozambique. The £3·5 million will be used for basic relief supplies, seeds and food.

I also announced in June a further £3 million, in response to an appeal by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, for Mozambican refugees in Malawi and other neighbouring countries. I will continue to monitor the situation in Mozambique very carefully.

Angola

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make further funds available in addition to the £500,000 British emergency aid so far given to help fight the Angolan famine; and what other action he intends taking to help reconstruction in that country.

Mrs. Chalker: Since September 1989 I have announced two pledges totalling £1 million for relief in Angola. Detailed discussions with the Angolan authorities and international and British relief agencies have been necessary because of the very difficult logistical and organisational problems present in Angola. All of the first £500,000, and £240,000 from the second pledge, has now been allocated to specific requirements. We are ready to allocate the remainder as it becomes possible to do so. Reconstruction is unlikely to be possible on a large scale until the fighting has stopped.

Kenyan National Parks

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the reply of 7 June, Official Report, column 677, if he has now completed agreement with the Kenyan Wildlife Service on the communications project in the Tsavo and Meru national parks; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The agreement with the Kenyan Wildlife Service on the communications project has not yet been signed, but we hope to conclude formalities very soon.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

International Development and the Environment

76. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans the Government have to increase spending on education in the United Kingdom on international development and environmental issues.

Mrs. Rumbold: In England it is for individual local education authorities, schools, and further and higher education institutions to determine the resources to be devoted to education on international development and environmental issues.

School Psychological Service

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether costs related to the school psychological service will be passed to individual schools to be met under their local management of schools budgets.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Under local management of schools it is for individual local education authorities to decide whether to delegate the costs of the school psychological service to individual schools or to retain those costs centrally. All LEAs have chosen to retain some of the costs centrally, and most are retaining all the costs.

GCSE

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will consider establishing machinery to monitor examining in GCSE English language and literature by public examining bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The School Examinations and Assessment Council is responsible under section 14(4)(a) of the Education Reform Act 1988 for keeping all aspects of examinations and assessment under review. In addition to this my right hon. Friend has responsibility under section 4(2)(c) of the Education Reform Act 1988 for determining arrangements in connection with the assessment of the national curriculum. We have every confidence that the arrangements being made by the GCSE examining groups for the examination of English following the introduction of the national curriculum will build on and improve those at present in force.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the sitting dates for GCSE examinations.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received nearly 50 representations from head teachers and others about the GCSE timetable. The joint council for the GCSE is preparing to consult a sample of centres offering the GCSE about this matter. My right hon. Friend will expect to discuss with it the outcomes of the consultation.

Education, London

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the cost in each London education authority of providing a school place for each child between five and 11 years of age; and what is the additional cost deemed necessary for each child with special needs in (a) a special school and (b) an integrated unit of a school for children under 11 years;

(2) what is the cost in each London education authority of providing a place for each student between 11 and 18 years; and what additional cost is deemed necessary for each child with special needs in (a) a special school and (b) integrated unit in a secondary school.

Mrs. Rumbold: The available information is contained in the table. It shows net institutional expenditure for each type of school in 1988-89. Local education authority expenditure returns to the Department of the Environment do not give separate figures for the education of pupils in integrated units in ordinary schools, or for different age ranges within special schools.

[2] The figures are based on LEA expenditure returns to DOE and pupil number returns to DES.
[3] n/a denotes that an expenditure return has not been received from the LEA.
[4] Spending on special schools will vary according to the learning difficulties catered for, the pupils' disabilities, and the pattern of provision in each LEA.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have recently applied for grant-maintained status.

Mrs. Rumbold: The governing bodies of 17 schools published proposals for grant-maintained status during the first six months of this year.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out a list of local education authorities, indicating for each authority (a) the number of schools which qualify for application for award of grant-maintained status, (b) how many have applied for a ballot, (c) in how many the ballot has been successful, (d) in how many the ballot has been unsuccessful, (e) how many have submitted an application to him, (f) how many applications have been agreed, (g) how many applications have been declined, (h) how many schools have achieved grant-maintained status, and (i) how many, including those in (h), will have achieved that status by September.

Mrs. Rumbold: It will take a long time to put together the information. I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Libraries of both Houses.

TVEI

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department is carrying out any current evaluation of the educational impact of the technical and vocational education initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department of Employment Training Agency is responsible for evaluating the effectiveness of the technical and vocational education initiative. Her Majesty's inspectorate does, however, inspect TVEI in the schools and colleges and a number of those reports have been published; HMI will be carrying out two surveys focusing on TVEI provision for 16 to 19-year-olds in the forthcoming academic year.

PRIME MINISTER

Diego Garcia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit Mauritius in order to ascertain from the Ilois people whether they wish to return to Diego Garcia in the changed military circumstances.

The Prime Minister: No. Those concerned worked on the former copra plantations in the Chagos Archipelago. After the plantations closed between 1971 and 1973 they and their families were resettled in Mauritius and given considerable financial assistance. Their future now lies in Mauritius. The defence facilities in British Indian Ocean Territory continue to make a vital security contribution.

Manchester Olympic Committee

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what specific steps she and the Government are taking in support of the Manchester Olympic Committee's bid to stage the Olympic Games in 1996; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government wholeheartedly support Manchester's bid to host the 1996 Olympic Games and have offered the bid team whatever promotional help they can. I have made our support very clear both in correspondence with His Excellency Juan Samaranch, President of the International Olympic Committee, and in statements to the House.

In addition, the Government have provided Manchester with the necessary assurances required by the Olympic charter, and will pay full regard to the Olympic rules and byelaws and do all within their powers to facilitate entry and freedom of movement to members of the Olympic family. My hon. Friend the Minister for Sport has met the bid team, visited Manchester to meet an International Olympic Committee evaluation team and attended a dinner in honour of 10 International Olympic Committee members hosted by the British Olympic Association. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has written to International Olympic Committee members endorsing the bid and our posts overseas are supporting the bid team in their lobbying efforts.

Adult Basic Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Prime Minister what investigation has been undertaken to assess the relative spending on adult basic education in Scotland with that in England and Wales; and with what findings.

The Prime Minister: Overall comparisons between Scotland and England and Wales are not practicable because it is not possible in Scotland separately to distinguish between spending by local authorities on adult basic education from spending on community education generally.

Urban Aid

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Prime Minister what current urban aid programmes involve provision for ethnic minorities.

The Prime Minister: The urban programmes for England, Wales and Scotland all make provision for ethnic minorities as one of the priority groups to be helped in the inner cities. Local authorities are required to ensure that the needs of ethnic minorities are being met when submitting their bids for urban programme resources.

Open Learning Centres

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Prime Minister how much the Scottish Education Department gives to open learning centres.

The Prime Minister: The Scottish Education Department provided a grant of £29,500 in 1988-89, £35,000 in 1989-90 and £40,000 in 1990-91 to assist with the running costs of the Whitfield open learning centre in Dundee.

ENERGY

Oil Rig Abandonment

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 350, to the hon. Member for Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), if he will make a statement on further monitoring of the oil rig abandonment programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall shortly be writing to Occidental Petroleum (Caledonia) Ltd. and its co-venturers to inform them about further work they will be required to carry out under the abandonment programme for Piper Alpha. When I have done so, I will inform the House.

Nuclear Power (Privatisation)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a copy of all correspondence between Kleinwort Benson and his Department regarding the feasibility and costs to public expenditure of privatising nuclear power generation.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Oil Rigs

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will introduce legislation requiring the segregation of production and accommodation quarters on British oil rigs in the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Existing legislation provides comprehensive controls over the design and construction of offshore installations. This requires, among other things, that accommodation should be placed and constructed so as to afford protection to persons on the installation, and that the certifying authority should carry out an independent assessment of the design and method of construction of the installation.

DEFENCE

Polish Resettlement Act 1947

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence further to his reply on 11 May, Official Report, column 212, when he now expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight of 3 April on the Polish Resettlement Act 1947.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces indicated in his letter of 24 April to the hon. Member, this is a complex issue which involves archive research and consultation with a number of other Government Departments. Unfortunately this process is taking longer than we had hoped, but my noble Friend will give a substantive reply to the hon. Member as soon as he is in a position to do so.

Transmitter, Glen Garry

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the bodies consulted by his Department on the proposed extremely low-frequency transmitter in Glen Garry.

Mr. Neubert: The following have been consulted at various times:

1. Forestry Commission (local and regional).
2. West Highland Estates.
3. Nature Conservancy Council.
4. Countryside Commission for Scotland.
5. Lochaber district council.
6. Highland regional council.
7. Scottish Wildlife Trust.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which company is conducting the environmental impact assessment of the proposed extremely low-frequency transmitter in Glen Garry; on what date the contract was awarded; what is the value of the contract; and what is the contracted completion date for the assessment.

Mr. Neubert: A contract for preliminary work, including an assessment of environmental impact, was awarded to W. A. Fairhurst and Partners of Newcastle on 14 November 1989. The value of the contract is a matter of commercial confidentiality. It is expected that this work will be completed by the end of this year. A formal notice of proposed development, together with an environmental impact assessment, will be submitted to Highland regional council at the appropriate time, if it is decided to proceed.

Valiant Submarines

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in checking the reactor equipment of Valiant class submarines following the discovery of faults earlier this year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The programme of inspections of our nuclear powered submarines is continuing.

Low-frequency Communications

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on the extremely low-frequency communications programme in each year since 1979; and what is the projected expenditure for the next three years.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our practice to identify separately spending on individual research projects.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to review the use of the base on Diego Garcia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Exercise Teamwork 90

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature of NATO's exercise Teamwork 90, planned for September; where in Scotland it will take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Teamwork 90 is a NATO maritime exercise to be held in the North Atlantic and in the waters off Norway from 6 to 23 September 1990. The exercise is designed to train NATO's maritime forces, including amphibious and air forces, to defend and operate in this geographically demanding area.

The exercise will involve some activity at RAF stations in Scotland and in Scottish waters.

Military Salaries

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the percentage change in real terms in the annual amount of Government expenditure on military salaries between (i) 1969 and 1979 (ii) 1979 and 1989;

(2) what is the percentage change in real terms in the pay upon appointment of (a) a field marshal, (b) major generals, (c) colonels, (d) captains, (e) second lieutenants, (f) sergeants, (g) corporals, and (h) privates, between (i) 1969 and 1979 and (ii) 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The military salary in its current form was not introduced until 1970 and it would not therefore be realistic to provide comparisons from before that date. Comparisons for the two 10-year periods commencing with the financial year 1970-71 are therefore provided.

The real changes in rates of pay were:

	Financial year 1970-71 to financial year 1979-80 per cent.	Financial year 1979-80 to financial year 1988-89 per cent.
Field Marshal	−24·3	+ 86·4
Major General	−30·5	+44·5
Colonel	−12·1	+29·7
Captain	−4·8	+21·9
2nd Lieutenant	−13·6	+13·1
Sergeant	+9·0	11·9
Corporal	+10·7	+9·0
Private	+11·0	−4·0

Government expenditure on military salaries for the corresponding periods showed a drop of 2·8 per cent. in real terms between financial year 1970-71 and financial year 1979-80 and an increase of 13·4 per cent. in real terms between financial year 1979-80 and financial year 1988-89.

Services (Recruitment)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many men and women were recruited into the Army, the Royal Navy and the Royal Air Force in each financial year since 1969; and how many left each of the services prematurely.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1990]: Information on intake and premature wastage in the years before 1971-72 is not available in the form requested. The total intakes to the United Kingdom regular forces in each financial year since 1971-72 are shown in table 1 below. The total numbers of exits from the services under premature wastage outflow categories during the same period are shown in table 2. The categories included in the outflow numbers are those listed in table 4.18 of volume 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates (Cm. 1022-11) with the exception of "Time and age expires or exercise of rights at option point" and for service women only "By exercise of right to give 18 months notice". Individual service officer premature outflow figures for 1989-90 have been amended from those given in the answer to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) on 5 June at columns 426-28 which, regrettably, contained a number of errors in compilation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gifts

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what procedure exists for documenting gifts received from foreign powers; and what becomes of them.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office follows well-established and recognised procedures, applying to both Ministers and officials, for dealing with the receipt of gifts.

These are that either:

(i) the gift may be placed on the inventory of the British mission concerned or the Foreign Commonwealth Office as appropriate; or
(ii) it may be given to another appropriate institution, eg a museum, or
(iii) the direct recipient may either keep or buy the gift depending on its value; or
(iv) it may be disposed of by public auction.

In all cases, the receipt and eventual disposal of the gift is recorded centrally within the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Administrative Grade

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the number of persons recruited to the administrative level of the Foreign Office (a) in the past year, (b) on average each year during the past decade and (c) on average each year during the previous decade; and how many he intends should be recruited in the coming year.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have recruited the following number of persons into the administrative level of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office:

	Number
(a) In the past year	19
(b) On average each year during the past decade	20·5
(c) on average during the previous decade	19

Our recruitment target for 1990 is 30.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss with the United States the future of the Diego Garcia base in the British Indian Ocean Territory, and the possibility of the Ilois people, living in Mauritius, being given the chance of returning home.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The defence facilities in British Indian ocean territory continue to make a vital security contribution. The former plantation workers were resettled in Mauritius in the early 1970s and their future lies there.

Armoured Personnel Carriers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department made of the human rights implications when it was consulted about the sale of 24 Shorts Shortland S55 armoured personnel carriers to Pakistan's Sind police.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our custom to give information on specific sales, but the hon. Member can be assured that the human rights implications of any such contract would be carefully considered along with the full range of other issues.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to negotiate a purchase on behalf of Her Majesty's Government of all stocks of elephant ivory held in Hong Kong by traders after midnight on 16 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Visas

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will show the cost charged for a visa to intending visitors to the United Kingdom from each country in eastern Europe, each Commonwealth country and the United States of America; and what requirements are made of such applicants with regard to proof of financial self-support.

Mr. Sainsbury: The standard worldwide fee for a United Kingdom visitors visa is £20, payable in local currency. This fee is charged to all eastern European visa nationals and to applicants from the following Commonwealth countries:

Bangladesh, Ghana, India, Nigeria, Pakistan and Sri Lanka.

Visitors from the United States of America do not require visas.

Applicants for visit visas must show that they are able to meet their living expenses in the United Kingdom. Proof of an applicant's ability to support himself can take the form of cash, travellers cheques, letters of credit or other similar bank guarantees. Where the major costs of a visit are to be borne by the host in this country evidence of the sponsor's ability to do so is required. Copies of bank statements, building society or other savings accounts, or a bank letter confirming the sponsor's financial standing are all acceptable for this purpose.

Israel

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the Israeli Foreign Minister to discuss United Kingdom-Israeli relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to meet the new Israeli Foreign Minister before too long. We regularly discuss the peace process with the Israelis. They are well aware of our view that a direct dialogue between Israel and representative Palestinians is needed soon as a first step towards an overall settlement.

Romania

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will reply to the letter of 9 May from Mr. and Mrs. B. O. Smith of 208 Sheffield Road, Killamarsh, Sheffield, concerning contacts with the British embassy in Bucharest.

Mr. Waldegrave: My private secretary replied to Mr. and Mrs. Smith's letter on 5 July. I regret the delay. Her Majesty's embassy in Bucharest is aware of Mr. and Mrs. Smith's interest in adopting a Romanian child and will assist them as much as possible.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the aid provided to Romania by the International Red Cross since 1 March; and if he will publish it in the Official Report.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 11 June]: The information is not available for the precise period requested by the hon. Member. However, I understand that between 1 February and 25 June, contributions to the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies' aid programme to Romania totalled approximately £11·6 million. This figure does not reflect numerous donations for which no value was indicated. The contributions, from over 30 national societies and private donors, consisted mainly of medical supplies, medicaments and basic equipment for orphanages, homes for the elderly or disabled, hospitals and dispensaries. Donations also include food, clothing, toys and other supplies.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his reply of 4 July, Official Report, column 609, if he will make it his policy to ask the Government of Syria to help to obtain information of relevance to the international investigation into the Lockerbie air disaster.

Mr. Waldegrave: The investigation into the Lockerbie air disaster is being pursued by the Dumfries and Galloway constabulary, under the direction of my noble and learned friend the Lord Advocate. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office stands ready to assist the constabulary in any way they require in pursuit of international aspect of the investigation.

Declarations of Interest

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his reply of 4 July, Official Report, column 619, whether advisers to his Department who are not employees of the Crown are asked to declare their pecuniary interests before taking up their responsibilities.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Intellectual Property Rights

73. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on the Government's position on the patenting of intellectual property rights and on the consequences for developing countries of inclusion in the current general agreement on tariffs and trade round of trade in intellectual property rights.

Mr. Ridley: The Government recognise that adequate levels of protection for intellectual property rights, including patents, are a necessary incentive for innovation. A successful outcome to the GATT negotiations on the trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights will provide a favourable international climate for innovation from which all trading nations will benefit. Particular benefits for developing countries will include greater confidence for domestic and foreign investors alike and an improved framework for technology transfer. The European Commission is responsible for these negotiations on behalf of the United Kingdom and other member states.

GATT

74. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are being proposed in the Uruguay round of the GATT by the European Community; and what practical measures the Government have introduced to ensure transparency in the negotiations and access to information for the public.

Mr. Ridley: The European Community plays a prominent role in the GATT Uruguay round, and has submitted proposals from time to time in all 15 areas of the negotiations. The European Commission represents the Community in the negotiations. The Community's negotiating position is regularly reviewed by member states through the article 113 committee of senior officials and the Council of Ministers.

Her Majesty's Government participate fully in this process, and maintain close liaison with interested business and other organisations in the United Kingdom. A public information point has also been established in the Department of Trade and Industry.

European Space Agency

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the status of the ERS-2 and DRTM programmes of the European Space Agency.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: These programmes were discussed at the Council of the European Space Agency on 27-28 June. I am pleased to report that the ERS-2 programme has now formally commenced following confirmation of subscriptions from all participating states. ERS-1 and ERS-2 will together constitute a major European contribution to the monitoring of climate and environment. The United Kingdom Government are allocating some £60 million to ERS-2. This will fund inter alia the provision of two major instruments—the active microwave instrument and the along-track scanning radiometer. DRTM (to which the United Kingdom has commited £32 million) has also formally commenced. In the TM element, United Kingdom industry will be active in the development of advanced land mobile services, optical (laser) inter-satellite communications, ion propulsion and nickel hydrogen cells. The data relay satellite system element is in a preparatory phase.

Girobank

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on the sale of Girobank to the Alliance and Leicester Building Society.

Mr. Forth: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave on 2 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns).

Timeshare Operators

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet the Timeshare Developers Association to discuss including timeshare owners in its membership.

Mr. Forth: I shall be happy to meet the Timeshare Developers Association if the association requests such a meeting. However, the composition of its membership is a matter for the association.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will introduce a mandatory code of conduct for timeshare operators;

(2) if he will implement the recommendations of the Director General of Fair Trading on timeshares;

(3) if he will introduce a licensing scheme for timeshare operators.

Mr. Forth: The Director General of Fair Trading's report on timeshare was published on 3 July. I shall be looking very carefully at his recommendations for legislation.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his statement of 19 December, Official Report, column 203, whether he has taken any action against any of the third parties implicated in the Barlow Clowes collapse.

Mr. Redwood: The Department is engaged in an urgent and wide-ranging assessment of possible legal actions against third parties to identify those cases which are worth pursuing in order to reduce the cost to public funds of the payments made to Barlow Clowes investors.

Research Council

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Research Council on 29 June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I represented Her Majesty's Government at the meeting of the Community's Council of Ministers (Research) in Luxembourg on 29 June.

The Council adopted a research and technological development programme on human genome analysis, which will run for two years with a total budget of 15 million ecu (£10·7 million). The Council agreed common positions on the EURET (transport research) and EUROTRA (development of machine translations systems) research and technological development programmes. The council also agreed a resolution on co-operation between COST (European co-operation in scientific and technical research) and the countries of central and eastern Europe.

There was also a preliminary discussion of two recent communications from the Commission on research co-operation with third countries and with eastern Europe. The Council is likely to have further discussion on this subject later in the year.

Financial Regulatory Organisations

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people in his Department have responsibility for overseeing the workings of (a) the Securities and Investments Board, (b) the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Organisation, (c) the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation, (d) the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation and (e) the Securities Association.

Mr. Redwood: Within the financial services division of my Department, the responsibilities of six people include, but are not confined to, oversight of the workings of the Securities and Investments Board. Oversight of the self-regulating organisations is the responsibility of the Securities and Investments Board itself.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the names, annual salaries and terms of contract for (a) the chairman, (b) the chief executive and (c) other directors of the Securities and Investments Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The names of the board of directors of the Securities and Investments Board together with directors' emoluments are given in the Securities and Investments Board annual report which was laid before the House on 6 June. Sir Mark Weinberg and Mr. Eddie Ray retire from the board on 31 July and Mr. John Craven is appointed a director from 1 August. The terms of contract are a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and industry what discussions he has had with the Securities and Investments Board regarding the rationalisation of its five self-regulatory organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: This subject was among those discussed when I met the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board on 30 April. I welcome the recent announcement that the Securities Association and the Association of Futures Brokers and Dealers are to merge.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will bring forward legislation to increase the use of guest beers.

Mr. Redwood: The Supply of Beer (Tied Estate) Order 1989 already provides that from 1 May 1990 tenants of brewers with interests in more than 2,000 on-licensed premises and those receiving tied loans from such brewers, must be free to sell a cask-conditioned guest beer from any supplier of their choice.

Mr Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the large brewers; and what was discussed.

Mr Redwood: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry last met representatives of the six national brewers collectively on 6 July 1989. In addition, the Department had a meeting with representatives of the Brewers Society on 10 November 1989 to hear representations on the draft Supply of Beer Orders.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will arrange to meet the Director General of Fair Trading to discuss the results of his office's monitoring of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on brewing.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans at present to meet the Director General of Fair Trading. I will do so if and when we think it necessary. However my Department keeps in close contact with the Office of Fair Trading on their monitoring of the implementation of the measures the Government took in response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report. Monitoring by the Office of Fair Trading will extend at least until the end of 1992, when the Supply of Beer Orders have taken full effect.

Aldi Stores

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when the Office of Fair Trading's preliminary report into the alleged refusal of companies to supply Aldi stores will be available;

(2) if he will detail the allegations of unfair trading practice which the Office of Fair Trading is considering in respect of Aldi stores;

(3) if he will estimate the time scale for a full investigation into the alleged refusal of companies to supply Aldi stores.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 6 July 1990]: Aldi have made representations to the Director General of Fair Trading that various suppliers of goods withheld supplies to them, within the meaning of section 12 of the Resale Prices Act 1976. I understand that the director general is making exploratory inquiries with a view to establishing the circumstances, following which he will decide what action if any he should take. The present inquiries do not constitute a statutory investigation and will not end in a report.

Channel 5

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what studies have been made by his Department of the costs of retuning video recorders associated with the reception of channel 5 output; in respect of how many transmitters have the calculations in respect of such costs been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 28 June 1990]: As my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office explained during the Committee stage of the Broadcasting Bill on 15 February 1990, my Department has made a study of the possible cost of retuning video recorders affected by interference from Channel 5 in cases where the user has not arranged to receive the Channel 5 service. This study was based on the planned national coverage figure for the service of 70 per cent. The number of transmitters assumed in the study for this planned level of coverage was 25.

The new service is not expected to commence for about three years. The market is growing and changing rapidly. Any estimate of the costs must therefore be subject to great uncertainty. The study also made a range of other assumptions in addition to that concerning the number of transmitters. It is therefore important that franchise applicants carry out their own studies of the costs.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Civil Servants (Workplaces)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations have been undertaken at workplaces used by civil servants in his Department.

Mr. Needham: The Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations do not yet apply in Northern Ireland. A consultative document setting out the Department of Economic Development's proposals for controlling substances considered hazardous to health was issued on 5 March 1990.

An initial assessment of potentially hazardous substances has been made by officials in the Northern Ireland Office and the PSA. This assessment is kept under constant review.

Terrorism

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table to show for each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland the number of deaths from terrorist action since 1 January 1969 until June 1983 and also for each present parliamentary constituency, or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 3 July 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Remand

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average number of days that prisoners spent on custodial remand for scheduled, non-scheduled offences and both together, in 1989.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: The average period on custodial remand for persons tried in 1989 for scheduled offences was 94·5 days; for non-scheduled offences, 61 days; and both together 80 days.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average period between remand and trial for prisoners refused bail and charged with scheduled offences in Northern Ireland in 1989.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: The average period between remand and trial for prisoners charged in scheduled offences and refused bail who were tried in 1989, was 94·5 days.

WALES

Registered Holdings

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many registered holdings in Wales are eligible for less-favoured area projects.

Mr. David Hunt: There is no register of agricultural holdings. Lists maintained for the purpose of collecting agricultural statistics contained at June 1989 20,576 statistically significant agricultural holdings which had some land in the less-favoured areas. The eligibility of a holding for assistance under any project will depend both on the project and on the individual circumstances of the holding.

Cataract Operations

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange for each health authority to supply him with the waiting lists for cataract operations; and if he will publish the results in the Official Report.

Mr. Grist: Information about waiting lists for individual procedures is not collected routinely. The Welsh hospital waiting list bulletin 1990 (No. 1), a copy of which is available in the Library, contains information on each health authority's ophthalmology waiting lists as at September 1989.

Market Research

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the market research surveys commissioned by his Department or paid for by his Department in each of the past five financial years.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

General Practitioners (Prescribing)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intendes to issue fresh guidelines (a) to general practitioners in respect of over-prescribing and (b) to family practitioner committees in respect of the operation of regulation 16 of the Service Committee and Tribunal Regulations.

Mr. Grist: A working paper will be issued shortly which deals with prescribing in general practice. This will indicate the initiatives being taken to encourage general practitioners to improve the quality of their prescribing. The working paper will also indicate that it is the Government's intention to amend regulation 16 of the Service Committee and Tribunal Regulations.

Teaching (Language)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the right of parents to have their children taught in their first language.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Our general policy is that all pupils, as part of the national curriculum in schools in Wales, should study both English and Welsh.

The medium of instruction in an individual school, either Welsh or English, is a matter for determination by the head teacher and governing body within the context of the local authority's curriculum and language policies.

NHS Reforms

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated total cost to his Department of the Government's proposed publicity campaign in respect of their National Health Service reforms.

Mr. Grist: We are preparing a bilingual booklet for circulation in Wales which will explain the main changes taking place in the National Health Service in the Principality. The total cost of preparing and distributing the booklet has yet to be finalised, but we expect the unit cost to be broadly similar to that of the booklet being distributed in England.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those responsibilities which will no longer be exercised by district health authorities in Wales (a) following the passing of the National Health Service and Community Care Act and (b) following the implementation of the Government's plans for reform of the national health service.

Mr. Grist: Under our programme of reforms, DHAs will be responsible for securing quality health services for their resident populations. In certain areas of activity this purchasing role will be undertaken by any GP fundholding practices that are set up.

To the extent that NHS trusts are established and DHAs contract with other agencies for the provision of care, health authorities will not be responsible for the direct delivery of services. They will, however, continue to be responsible for the purchase of quality care under contract.

GP Budgets

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioners will be equipped with the necessary software to enable them to be responsible for their own budgets from 1 April 1991.

Mr. Grist: Discussions are continuing with the computer companies. The details of these discussions are commercially sensitive, but the general objective is to ensure that the necessary software will be available to all those GPs who wish to take part in the scheme.

Education (Special Needs)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the cost in each local education authority of providing a place for each student between 11 and 18 years; and what additional cost is deemed necessary for each child with special needs in (a) a special school and (b) an integrated unit in a secondary school;

(2) what is the cost in each local education authority of providing a school place for each child between five and 11 years; and what additional cost is deemed necessary for each child with special needs in (a) a special school and (b) an integrated unit of a school for children under 11 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The cost per pupil of providing a school place in 1988-89 for (a) nursery and primary children (b) secondary children and (c) children in these age groups with special needs is shown in the following table. It is not possible to identify expenditure on integrated special units.

Current expenditure on schools 1989-89

£'s per pupil

	Nursery primary	Secondary	Special
Clwyd	1,041	1,734	9,449
Dyfed	1,151	1,658	12,864
Gwent	1,123	1,821	11,264
Gwynedd	1,115	1,661	6,818
Mid Glamorgan	1,159	1,686	8,911
Powys	1,409	1,885	11,734
South Glamorgan	1,021	1,520	6,264
West Glamorgan	1,174	1,991	11,071
Total Wales	1,126	1,730	9,190

Land Use (Cardiff)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has undertaken with Cardiff city council and South Glamorgan county council regarding the future use of land and buildings currently used for industrial training purposes at Western avenue, Cardiff.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the future use and ownership of the land and buildings occupied by the skill centre at Western avenue, Cardiff.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what land and buildings he has made available to Astra Training Services at Western avenue, Cardiff for (a) present and (b) future industrial training facilities.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I understand that Astra Training Services Ltd. has taken a three-year lease from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment for most of the freehold site at Western avenue.

Nurses' Grading

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what deadline he has set for all clinical grading appeals by nurses in Wales which are currently outstanding to be dealt with.

Mr. Grist: Appeals against clinical grading decisions are conducted under complex procedures agreed between the staff and management sides of the general Whitley council. The procedures which provide for three separate levels of hearing are resource-intensive for staff and management sides alike and in view of the unprecedented numbers of appeals it is not feasible for any deadline to be set. It is to be regretted that nursing trade unions chose not to pursue the possibility of adopting a simpler and quicker appeals procedures at the time the new structure was negotiated.

European Single Market

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of the completion of the single European market on economic growth and employment in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The impact of the single market on Wales will depend on the flexibility with which individual firms and industries respond to the opportunities and challenges which it presents. The Europartenariat forum which was recently hosted in Wales by the Welsh Development Agency, with the support of the European Commission, provided an excellent opportunity for firms, particularly small firms, in Wales to develop the potential for business co-operation with companies elsewhere in Europe and I am delighted that so many Welsh firms took the opportunity to participate.

Hospital Costs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest information he has on the cost of operations and hospital care in each hospital; and when he expects all hospitals to publish a price list for all operations and treatments available for patients.

Mr. Grist: Information on the cost of operations in each hospital is not available centrally. The latest available information on hospital costs is contained in "Welsh Health Costing Returns 1988-89", a copy of which is in the Library. The pricing of services will be included in the contracts for health services which will operate from April 1991. It is intended that these contracts should be made publicly available once agreed.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what figure for inflation his Department advised (a) district councils, (b) county councils and (c) health authorities in Wales to use in the advance planning and estimate-making for the 1990-91 financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: Individual local authorities determine their own budgets, including the inflation and other assumptions on which they are based. The appropriate level of local government expenditure for each financial year is set by the Government and it is regrettable that actual spending by local authorities has consistently and unnecessarily exceeded those levels. No record of local authorities' budget assumptions is kept and no estimate of the inflation in local government costs to which they have contributed is made by my Department. I will respond separately to questions raised with respect to health authorities.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 230, if he will list the recipients of the £96,000 grant aid to voluntary organisations; and how much was given to each.

Mr. Grist: The entire allocation was to Wales MIND.

Training

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the total amount offered by the Training Agency for 1990-91 in Wales to training providers of (a) youth training and (b) employment training in each training and enterprise council area in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: All training and enterprise councils in Wales are at present in their development stage and not yet fully operational. This information is not, therefore, available.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the number of people requiring guaranteed training places within each training and enterprise council area during 1990-91.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In advance of the formal establishment of training and enterprise councils in Wales I cannot give figures for individual areas, but I am satisfied that sufficient places will be made available to meet the demand.

Planning

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will call in for decision by himself the current planning application in respect of Rhos-y-Chellis farm, Northop, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales understands that Delyn borough council is meeting today to determine this planning application. Should it be minded to grant planning permission for the proposal development it has indicated that it will refer the application to my right hon. Friend, under the Town and Country Planning (Development Plans) (Wales) Direction 1981, as a material departure from an approved development plan. He will then decide whether to call it in for his determination and I shall ensure that the hon. and learned Gentleman is informed of that decision when it has been taken.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy concerning the relevance of subjective financial criteria affecting the viability of planning applications in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Generally speaking, financial considerations play no part in the determination of planning applications, the viability of a proposal being essentially a matter for the developer. There will be occasions, however, when the planning consequences of the financial viability of a development must be taken into account, for example, the likelihood of a development being only partially completed or the viability of a farming enterprise in assessing the need for an agricultural dwelling. The relevance of those factors will depend upon the particular circumstances of individual cases.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Video Recordings (Prosecutions)

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under the Video Recordings Act 1984 in the last convenient period of 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Waddington: In 1988, 27 defendants were prosecuted under the Video Recordings Act 1984. Information for 1989 will not be available until the autumn.

Prison Service Headquarters

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the factors involved in the shortlisting of Birmingham, Coventry, Derby and Nottingham for consideration as a location for the prison service headquarters; and if he will make a statement on the decision-making timetable.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 11 January that he had accepted the recommendation of a joint prison service and PA Consultants Group review team that the headquarters of the service should move from London to the midlands. Since then, further work has been done to identify specific options. Specialist consultants have conducted an evaluation of the area to identify which cities would be best able to support a substantial headquarters operation of around 1,500 staff. Among the criteria which they took into account were the availability of secretarial and clerical staff, the capacity of the local housing market to absorb a significant influx of new residents, the quality of local amenities and infrastructure and ease of access to prison service establishments around the country. In the light of their assessment it was decided that six cities merited further consideration, subject to the availability of suitable sites. Particular options in Birmingham, Coventry and Derby are now being explored. It is likely to be some months before a decision is taken.

San Salvador Killing (Police Report)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whose property is the report of the investigation carried out by Detective Chief Inspector Tony Comben into the killing in San Salvador on 16 November 1989; and what plans exist to make it public;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the costs arising from sending a team to El Salvador to investigate murders by death squads in San Salvador.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Officers from the Metropolitan police went to El Salvador at the request of President Cristiani. Their report will be sent to the Government of El Salvador. It will be for the Salvadorean authorities to decide on future action, including publication. The costs are a matter for the FCO and the Salvadorean authorities.

Fire Risk Areas

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many A category fire risk areas there are in each fire brigade area in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The information which is available centrally and shown in the following table relates to the number of hectares within the area of each fire authority in England and Wales which that authority has reported as fire risk A.

Fire authorities in England and Wales

Source: figures provided by fire authorities September 1989.

The remaining fire authorities in England and Wales have reported no areas of category A fire risk. Areas of fire risk are categorised on the basis of the predominating risk within the area. Areas with fire risk categories other than A may contain individual premises which would otherwise be categorised A risk; isolated higher risks of this kind are generally categorised as special risks.

Vagrancy Act

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider seeking to amend the sections of the Vagrancy Act 1824 under which young persons sleeping on the streets have been arrested and convicted.

Mr. Waddington: The Vagrancy Act 1824 has already been amended, in particular by the Vagrancy Act 1935 and the Criminal Justice Act 1982, so that no one can be convicted for sleeping rough unless it can be proved that he had first refused or failed to apply for free and reasonably accessible accommodation to which he had been directed, or it can be proved that his doing so causes harm. Sleeping rough is not now either an arrestable or imprisonable offence. It is extremely rare for anyone under the age of 18 to be prosecuted for this offence.

We have no present plans to amend the vagrancy laws.

Child Migrants

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter of 25 June from the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East concerning a case of adoption from Romania under his reference 18059/90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as I am in a position to take a decision in this case.

Acid House Parties

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines his Department has given to regional or other police forces concerning acid house parties.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office has not issued any guidelines to the police specifically concerning acid house parties, but we have discussed the problem and how best to tackle it with the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Police and Criminal Evidence Act

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue revised codes of practice in accordance with section 67(7) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Mr. Waddington: I have today laid before Parliament draft revised codes in accordance with section 67 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. I intend to bring them into operation with effect from 1 January 1991 by order made by statutory instrument and I will seek their approval by resolution of each House of Parliament as soon as possible.

Remand

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the changes in the number of people in police cells on remand in Greater Manchester over the last four weeks.

Mr. Mellor: Over the past four weeks the numbers of people in police cells, on remand in the Greater Manchester area, have been as follows:

	Number
1 June 1990	505
8 June 1990	551
15 June 1990	574
22 June 1990	569
29 June 1990	581

The number of prisoners held in police cells was initially a result of the recent prison disturbances but is now largely due to industrial action or lack of good will on the part of prison officers in some establishments.

There is room to accommodate the majority of these prisoners in prison accommodation. Holding prisoners in police cells is bad for everyone concerned. It draws scarce police resources off the streets and means prisoners are held in unsuitable conditions. I hope prison officers in the establishments concerned will cease this unwarranted action at the earliest opportunity. We are pursuing discussions to bring this about.

Police Forces

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to carry out a major restructuring of the police forces in England and Wales in the near future.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Police Pay and Manpower

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the increase in police pay and manpower since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since this Government came to office, the pay of police constables has increased by just over 41 per cent. in real terms. Police manpower has increased by 15,284 to 126,777, an increase of just under 14 per cent.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the money and real terms pay increases of a police constable, sergeant, inspector and chief inspector in each year since 1974.

Prison Disturbances

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the ratio of prisoners to prison officers injured in the recent prison disturbances.

Mr. Mellor: During incidents in April and May involving numbers of inmates acting in concert and using violence towards staff or property, the ratio of injuries was approximately one prisoner to two prison officers.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he plans to take to reduce the number of experiments conducted on animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applications for licences are considered individually on their merits. As figure 5 of the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain 1988 (Cm. 743) shows, however, the number of experiments has fallen consistently for many years and this trend is continuing under the strict controls of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Prisoners (Payments)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement setting out the uses to which the general purposes fund was put, the classes of prisoner to whom payments were made and the basis on which the payments were calculated.

Mr. Mellor: The general purposes fund is used to provide recreational and sporting facilities for all prisoners in addition to those provided from public funds and to provide facilities for inmates' spouses and families. Cash payments may be made at the discretion of governors on special occasions.

Prisoners (Deportation)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are subject to orders for their deportation at the conclusions of their sentences or otherwise liable to be deported; how many of these are held in open prisons; and whether his Department issues any guidelines as to the granting to such prisoners of facilities such as home leave and education at outside establishments and who is responsible for taking decisions on the granting of such facilities.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Prisoners subject to a court recommendation that they should be deported at the end of their sentence or to a notice of intention to deport issued by the Secretary of State may be granted some leave or temporary release by the governor for a variety of purposes, including education, subject to the agreement of the immigration department. Prisoners who are the subject of a signed deportation order are not eligible for home leave or temporary release.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability)

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received, and on what dates, from United Kingdom and international airlines suggesting possible changes to the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987; and whether he is considering amendments to the Act.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 July 1990]: The dates and precise nature of representations received from airlines could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I can, however, say that the only fundamental changes proposed by the airlines or their representatives have been (i) the introduction of a variable charge up to a maximum of £1,000 per passenger, (as opposed to the existing set charge of £1,000 per passenger); (ii) the removal of liability in respect of those passengers who, notwithstanding the absence of proper documentation, are granted leave to enter the United Kingdom. British Airways, in particular, has raised a number of issues about the implementation of the Act, and these are under consideration.

I have no present plans to amend the Act.

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, according to airline, the number of convictions and fines and costs involved, all United Kingdom and international carriers penalised for contraventions of the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 5 July 1990]: The Act gives rise to a civil liability in respect of improperly documented passengers brought to the United Kingdom. It is not the practice to disclose information on the record of individual airlines under the Act.

HEALTH

Radioactive Caesium

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by county, and by year for the last five years, the number of reported cases of radioactive caesium in people.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not available in the form requested.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his latest estimates of (a) HIV and (b) AIDS cases in the United Kingdom currently; and what are the projected figures on current trends by the year 2000.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At the end of May 1990, the cumulative United Kingdom total of AIDS cases reported was 3,346 of whom 1,845 are known to have died.

It is not possible to predict how many HIV-infected individuals or cases of AIDS there will be by the year 2000. The Day report, "Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome in England and Wales to end 1993" published by the public health laboratory service in January 1990 as a supplement to the communicable disease report, made it clear that AIDS predictions beyond 1993 are subject to great uncertainty, and made no estimate of the number of HIV-infected persons beyond 1990.

The Day report estimated that there were between 12,250 and 26,400 HIV-infected persons in England and Wales at the end of 1988. On the assumption that the behavioural trends necessary to produce the upper 1988 estimate continued unchanged, the Day report estimated that there could be 46,450 people infected by the end of 1990. From the report, the expected cumulative total of AIDS cases in England and Wales for the period 1979-1993 for planning purposes is 11,360; with a lower band of 8,115 cases and an upper band of 16,390 cases.

A separate group is currently preparing new estimates of short-term predictions of HIV incidence and prevalence estimates of the numbers of AIDS cases in Scotland as a revision of the projections contained in the report of the national working party on health service implications of HIV infection (the Tayler report). Copies of both the Day and Tayler reports are available in the Library.

Reported incidence in Northern Ireland is too low to make accurate estimates of the likely spread of HIV infection.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of hospital units interested in self-governing status where (a) a ballot includes more than 50 per cent. of consultants in support of an application, (b) more than 50 per cent. of consultants opposed to an application and (c) no ballot has taken place and is unlikely to do so.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have consistently made it clear that it would not be appropriate for changes in management of National Health Service services to be subject to ballots, and we have not asked for data on ballots. Regional health authorities will seek the views of community health councils and other parties with an interest, including consultants and other staff, on individual proposals before any decisions are made.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total financial cost of family practitioner committees nationwide.

Mr. Dorrell: The total net administrative costs related to family practitioner committees in England and included in the supply estimates 1990-91 amount to £118·389 million.

Infant Mortality

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of infant mortality rates in 1979; and what they are today.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is shown in the table:

Infant mortality rates[1] England and Wales 1979, 1989

Year	Rate[1]

[1] Rate per 1,000 live births.

Maternity Mortality

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of maternity mortality rates in 1979; and what it is today.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is shown in the table.

Maternal mortality rates[1], England and Wales 1979, 1989

	1979	1989
Maternal mortality including abortion	11·51	8·10

[1] Rate per 100,000 total births.

General Practitioners (Prescribing)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to issue fresh guidelines (a) to general practitioners in respect of over-prescribing and (b) to family practitioner committees in respect of the operation of regulation 16 of the Service Committee and Tribunal Regulations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The recently published working paper, "Improving Prescribing", (a copy of which is available in the Library), describes a range of new initiatives to improve the quality of general practitioner prescribing. It is the Government's intention, as set out in paragraph 10.2 of that working paper, to amend regulation 16 of the Service Committee and Tribunal Regulations.

National Health Service Reforms

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is the Government's intention to use outside consultants in its proposed publicity campaign in respect of its national health service reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated total cost to his Department of the Government's proposed publicity campaign in respect of its national health service reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 5 July at column 675.

General Practitioner Budgets

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners will be equipped with the necessary software to enable them to be responsible for their budgets from 1 April 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: We are currently engaged in discussions with the computer companies. The details of these discussions are commercially sensitive, but the general objective is to ensure that the necessary software will be available to all the general practitioners wishing to take part in the practice funding scheme.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimated cost of developing and supplying the computer software systems for doctors eligible and electing to run their own budgets.

Mr. Dorrell: Development and supplying of the software for practice funding is a matter for the general practitioner computer suppliers. The Department does not hold the information necessary to estimate individual companies' costs.

Hospital Care (Cost)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the latest information he has on the cost of operations and hospital care in each hospital; and when he expects all hospitals to publish a price list for all operations and treatments available for patients.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on the cost of operations and hospital care by individual hospitals is not collected centrally. From 1 April 1991 health authority contracts for health services with both public and private providers will be publicly available once they are signed. This will permit a steady improvement of information on the outcome of contract negotiations in terms of service covered and quality as much as price.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage increase or decrease in the numbers of people waiting for treatment between March 1987 and September 1989 for (a) general surgery, (b) trauma and orthopaedics, (c) ear, nose and throat and (d) obstetrics and gynaecology; and if he will rank each health authority, giving the greatest increase first and the greatest decrease last.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 22 May 1990]: Figures for waiting lists in themselves are of little value unless considered with figures for waiting times, which are far more important for patients and figures for patient cases which are a much better measure of a unit's activity level. Comparisons between waiting lists in one place and another are also unreliable because of variations in referral practice, the acceptance of patients onto lists and the verification of the lists themselves. Changes in individual waiting lists between two points in time in at district level should also be interpreted with care as large changes can for example be due to errors in the data or transfer of responsibility between districts. However, the information requested will be placed in the Library. Nationally, the in-patient waiting lists for these four clinical specialties fell by 3 per cent. over the period March 1987 to September 1989 from 475,000 to 461,000. Over approximately the same period, the number of in-patient cases remained roughly constant at 2,375,000 per year but the number of day cases rose by over 4 per cent. from 530,000 to 552,000. Since 1979 the total number of in-patient cases in these four specialties has risen by 12 per cent. and day cases by 68 per cent. In-patient waiting lists have fallen by 7 per cent. overall and by 18 per cent. for these four specialties, including by more than a quarter for general surgery and gynaecology over the same period.

General Practitioners (Information)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been conducted into whether general practitioners read letters from (a) the Committee on Safety of Medicines and (b) pharmaceutical companies.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 27 June 1990]: Inquiries and increases in adverse drug reaction reports (yellow card reports) indicate that general practitioners and hospital doctors read and take appropriate notice of the information they receive.

The Department does not conduct research into the readership of letters issued by pharmaceutical companies.

Health Service Spending

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give figures for each financial year of the amount spent on the national health service from 1979-80 inclusive (a) in cash terms and (b) as a percentage change after adjustment for medical inflation, and using 1979-80 as a base year; and if he will give similar estimates for 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 July 1990]: The table shows total National Health Service gross expenditure in cash for 1979-80 to 1989-90 and planned expenditure for 1990-91 and 1991-91 in cash. There is no specific index for medical inflation in the national health service but there is a composite National Health Service index of changes in input unit costs and this has been used to adjust the cash figures to a 1979-80 basis. Estimates of changes in unit costs are not made until after the end of the relevant financial year and so it is not possible to put the 1990-91 and 1991-92 figures on this basis.

Cholesterol Screening

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to the early introduction of cholesterol screening by general practitioners for those individuals judged to be most at risk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 5 July 1990]: Opportunistic blood cholesterol testing is already undertaken by many general practitioners. The Standing Medical Advisory Committee has now reviewed the cost-effectiveness of various levels of opportunistic cholesterol testing, and their economic appraisals of these were based upon testing in general practice. I have today issued the committee's report for wide consultation.

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received the Standing Medical Advisory Committee report on cholesterol screening.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 5 July 1990]: In July 1988 I asked the Standing Medical Advisory Committee to consider whether opportunistic cholesterol testing could make a cost-effective contribution towards identifying and treating people at increased risk of coronary heart disease. I have now received the committee's report and have thanked them for their work.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library. The report sets out the results of a detailed study which the committee advises is full of scientific complexity. The report explains that opportunistic blood cholesterol testing can make a cost-effective contribution to coronary heart disease prevention in certain circumstances and sets out a number of possible options for consideration.

In those circumstances, I believe that all those with an interest in the prevention of coronary heart disease should now have the opportunity to consider the report's findings and let me have their comments on them. I am therefore today issuing the report for consultation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephones

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he has any plans to review telephone facilities in the House.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Arrangements are in hand to provide direct dialling access to a limited number of European Community institutions and organisations; plans exist for the Palace of Westminster telephone exchange to be upgraded to make the most economic use of available telephone routes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Attendance and Mobility Allowances

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (a) how many people who apply for mobility allowance are refused after their initial medical; and how many are awarded the benefit, (b) how many appeal against refusal; how many are subsequently awarded the benefit after a further examination at a medical centre, and how many are refused; and (c) how many are awarded mobility allowance resulting from an appeal to a medical appeal tribunal and how many are refused; and if he will express these figures for each region over the past 12 months.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. The available information, which relates to decisions made during the year ending 31 March 1990, is as follows:

	Decision in claimant's favour	Decision adverse to claimant
Decisions on initial claims	105,500	113,590
Decisions on renewal claims	29,490	10,800
Appeals and references decided by medical boards	6,989	18,675
Appeals decided by medical appeal tribunals	2,821	5,980

As mobility allowance is administered centrally, it is not possible to break those figures down by regions.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will commission research into the possibility of extending mobility allowance or the mobility component of the disability allowance to people with a mental handicap and behaviour problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: On 10 January we laid before Parliament "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People", which details our major proposals arising from our review of the balance and structure of social security benefits for disabled people and their carers. One of the proposals concerns the introduction of a new disability allowance for people of working age or below which will extend help to less severely disabled people, and will also subsume the help currently provided through attendance allowance and mobility allowance. The initial rate of the mobility component—set at £10—will be awarded to people who are not independently mobile, for example those with a severe mental handicap or behavioural disturbance, and who do not otherwise fulfil the current criteria for mobility allowance. We estimate that 150,000 people will receive this new form of help.

Benefit Leaflets

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reason his Department has ended the practice of sending sample leaflets on benefits, as they are published to local authorities and welfare rights organisations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department has not ended the practice. The mailing of sample leaflets is carried out by Her Majesty's Stationery Office (HMSO) on behalf of the Department.

I understand that HMSO experienced temporary difficulties in providing the service recently but that the service has now been restored. Arrangements are in hand to issue not only future material but those items which should have been sent earlier.

Pensions

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage of the average wage paid in pensions to single people and married couples in each European Community country, including the United Kingdom; what increase would be required to bring United Kingdom pensions up to the level of the highest pension rate in the European Community; and what that would cost in additional public expenditure in a full financial year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Pensions in other member states of the European Community are usually related to length of the individual's contribution record and the level of earnings on which contributions have been paid. The relationship with the overall average wage in the country concerned will therefore vary from individual to individual. Details of pensions in all member states are set out in "Tables of Social Benefits in the European Community" published by the Department, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Discretionary Awards

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report the number and percentage of people who were refused discretion-based awards because the items for which they are requesting assistance are excluded by the social fund directions, by local office in Scotland.

Mr. Scott: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by local office in Scotland the number and percentage of people who were refused discretion-based awards because they had insufficient funds to repay the loan.

Mr. Scott: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number and percentage of households and persons in Scotland below and at 40 per cent. above the income support level for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90, by local office in Scotland.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is not available.

Social Fund

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the percentage expenditure take-up of the social fund from 0 to 10 per cent. to 90 to 100 per cent. for each of the local offices in Scotland, for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: Figures on expenditure in all local offices can be obtained from the information placed in the Library.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are repaying social fund loans at (a) 15 per cent., (b) 10 per cent., (c) 5 per cent. and (d) less than 5 per cent. of their income support.

Mr. Scott: At 31 May 1990, the latest date for which data are available, 418,604 social fund loans were being recovered. A detailed breakdown of the percentage rates at which loans are being repaid by individual applicants is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I regret that there was an error in my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 28 June at column 352. The number of social fund loans being recovered at 30 April 1990 should have read 422,055.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to review the payment of unemployment benefit before the next election.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Unemployment benefit, in common with other benefits, is reviewed each year as part of the process of uprating.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, for students who will still be eligible for housing benefit and non-student partners who are in receipt of housing benefit, he plans any amendments to reflect the new arrangements for grants to be paid for the whole year as opposed to the previous practice of grants awarded for the academic year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We propose that the student grant, which is not intended to provide financial support for the long vacation, will continue to be treated as now in the calculation of housing benefit. The new student loans will provide support throughout the whole of the course including the long vacations falling within it. We propose that income from loans will be apportioned over the whole year for the purpose of calculating benefit entitlement. We also propose that income from top-up loans will attract a weekly disregard of £10 so long as the recipient remains a student.

Student Grants

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provisions he intends to make within the Social Security Benefits (Student Loan) Amendment Regulations 1990 with regard to students in receipt of discretionary grants from local authorities.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Students are not currently treated differently for benefit purposes on the basis of the type or source of the educational grant or bursary they receive. This will remain our intention under future arrangements.

Disability and Care Allowances

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many women would be entitled to (a) severe disability allowance and (b) invalid care allowance if women could claim these benefits up to the age of 65 years.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that the additional number of women who would qualify each year if they could make a new claim between the ages of 60 and 65 is as follows:

	Number
(a) Severe disablement allowance	2,000
(b) Invalid care allowance	1,800

Low Incomes

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what help is currently being given to families on low incomes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A range of benefits is available to families on low income. Child benefit continues to provide a worthwhile contribution to the costs of bringing up children. Lone parents are also eligible to receive one parent benefit. In addition help is available in the form of a range of income-related benefits—income support, family credit, housing benefit and community charge benefit. Expenditure on each main benefit is set out in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990-91 to 1992-93" (Cm. 1014), copies of which are in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list each office and its region making deductions from income support to pay the community charge; and how many claimants are having deductions made by each office for this reason.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is collected centrally on a quarterly basis. The latest available figures are for May 1990 and I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 2 July at columns 460-61.

Fraud

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he intends to reorganise fraud resources within his Department into sector teams; and when such reorganisation will be complete.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We intend, wherever possible, to align the new fraud sectors with our local office network for benefit payment. Existing fraud resources will be merged to form approximately 170 sector teams, grouped with some 20 areas for line management purposes. We plan to have this new organisation in place by the end of the year.

Household Incomes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will revise the data given in his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) Official Report, 17 March 1989, column 390, on household incomes, to take into account the errors in the originally published data.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The figures quoted in the answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 17 March 1989 were only marginally affected by the recalculated data.

The main figures are as follows:

Real growth in mean net income before housing costs: 1979 to 1985

by decile group		by family type
Lowest	6	Married pensioners	15
2nd	5	Single pensioners	15
3rd	4	Married with children	9
4th	4	Married without children	6
5th	4	Single with children	10
6th	6	Single with children	6
7th	7*
8th	9
9th	11*	Total population	9
Highest	18

Notes:

All these figures are as previously published, except the two marked *, which were previously shown as 6 per cent. and 10 per cent. respectively.

Any changes in the detailed figures contained in the original table are likely to be equally trivial. Moreover, as explained in the original answer, those figures are of limited significance, because the deciles used were for the whole population rather than specific to each family type.

Water Charges

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to raise benefits to take account of water charge rises above inflation in each of the next five years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Benefit levels are considered for uprating each year, and we seek to take account of all relevant factors.

Pensions

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what he estimates would be the cost to his Department of adding £3 per week to the pensions of pensioners over 75 years of age;

(2) what he estimates would be the cost of adding £5 per week to the state pension for a single pensioner at current prices;

(3) how much he estimates it would cost his Department to increase the pension for a married couple by £8 per week at current prices;

(4) how much it would cost his Department to provide every pensioner aged 75 years and over with £10 per week extra at 1990-91 prices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answers 5 June and 12 June 1990]: The estimated gross and net costs with the accompanying estimated savings in income-related benefits for each of the additions is shown in the table.

Addition	Estimated gross cost £ billion	Estimated net cost £ billion	Estimated savings in income related benefits £ billion
£3 per week to all pensioners over 75	0·61	0·42	0·20
£5 per week to single pensioners	1·15	0·73	0·43
£8 per week to married couple pensioners	1·37	1·10	0·26
£10 per week to any pensioner aged 75 or over	2·03	1·50	0·53

Note: Costs shown use 1990-91 benefit rates.

Local Councillors

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance he has issued to his Department's offices with regard to (a) the new arrangements relating to allowances payable to local authority councillors in general and (b) how the new lump sum payments will be treated in calculating councillors' entitlements to means-tested benefits in particular; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 21 May 1990]: The office of the chief adjudication officer is responsible for issuing guidance to the Department's offices and will be doing so shortly on the treatment of the revised allowances payable to local authority councillors.

These allowances, including any lump sum payments, will continue to be treated as earnings for benefit purposes in the normal way and apportioned on a weekly basis.

Cohabitees

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his best estimate of the savings made by (a) treating cohabitees as a couple for the purpose of claiming benefit and (b) refusing spouse additions to cohabitees' benefits on the basis that they can be paid only to legally married couples; and what proportion of the savings accrue from national insurance and non-contributory benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Current statistical information does not permit us to make such an estimate other than in relation to widow's benefit. In the 12-month period ending 31 March 1990 widows benefit was disqualified on grounds of co-habitation in 2,313 cases. Resulting benefit savings for the same period are estimated to be approximately £1·9 million. All the estimated savings accrue from contributory benefits.

The best estimate of the savings arising from non-payment of spouse additions of benefits where a couple are not legally married is £4·3 million per annum; 0·6 per cent. of the estimated savings accrue from non-contributory, non-income related benefits and the rest relate to national insurance benefits.

Maintenance Orders

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many maintenance orders for the support of children of lone mothers have (a) not been served and (b) have fallen into abeyance because the fathers cannot be traced, for each of the years 1979 to 1989.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

In 1988, 11,280 maintenance orders were made in magistrates courts. The further information sought is not available.

Grants and Loans

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of local offices in Scotland which received additional allocations of moneys for (i) maternity payments, (ii) funeral payments, (iii) cold weather payments, (iv) community care grants, (v) budgeting and (vi) crisis loans, for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what was the additional amount paid for each category and the total additional amount paid.

Mr. Scott: Local offices do not receive specific allocations for maternity payments, funeral payments and cold weather payments. Expenditure is demand led within the provisions contained in class XIV, vote 4.

There were no revised allocations to local offices for the year 1988-89. Information on revised allocations for 1989-90 has been placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Motorway Repairs

72. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the proposed motorway lane rental repair scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In June 1989 I announced that lane rental would be adopted as the norm for maintenance schemes on major strategic motorways and trunk roads. Since then over 10 schemes have been identified as suitable for this form of contract, and it will continue to be adopted on all future schemes amenable to this treatment. Although lane rental costs slightly more, the evidence shows that the additional costs are handsomely recouped from the greatly reduced delay costs to traffic at roadworks on our key routes.

Steel Industry

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if his instruction to the Scottish Development Agency to carry out an analysis of the prospects for the steel industry in Scotland allows it to examine the prospects for an independent steel industry;

(2) if he will give a specific instruction to the Scottish Development Agency to engage in a study of the feasibility of an independent Scottish steel industry based upon British Steel plant and assets in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency has been asked to examine the prospects for the steel industry in Scotland and to seek to identify any opportunities. It is intended that the analysis will be wide ranging and will seek to identify any present and future opportunities in the sector. It would not be appropriate to restrict the scope of this exercise by imposing any prior assumptions about the ownership or control of existing or potential operations in Scotland.

Agency Nurses

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many agency-based nursing and auxiliary staff are currently employed in acute wards of hospitals managed by the Greater Glasgow health board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The board's policy is that agency nurses will be employed to cover for absent staff only when there is no alternative to doing so. The number therefore varies from day to day and I understand that on 5 July, 31·95 whole-time equivalents were employed in acute wards.

Adult Basic Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent each year on a constant price basis on adult basic education in the community since 1979.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally.

European Environment Agency

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Scottish-based organisations which he has recommended for consideration as part of the European Environment Agency network.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The EC regulation establishing the agency was adopted by the Council of Ministers on 7 May 1990 and will take effect once its location has been decided by the Council. Once the agency begins its work, which will not be before that date, we shall be considering the merits of organisations for inclusion in a list of candidates for the agency's information network.

Hillington Skill Centre

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received representations from M. I. Technologue Ltd. about the sale of Hillington skill centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No such representations have been received.

Education Costs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the cost in each education authority of providing a place for each child between five and 11 years; and what additional cost is deemed necessary for each child with special needs in (a) a special school and (b) an integrated unit of a school for children under 11 years;

(2) what is the cost in each education authority of providing a place for each student between 11 and 18 years; and what additional cost is deemed necessary for each child with special needs in (a) a special school and (b) an integrated unit in a secondary school.

Mr. Lang: The available information is given in the table which has been compiled from local authority financial returns. Information on the cost of special education is not recorded separately for primary and secondary age pupils. Expenditure on special units in primary and secondary schools is recorded under special schools, but is not separately identified.

Net current expenditure per pupil in primary, secondary and special schools—1988-89

International Literacy Year

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what special initiatives his Department has taken to support International Literacy Year.

Mr. Lang: None. The Department does, however, provide resources to the Scottish Community Education Council to co-ordinate and develop provisions in adult literacy in Scotland and, in 1989, for the first time, funds were made available to voluntary organisations towards new development projects concerned with adult basic education.

Employment Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken to safeguard basic literacy and numeracy training from budgetary restrictions in the employment training programme.

Mr. Lang: I am satisfied that the Training Agency has sufficient resources to meet the demand for training places for unemployed people with special needs in relation to literacy and/or numeracy.

Care in the Community

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contribution the Scottish Education Department is making to plans for care in the community.

Mr. Lang: The social work services group, which is part of the Scottish Education Department, is responsible for co-ordinating, within the Scottish Office, work on the implementation of the Government's community care policy. This includes the preparation of guidance for local authorities. Four consultation papers have so far been issued, including one on community care planning, and formal guidance will be issued in the light of the comments received.

Health Board Members (Payments)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what payment is made to Mrs Iris Isbister as chairperson of Tayside health board; and whether this is a part-time post.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on Friday 6 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker), Hansard, volume 175, column 733. All health board chairmen are appointed on a part-time basis.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the payments made to each health board member in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health board members currently receive allowances to cover travel, subsistence and loss of remunerative time expenses resulting from board duties.

Mental Welfare Commission

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether civil servants can be appointed to the Mental Welfare Commission.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Section 2(6) of the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984 debars serving civil servants from appointment to the Mental Welfare Commission.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the organisations involved in mental illness and mental handicap that he consulted prior to recommending appointments to the Mental Welfare Commission; and if he will give the dates when they were consulted.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Before my right hon. and learned Friend makes recommendations to the Mental Welfare Commission he must, in accordance with section 2(5) of the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984, consult such bodies as appear to him to be concerned. Most recently, the following bodies were consulted, on 19 June 1989:

Scottish Association for Mental Health
Scottish Society for the Mentally Handicapped
Royal College of Psychiatrists (Scottish Division)
Psychiatric Nurses Association of Scotland
National Schizophrenia Fellowship
British Medical Association
Royal College of General Practitioners
Standing Conference of Royal Colleges and Faculties in Scotland
The Faculty of Advocates
The Law Society of Scotland
British Association of Social Workers
Association of Directors of Social Work
Royal College of Nursing
Edinburgh Association for Mental Health
British Psychological Society
The Church of Scotland Board of Social Responsibility

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what payment is made to Mrs. Iris Isbister as a member of the Mental Welfare Commission.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As a part-time member of the Mental Welfare Commission, Mrs. Isbister is paid an annual fee, currently amounting to £1,420, together with travelling and subsistence expenses.

TRANSPORT

Road Safety

3. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to improve road safety.

Mr. McLoughlin: A wide range of measures to improve road safety have been taken under the umbrella of our "Safety on the Move" campaign. Britain has a good record on road safety. An area of great concern is that of child safety—especially child pedestrians, where there is particular scope for improvement. A sustained programme of measures on child safety was launched in May including proposals to enable local authorities to make residential streets safer. We will be launching a further phase of this campaign concentrating on child pedestrian safety shortly.

Rail Ramblers

5. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding rail ramblers.

Mr. Freeman: I have received no representations about rail ramblers apart from those from the hon. Member and the Lancashire Rail Ramblers Committee.

London-North West Rail Service

14. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on British Rail's proposals to improve the London to the north-west of England main line.

Mr. Freeman: I welcome British Rail's recent announcement of its strategic plans for further improvements on the west coast main line, and I look forward to seeing British Rail's detailed investment case when this comes forward in due course.

London Underground

15. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much is being invested in London Underground over the next three years.

Mr. Freeman: London Underground Ltd. alone is planning to invest approximately £1·7 billion over the next three years. This is more than double in real terms the amount invested over the three years to 1989-90.

66. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of his consideration of foreign investment in underground railways in central London.

Mr. Freeman: I am not aware of any significant foreign interest in underground railways in central London beyond the funding contributions to the Jubilee line extension and the Bank extension of the docklands light railway which have been agreed by Olympia and York.

63. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make more resources available to London Underground for improved passenger security.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have given London Underground Ltd. £15 million to introduce a programme of passenger security measures as recommended in this Department's 1986 report on crime on the London underground. Implementation of this programme is currently under way. London Underground Ltd. will additionally be spending about £80 million over the next 10 years on extending the most successful of these measures throughout the Underground network. London Underground Ltd. funds the Underground division of the British Transport Police, the complement of which has been increased to 400 officers.

45. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the level of investment in London Underground this year; and what the level was in 1984-85.

Mr. Freeman: Investment by London Underground Ltd. will be approaching £400 million in 1990-91. In the financial year 1984-85, when funding was determined by the GLC, the corresponding figure was about £117 million. This represents an increase of 148 per cent. in real terms.

Privately Financed Roads

16. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are for privately financed roads in Essex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The Dartford-Thurrock crossing will be the first major privately financed road this century. In addition, I recently invited views on the suitability of six further possible privately financed schemes. Three of these would serve Essex if the schemes were taken forward: a lower Thames crossing, a new link between Chelmsford and the M25 and a new route parallel to the A127 from the M25 to Rayleigh.

Compulsory House Purchases (Compensation)

17. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to improve present arrangements for compensating house owners where properties are acquired for transport improvement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is presently considering the responses to a consultation paper, containing proposals for improvements to land compensation, issued last year. He intends to bring forward legislation when the parliamentary timetable permits.

Tankers, West Coast

18. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to complete his detailed consideration of the findings of the review of tanker traffic in the deep water route west of the Hebrides and in the Minches.

Mr. McLoughlin: I hope to report my conclusions to the House before the summer recess.

Submarines

19. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current state of studies sponsored by his Department into systems to help submarines avoid fishing nets.

Mr. McLoughlin: A prototype system, based on specifications prepared by the Admiralty Research Establishment (ARE), to help submarines to avoid fishing nets will be tested this summer.

Network SouthEast

20. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the figures for investment in Network SouthEast for 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Freeman: The figures are as follows:

Network SouthEast investment 1988-89—1991-92

	Cash prices £ million
1988-89	300
1989-90	325
1990-91	[1]325
1991-92	[1]415

[1] Planned.

Bus Services

21. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will consider the introduction of regional and national awards for best bus services.

Mr. Freeman: The quality of bus services is a matter for the operators. The Bus and Coach Council already promotes a competition entitled "Britain's Brightest Bus Service".

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

22. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that the cancellation of high-speed train links with the channel tunnel does not damage access of passengers and exports from Scotland to the continent.

Mr. Freeman: The recent announcement related to a particular proposal for a joint venture by British Rail and Eurorail. BR is continuing to develop proposals for a new passenger rail link between the tunnel and London to cater for traffic growth in the longer term. It was never intended that the new line or the high-speed link to the tunnel in France should carry freight. British Rail intends to provide both passenger and freight services to cater for the Scottish market from the outset.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to give his approval to British Rail for investment plans in relation to King's Cross being the international terminal linking the North with the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has not yet submitted its investment plans, which I would not normally expect to see before they get parliamentary approval.

61. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received concerning the need for a fast rail link between Scotland and the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: I have recently received several representations from various parts of the country, including Scotland, about the desirability of fast and efficient rail links to the channel tunnel.

Transport, London

23. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chair of London Transport to discuss future transport strategy in London.

Mr. Parkinson: My hon. Friend the Minister of State and I regularly meet the chairman of London Transport to discuss all aspects of London Transport's operations including its plans for the future.

Public Transport, Manchester

24. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about public transport in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Freeman: This is essentially a matter for the operators and the passenger transport authority and executive. The Government are at present making resources available for two major projects to improve public transport in Manchester, Metrolink and the airport rail link.

M1 (Junction 21)

25. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement regarding traffic congestion at junction 21 of the M1 motorway.

Mr. Parkinson: Works commenced on an interim scheme to reduce congestion at junction 21 of the M1 motorway on 18 June. The scheme will be completed later this year. It will provide relief to the junction until the mid-1990s.

A longer-term improvement at this junction is being investigated as part of the motorway widening and junction improvement scheme announced in the 1989 White Paper "Roads for Prosperity".

Roads, London

26. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a further announcement on the public transport proposals of the London assessment studies.

Mr. Parkinson: We asked British Rail and London Transport in March to give further consideration to public transport proposals recommended by the London assessment studies which were not already under active examination. Announcements will be made after this work has been completed.

British Rail (Land Sales)

28. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total income received by British Rail from the sale of surplus land in (a) 1974, (b) 1979, (c) 1989.

Mr. Freeman: Gross income received by British Rail from the sale of surplus land for each of the years, at constant 1990-91 prices, was as follows:

1974	1979	[1] 1988-89
63	29	299

Roads (Environmental Impact)

29. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made an assessment of the environmental implications of his Department's road building programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The environmental benefits and disadvantages of all schemes are considered carefully. Protecting and enhancing the environment will continue to be a major priority in our plans.

Inner City Transport

30. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to improve transport in the inner cities.

Mr. Parkinson: National road schemes worth £3 billion are under construction or planned to assist the inner cities including major schemes on the A13 to aid revival of London's docklands, the M66 Denton to Middleton scheme and the A69 Newcastle western bypass. Over 100 major local road schemes to assist inner city areas, costing nearly £1 billion, are supported by 50 per cent. transport supplementary grant; examples are the Birmingham heartlands spine road, the Leeds inner ring road and the Haringey north-south route. We provide grant under the Industrial Development Act 1982 to help build access roads to development sites, such as the Meadowhall development in Sheffield and improvement of Aldwarke lane in Rotherham. In February I announced approval for the electrification of the Birmingham cross-city railway line. We are providing grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 for the Manchester Metrolink. The Docklands Light Railway has contributed greatly to the regeneration of London's docklands. It is now being extended westwards to Bank and eastwards to Beckton and we are consolidating the revitalisation of the area with the Jubilee line extension.

Marchioness

31. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the publication of the final report into the sinking of the Marchioness.

Mr. McLoughlin: Solicitors representing next-of-kin and survivors, and others, have written to my right hon. Friend urging publication as soon as possible. My right hon. Friend also saw a deputation of representatives of the Marchioness disaster group on 16 May.

Roads, Yorkshire

32. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects new trunk road provision to serve east-west transportation and movement in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Atkins: There are no proposals at present for a new east-west trunk road in South Yorkshire. Barnsley metropolitan district council has included a proposal for a link between the M1 and the A1, the "Dearne towns link road", in its forward plans. I understand that it hopes to complete the route by the mid-1990s.

Buses (Official Journeys)

33. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions in the last 12 months when he made an official journey by bus in London.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend and I have travelled by bus, underground and rail in London on a number of occasions in the last 12 months.

Air Traffic Control, Wales

34. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about air traffic control over Wales.

Mr. McLoughlin: The control of air traffic in the United Kingdom is the responsibility of the national air traffic services, which is a joint organisation of the Ministry of Defence and the Civil Aviation Authority.

Air traffic over Wales is controlled in precisely the same manner as air traffic over the rest of the United Kingdom. The controlling centre for en route traffic over Wales and much of England is the London air traffic control centre.

M40

35. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the construction of the M40.

Mr. Atkins: Construction work is progressing quickly and we are now working towards a full opening of the route in the spring of 1991.

Buses (Passenger Seat Belts)

36. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has given the bus and coach industry concerning passenger seat belts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State promised the House on 5 June, he met representatives of the Bus and Coach Council on 8 June to discuss the fitting of seat belts in coaches.

The Government believe that operators should provide good quality, easy-to-use retractable seat belts on all seats. Belts are offered for sale by manufacturers, but most operators do not buy them. At the meeting on 8 June, the Bus, and Coach Council undertook to recommend to its members that all new vehicles purchased should in future be equipped with appropriate seat belts on all seats. Officials are meeting the BCC today to explore further how existing vehicles might best be equipped with seat belts.

Bus Miles

37. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of bus miles operated in the United Kingdom in 1974, 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows the number of vehicle kilometres (in millions) operated by buses and coaches in Great Britain.

	1974	1979	1988-89
Local (stage) Services	2,360	2,238	2,416
Other Services	1,102	1,099	1,365
All Services	3,462	3,338	3,781

Data for 1989-90 will not be available until later in the year.

Light Rapid Transit Schemes

38. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to light rapid transit, metro and tramway schemes under construction or proposed.

Mr. Freeman: The docklands light railway is being extended to Bank and Beckton, the Tyne and Wear Metro is being extended to Newcastle airport and work has begun on the Manchester Metrolink, for which the Government are providing grant. Some 40 other light rapid transit schemes have been proposed or are being considered. These include light rail schemes in South Yorkshire, west midlands, and Avon.

Jubilee Line

39. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on proposals for private finance for the construction of the Jubilee line extension.

Mr. Freeman: Olympia and York, Regalian and British Gas have agreed to make contributions towards the costs of construction of the Jubilee line extension.

British Rail (Rental Income)

40. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what rental income was received by British Rail in respect of commercial lettings to private companies in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) 1989.

Mr. Freeman: Gross rental income received by British Rail from commercial lettings to private companies for each of the years, at constant 1990-91 prices, was as follows:

1974	85
1979	91
[1]1988-89	114

Road Accidents

41. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of people killed on Britain's roads in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) 1989.

64. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of people killed on Britain's roads in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) 1989.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
1974	6,876
1989	[1]5,282

[1] Latest provisional estimate.

This 23 per cent. fall in fatalities has been achieved despite an increase of 68 per cent. in total traffic.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of (a) fatal accidents, (b) serious accidents and (c) other accidents on the A36 between Wylye and Plaitford in each of the past five years.

Mr. Atkins: The personal injury accidents recorded over the last five years are as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
(a) fatal accidents	2	2	2	1	5
(b) serious accidents	18	10	16	14	25
(c) slight accidents	89	54	53	55	74

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
Totals	109	66	71	70	104

Unleaded Fuel

42. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of vehicles used unleaded fuel in 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Atkins: The percentage market share enjoyed by unleaded fuel in December of each of the years mentioned was as follows.

1987	0·13
1989	28·34

We do not have figures relating these percentages to numbers of vehicles.

Disabled People

43. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the petition recently presented to him concerning disabled people's access to public transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We fully support the principle of moving towards more accessible vehicles. However, in view of the operational and technical difficulties to be resolved, we believe that the target date of 1992 is unrealistic.

We are currently working on the development of a new generation of low floor buses that can accommodate wheelchair users on regular services. We are concerned that for the benefit of both the operators and the potential passengers such vehicles should be able to provide effective and sustainable services. We have some way to go in the development of these vehicles before we can be sure that those concerns have been met. We hope to start trials on what is likely to be the first in a series of low floor accessible demonstration vehicles later this year.

We are also working with coach manufacturers on design requirements for lifts to be fitted to high floor coaches. For both buses and coaches the most effective way forward is likely to be through Europe-wide legislation.

Bypasses

44. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bypasses will be started or completed this year.

Mr. Atkins: Some 30 bypass schemes with a works cost of over £500 million are programmed to start or be completed this year, totalling over 110 miles of new road. Whether classified as bypasses or not, nearly all new road schemes bring relief to local communities from intrusive through traffic.

Vehicle Emissions

46. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made to reduce vehicle emissions.

Mr. Atkins: I have recently laid before the House regulations which will introduce the strict limits on vehicle emissions which have been agreed by the European Community.

The regulations include for the first time a requirement for the motorist to keep his vehicle in good emissions tune. This has paved the way for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's recent announcement that we propose to include a check on emissions in the MOT test.

Negotiations are now taking place on a further directive to limit emissions from cars. In addition to setting stricter limits for medium cars, the new directive will include provisions on evaporative emissions, durability of emission control equipment and a longer test cycle which includes a new high speed element. I hope the negotiations can be concluded quickly. The timetable is short if the new requirements are to take effect by the end of 1992.

When these new requirements are agreed, it will mean that from 1992 virtually all new petrol-engined cars will have to be equipped with three-way catalysts.

The Commission has also announced recently proposals for tighter limits on gaseous emissions from heavy diesel-engined vehicles and for the introduction of limits on particulate emissions from these vehicles. From what we have seen, the proposals may not go far enough. We are looking for standards similar to the United States 1994 limits by the mid-1990s. These are the strictest standards for heavy diesels being considered anywhere in the world.

British Rail (Quality of Service)

47. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures the Government are taking to improve the quality of service on British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have agreed quality of service objectives with the board which cover, among other things, train reliability and punctuality and, for most subsidised passenger services, passenger loading standards. The details are set out in my right hon. Friend's letter of 19 November to the chairman (Official Report, 19 December 1989, column 227-31).

British Rail has plans to invest £3·7 billion over the next three years, much of which is for new rolling stock and infrastructure works to improve quality of service and cater for growth in demand. I shall be discussing progress with British Rail very shortly.

Rural Transport

48. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of local authorities to discuss transport in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Ministers frequently meet representatives of local authorities to discuss a wide range of issues. The provision of rural transport is a matter for the operators and the local authorities concerned. In addition, the Department of Transport provides £1 million a year for the rural transport development fund to support innovative public transport schemes in rural areas.

A40 Western Avenue

49. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received concerning the cost of the A40 Western avenue improvement at the junction with Long lane, Hillingdon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Since the beginning of May the hon. Member has himself forwarded two letters on behalf of three constituents concerning the estimated cost of the scheme, and the National Farmers Union wrote in support of one of the constituents.

Trolleybuses

50. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any proposals to introduce trolleybus routes.

Mr. Freeman: The West Yorkshire and South Yorkshire passenger transport executives have both obtained powers to introduce trolleybus routes in their areas. The West Yorkshire PTE has put worked up proposals to the Department for an experimental route in Bradford, and I recently agreed to provide credit approvals for the costs of the infrastructure.

Women Travellers

51. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss new plans to improve the safety of women.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has frequently discussed passenger safety with the chairman and his predecessor and expects to do so in further meetings. Much has already been done to improve passenger security including better lighting at stations and station car parks. Closed circuit television has been installed where appropriate. The British Transport Police have increased patrols at likely trouble spots and BR is working on a standard specification for customer security in co-operation with the police.

56. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make public transport more attractive to women.

Mr. Freeman: Such matters are primarily for the transport operators. The Government welcome any efforts to make public transport more attractive to all types of users, and potential users.

A13

52. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to commence on the A13 trunk road improvement between the M25 and Dagenham.

Mr. Atkins: In spring 1992, subject to the satisfactory completion of the remaining statutory procedures.

Transport Investment

53. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the level of investment approved by Government in all types of transport for the next three years.

Mr. Atkins: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 23 April this year.

Rail Links, Europe

54. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the impact of rail links into Europe on all regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: The opening of the channel tunnel will be a great opportunity for the railways to compete more effectively in the international passenger and freight markets and to bring extra choice of services to all parts of the United Kingdom.

British Rail (Discussions)

55. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what was discussed.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of British Rail on 27 June for one of their regular discussions.

59. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has regular meetings with the chairman of British Rail.

Central Line

57. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total amount of planned investment in new stock on the Central line by London Underground Ltd.

Mr. Freeman: About £350 million. This is the biggest rolling stock order ever placed by London Underground, and is part of the £700 million modernisation of the Central line which the Government approved in 1988. The 85 new trains, along with the rest of the programme, will substantially increase peak capacity, improve regularity of services, and reduce journey time.

Transport Supplementary Grant

58. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the increase in real terms in transport supplementary grant for local authorities in 1990-91.

Mr. Atkins: The provision for transport supplementary grant in class VII, vote 5 for 1990-91 is £233,125,000, an increase of 7·3 per cent. in real terms on the corresponding provision for 1989-90.

Street Works

60. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further representations he has received concerning his proposals to introduce legislation to implement the recommendations of the Horne committee.

Mr. Atkins: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 11 June 1990 at column 20.

British Rail (Investment)

62. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the level of investment in British Rail over the next three years.

Mr. Freeman: BR plans to invest some £3·7 billion over the three financial years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Rail Services

65. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage further private sector participation in the provision of rail services.

Mr. Freeman: In December 1989 the Government set the British Railways Board the objective of increasing further the contribution of the private sector where this enabled more cost-effective and competitive services to be provided. For the longer term we are continuing to consider the privatisation of British Rail.

Rail Electrification

67. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of railway line have now been electrified; and what estimate he has as to the amount of electrification due to take place over the next five years.

Mr. Freeman: At 31 March 1990, BR had 2,830 route miles electrified. BR's 1989 plan proposed electrification of a further 560 route miles by 1993-94, three quarters of which have already been authorised. Major electrification projects are expected to include Cambridge to King's Lynn, the Birmingham cross-city link and the final stages of the east coast main line electrification.

Channel Tunnel

68. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the sites for channel tunnel depots in the regions.

Mr. Freeman: This is a commercial matter for British Rail.

69. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he expects the first train to travel through the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for Eurotunnel. Its projected completion of the tunnel system is 15 June 1993.

70. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Minister last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss the channel tunnel terminal at Waterloo.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's approval for BR's investment at Waterloo was announced on 18 May.

Road Maintenance

71. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the increase in capital spending on national road maintenance between 1974 to 1979 and 1979 to 1990.

Mr. Atkins: Capital spending on motorway and trunk road maintenance in the years 1975 to 1990 is set out in the table below. Before 1975 capital and current expenditure were not separately recorded. Capital spending on road maintenance includes roads renewal, bridges renewal, and the purchase of vehicles and equipment.

Financial year	Capital spending £ million (cash)
1976-77	29·5

Aircraft (Vapour Levels)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 302, what advice he has received from Professor Hoskins on vapour levels and aircraft.

Mr. McLoughlin: None as yet. The necessary basic data are currently being assembled.

Fishing Boats

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to station one inspector-surveyor to check small fishing boats at either Lowestoft or Great Yarmouth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The location of all fishing vessel surveyor posts, including that vacant at the Great Yarmouth office, is presently under review. A decision on the future location of such posts will be made shortly.

Level Crossings

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last 10 years the number of accidents occurring in the immediate vicinity of automatically opening locally monitored level crossings, specifying for each year the number of such incidents which involved (a) loss of life, (b) personal injury and (c) damage to property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The following table shows for each year in the period 1979-88, the number of automatic open crossings locally monitored (AOCLs) on British Railways only, the number of accidents, and the number of casualties on both BR and other railways. The latter are shown in brackets. Where the information is available, I have shown damage to property. We do not have details of road traffic accidents near a level crossing, which do not affect the operation of the level crossing or the safety of a train.

The reports on 72 of these accidents show that the road vehicle driver failed to obey the "stop" road traffic signals. Of the other four, one accident was caused when a lorry skidded on ice, one was caused when a car drove in front of a Tyne and Wear Metro train proceeding slowly over a crossing as a result of a signal failure, two were caused by train drivers not following the set procedures for crossing a road when there is a signal failure.

British Rail is undertaking a programme of improvements to AOCLs in accordance with the recommendations made by Professor P. F. Stott to make the signs and signals even more conspicuous.

Year	Number AOCL	Number of accidents	Number dead	Number injured	Property damaged

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number and locations of uncontrolled pedestrian and vehicular level crossings on the British Rail system; whether he plans any discussions with the chairman of British Rail about additional safety devices at such crossings; if he will make additional funds available for the installation of such devices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: At the end of 1988, the most recent year for which detailed figures are currently available, there were 2,213 uncontrolled footpath crossings and 5,721 uncontrolled vehicular crossings, the majority of which are on private roads.

My Department's published requirements for level crossings lay down safety criteria for open crossings on public roads which are lightly but regularly used. Other vehicular crossings used by very low levels of local traffic are provided with user-worked gates or barriers in accordance with the requirements. The requirements do not cover private accommodation or occupation crossings which may be accessible to the public, but the railways inspectorate and British Rail have agreed safety criteria for such crossings and a programme of implementation is in progress.

The inspectorate will be reviewing the use of footpath crossings with British Rail to define criteria for practical and cost-effective measures to improve safety. The chairman and I meet regularly; safety is his top priority.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list incidents involving unmanned level crossings, involving risk to the public, in the past two years.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows the number of accidents and "systems failures" at the various types of unmanned crossings during 1987 and 1988, the most recent years for which full figures are currently available, together with total crossing numbers. "Systems failures" are occasions when a controlled crossing fails to operate currently but no accident occurs. Safety procedures for failures, laid down in the authorising statutory orders, are designed to minimise risks to the public. There are, of course, no records of occasions on which crossing users put themselves at risk—for example, by ignoring the flashing red traffic signals which warn of an approaching train—but where no accident occurs.

Crossing Type	Number in use 1987	Number in use 1988	Number of accidents 1987	Number of accidents 1988	Number of failures 1987	Number of failures 1988

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 63, whether any further consultation with chambers of commerce about TECs has taken place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department liaises closely with the Association of British Chambers of Commerce about the development of training and enterprise councils (TECs). TECs themselves work closely with local chambers of commerce, and a number of business leaders who are also senior office holders from chambers have accepted invitations from TECs to serve on their boards.

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the date of publication of the study on employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The report of the efficiency scrutiny of take-up of Employment Department programmes, including employment training, will be made publicly available before the summer recess.

Women Workers

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment has been made of the reasons why mothers undertake paid employment; and what proportion indicate that without such work their family income would fall below poverty levels.

Mr. Nicholls: The 1984 British social attitudes survey asked women in paid work (of at least 10 hours per week) with a child aged under 16 to give their main reason for working. The results were as follows:

	per cent.
Need money for basic essentials	50
To earn money to buy extras	22
Enjoy working	17
To follow my career	4
To earn money of my own	3
For the company of other people	2
For a change from my children or housework	2
Working is the normal thing to do	1

Percentages total more than 100 per cent. due to rounding

There is no generally accepted definition of what constitutes a poverty level. No evidence is available on the proportion of mothers who indicate that their family income would fall below poverty levels without paid employment.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 375, on minimum wage effects, what other assumptions on the restoration of pay differentials besides that given in the note deposited in the Library have been considered; on what evidence they are based; and what would have been the impact of a minimum wage set at half average earnings on each of these assumptions.

Mr. Nicholls: The estimates produced by my Department of the job losses arising from the introduction of a national minimum wage assumed, on a central estimate, that differentials for those employees earning more than the minimum would be half-restored.

To establish a lower limit for the impact of a national minimum wage on jobs, a second estimate was produced on the basis of there being no restoration of differentials at all. My Department estimates that, in this case, about 100,000 jobs would be lost.

Also a third estimate, to establish an upper limit, was produced on the basis of there being a full restoration of differentials. My Department estimates that, in this case, about 1·4 million jobs would be lost.

Both the assumptions of no restoration and full restoration are implausible.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) each of the research studies and (b) all other sources of evidence which his Department used in determining the assumptions contained in the note placed in the Library entitled "Estimating the Effect of a National Minimum Wage"; and if he will identify separately the evidence and research used to formulate the assumption that differentials are half-restored in percentage terms following the introduction of a national minimum wage.

Mr. Nicholls: The assumptions made by officials in my Department in constructing the estimate of the effect of a national minimum wage, were derived mainly from the published Treasury paper "The Relationship between Employment and Wages: Empirical Evidence for the United Kingdom" (January 1985) and data from the New Earnings Survey (1989).

The Treasury paper estimates the relationship between employment and real wages in the United Kingdom, and the relationship expected between increases in money wages and real wages given an unchanged nominal framework. The new earnings survey each year indicates the earnings distribution prevailing in the country at a stated time.

Apart from those reviewed in the Treasury paper, other papers studied included:

From The Dole Queue to the Sweatshop: Minimum Wages and Government Policy—Henry Neuburger (Low Pay Unit, 1984);

Minimum Wage Fixing—Gerald Starr (ILO 1981);

On the Employment Effects of Introducing a National Minimum Wage In the UK—Stephen Bazen (University of Kent Working Paper 88/5, 1988);

Wages Floors in the Clothing Industry 1950-81—Phillip Morgan, Don Paterson, and Robert Barrie (Department of Employment Research Paper No. 52, 1985);

Low Pay or No Pay?—David Forrest and S.R. Dennison (Institute of Economic Affairs Hobart Paper 101, 1984);

The assumption that differentials are half-restored in percentage terms is a justified central estimate. Similar assumptions are made in some of the work listed above.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assumptions about the effects of increased productivity and competitiveness as firms switch to higher wage and higher skill strategies were taken into account in the estimates contained in the note placed in the Library entitled "Estimating the Effect of a National Minimum Wage".

Mr. Nicholls: The estimates, produced by my Department, of the job losses arising from the introduction of a national minimum wage were not based on any explicit assumptions about the effects of higher real wages on productivity, competitiveness, and employers' skill strategies.

However, the estimates utilise results from the Treasury model (published in the Treasury paper "The Relationship between Employment and Wages: Empirical Evidence for the United Kingdom", January 1985), which are based on the past performance of the economy and take into account substitution between labour and capital as their relative prices alter and the consequent effects on productivity and competitiveness.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, to the hon. Member for Stretford, Official Report, column 375, what assumptions about increased demand for consumer goods by those receiving higher pay, as a result of the introduction of a statutory minimum wage, have been taken into account in reaching the conclusions on the effects of the introduction of a minimum wage.

Mr. Nicholls: The estimates, produced by my Department, of the job losses arising from the introduction of a national minimum wage used results from simulations reviewed in the published Treasury paper "The Relationship between Employment and Wages: Empirical Evidence for the United Kingdom" (HM Treasury, January 1985).

These Treasury estimates of the impact of changes in real wages on employment do take account of the effects on consumer demand of changes in real wages, as well as the offsetting effects on company sector demand which arise from corresponding changes in their costs.

Training

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what assessment he has made of the financial contribution of employers in 1990-91 to the training of young people with special needs;

(2) what assessment he has made of employer contributions to youth training since the renegotiation of training contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 2 July at column 472.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans for an autumn advertising campaign on training.

Mr. Eggar: Discussions are continuing within the Department on publicity matters, but no decisions have been taken on an autumn training campaign.

Youth Training (Payment)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the payment in arrears of voluntary sector training providers of youth training.

Mr. Nicholls: Voluntary sector providers make an important contribution to youth training. The level and timing of funding is a matter for negotiation between training providers and Training Agency area offices or training and enterprise councils.

Community Industry Scheme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers joining the community industry scheme for the years 1987-88 to 1989-90; and what are the plans for the years 1990-91 to 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

Year	Entrants	Agreed places
1987-88	9,844	7,000
1988-89	10,793	7,000
1989-90	13,094	7,000

An average of 6,200 places nationally have been agreed with the training provider, Community Industry Ltd., for 1990-91. No plans have been made for 1991-92 to 1992-93.

Publicity

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total estimated expenditure on Employment Department Group publicity in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: The total estimated expenditure on Employment Department Group publicity in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 is set out in table 6.31 in the Public Expenditure White Paper, Cm. 1006.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy that the Employment Department Group publicity will continue to be based on the principles set out in the public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 1006, page 27, paragraph 95.

Mr. Tim Eggar: It is and will remain my policy that Employment Department Group publicity will continue to be based on paragraph 95 of the Public Expenditure White Paper.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will (a) list the companies involved in the Employment Department Group's publicity in 1990-91 and (b) estimate the total expenditure to be paid to each of them.

Mr. Eggar: Companies involved in the Employment Department Group's publicity in 1990-91 are Saatchi & Saatchi; Gold Greenless Trott; Industrial Publicity Services; Ogilvy & Mather; Delaney Fletcher Slaymaker Delaney and Bozell; FCO; BMP DDB; WBH Advertising; Yellowhammer.

It is not yet possible to estimate how much will be spent with each agency.

Private Office (Expenditure)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the total expenditure of his private office in 1988-89, 1989-90 and the estimated expenditure in 1990-91.

Mr. Eggar: Information on the expenditure of individual Ministers' private offices is not available. Total expenditure on Ministers, senior management and their offices is set out below.

Year	Expenditure (000s)
[1]1990-91	£1,592
1988-89	£1,535

Note: Figures include salary costs of Ministers, the permanent secretary and two deputy secretaries but exclude accommodation costs.

Youth Training

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the proportion of trainees under the youth training scheme or youth training who fail to complete their full entitlement of training.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) on Monday 30 April at column 541-42.

Skill Centre Sale, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions he has given to King and Company, chartered surveyors, to sell his interest in the land and buildings occupied by the skill centre at Western avenue, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: King and Company has been instructed to market the Government's remaining skill centre property interests—which includes the freehold site at Western avenue, Cardiff—and to recommend to the Secretary of State which offer or offers to accept. As an aid to marketing the properties, King and Company has also been instructed to advise as appropriate on planning consents, dilapidations and other property matters.

Small Businesses

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from small businesses urging prompt payment by Government Departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have received a number of representations in the past year on the general subject of prompt payment, some of which referred to Government Departments' payment practices. However, I have received only six representations from small businesses which refer to specific cases of late payment by Government Departments. In only one of these cases has it been shown that a Department was directly responsible for the late payment of a debt. The delay was due to an administrative error.

The Government as a major purchaser of supplies and services, worth about £15 billion each year, have a good record on prompt payment which demonstrates our commitment to the policy that all payments should be made on time. Furthermore, I am always prepared to take up any specific examples of late payment by Government Departments to small firms that are brought to my attention.

Employment Service Agency

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the replies to hon. Members' questions from Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Hon. Members are offered the option of having placed in the Library of the House replies from the chief executive of the Employment Service Agency.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Artioposthia Triangulata

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the distribution in Britain of artioposthia triangulata; what assessment he has made about its impact on the nature ecosystem; and if he has any proposals for control measures.

Mr. Curry: The New Zealand flat worm needs damp conditions and is unlikely to survive in well drained agricultural land. It is sporadically sighted in Scotland but has not been found in England since 1965.

North Sea (Nitrogen)

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the percentage of the nitrogen load in the North sea off the British coast which has been caused by (a) agriculture and (b) forestry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Of the total nitrogen inputs to the North sea from all sources, some 80 per cent. is attributable to the inflow of water from the north Atlantic and English channel. The remainder is attributable to inputs from all countries via the atmosphere and rivers together with a small contribution—1 per cent.—from direct dumping and discharges. Of the total inputs of nitrogen, the contribution from United Kingdom agriculture and forestry, both via the atmosphere and rivers is estimated to be around 2 per cent. The greater part of this input derives from agriculture rather than forestry.

Coastal Protection

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on his Department's role in protecting Southwold, Reydon, Walberswick and surrounding villages from the sea (a) currently, (b) in the next financial year and (c) till the year 2000;

(2) if he will make it his policy urgently to assess the criteria for saving domestic dwellings from the sea to take account equally of environmental factors, cost benefits and housing.

Mr. Curry: A scheme under the Coast Protection Act 1949 to protect Southwold harbour is with the Department for approval. Many additional schemes are being undertaken in this financial year following the winter storms and they also have priority, so some schemes approved this year may be delayed into the next financial year.

I am not aware of any plans to protect Reydon, Walberswick and the surrounding villages. However, if a scheme satisfying our normal technical, economic and environmental criteria is submitted to the Department it will be given full consideration.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will bring forward an urgent scheme to compensate people who lost their homes to the sea in cases where environmental considerations outweigh coast protection schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Works carried out to protect land under the terms of the Coast Protection Act 1949 require my prior consent. In deciding whether to give such consent our policy is to require a proposal to be technically sound, cost effective and environmentally sympathetic, and we have no plans to change that policy.

We are not aware of any case in which a coast protection authority has decided not to seek our approval for works because environmental considerations were judged to override protection of homes. No proposal submitted to us has been denied our consent solely by reason of environmental considerations. The Coast Protection Act does not provide for compensation to be paid for losses arising from coastal erosion and we have no plans to change our policy in this respect.

Pollution Control

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money is allocated under the capital grant scheme for pollution control measures for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In England, provision for the farm and conservation grant scheme as a whole in 1990-91 is £23·23 million. There is no separate allocation for pollution control measures which are among several other types of investment eligible under the scheme.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money has been paid out under the farm capital grants scheme for pollution control measures for (a) February 1989 until March 1990 and (b) April 1990 until the present day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Grant paid in England for pollution control measures under the farm and conservation grant scheme for the periods requested is as follows:

(a) February 1989 to March 1990—£5,252,524.
(b) April to May 1990[1]—£2,760,577.

[1] Figures for June not yet available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms, by county basis, have taken up grants under the capital grant scheme for farm pollution control measures since the scheme was introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the number of items claimed in the category of waste facilities under the farm and conservation grant scheme in each division of the Ministry.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fur Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who is empowered to slaughter mink and foxes on fur farms.

Mr. Maclean: There are no restrictions on who may slaughter fur-bearing animals on farms. The operation must, however, be done with due care and humanity as required by the Protection of Animals Act 1911 and without unnecessary pain or unnecessary distress as required by the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968.

Animal Feed

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to ensure that animal feed materials are not contaminated with agents harmful to humans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The safety standards of animal feed materials are laid down by EC legislation and enacted within the United Kingdom by the Agriculture Act 1970 and Feeding Stuff Regulations 1988, as amended. It is an offence for a manufacturer to sell an animal feed which is unsafe for the animal or final consumer.

Cattle (Antibiotics)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he proposes to authorise the use of the antibiotics Avoparcin and Virginiamycin in cattle in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Both antibiotics are authorised for use in cattle by EC Directive 70/524 concerning additives in feedingstuffs. Avoparcin is already licensed for this use in the United Kingdom, but, as yet, I have received no application in respect of virginiamycin for use in cattle.

Egg Producers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to provide to those local authorities who request them his list of egg producers and his list of egg producers who have registered with him since 2 April.

Mr. Maclean: Information is provided to local authorities on producers who register with the Department under the Poultry Laying Flocks (Testing and Registration etc) Order 1989. The Department does not hold a comprehensive list of egg producers.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reports he received during June from laboratories conducting microbiological testing for salmonella of samples from hens where no growth was found.

Mr. Maclean: Full details of tests carried out in June are not available, but, from the reports received, the proportion of samples in which no microbial growth was reported was in the region of 5 per cent. The tests in question are designed to establish whether salmonella is present and will not necessarily show growth of other bacteria even when these are present.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any evidence of the abuse of the competitive exclusion product for salmonella developed by the Bristol Food Research Institute; and if he has any proposals to regulate its use.

Mr. Maclean: We have no such evidence. If such a product were to be sold or supplied for a medicinal purpose, a licence would be required to be issued under the Medicines Act 1968. No such licence is currently in force for the product to which the hon. Member refers.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many poultry flocks with over 100 laying hens are registered in each of the counties of England and Wales; and how many of these have notified him of the results of testing for salmonella between (a) 1 January and 21 March and (b) 1 April and 30 June.

Mr. Maclean: Up to 27 June a total of 2,435 laying flocks have been registered in England and Wales. The details in the table refer to animal health offices, where registrations are dealt with, rather than counties.

Registered persons are required to notify my Department with the results of tests for salmonella at 12-weekly intervals, commencing with the date after 2 April on which they first receive reports of any such tests. This information is being received and collated at the present time.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what names are used in European Community countries other than the United Kingdom to describe bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and whether this disease is present or endemic under these names in any European Community country.

Mr. Maclean: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy has been a notifiable disease in the European Community under that name since 1 April 1990 and to date has been confirmed only in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make it his policy to ban the tethering of sows in stalls; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has made an assessment of the animal welfare implications of the use of narrow stalls to contain sows; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has made an assessment of the space required to allow a sow to perform her natural functions, including grooming, turning and stretching; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Farm Animal Welfare Council has undertaken an assessment of pig production systems. It concluded that stall and tether systems for dry sows fail to meet important welfare criteria including freedom to exercise and to display most normal behaviour patterns. It recommended that new stall or tether systems should be banned and that existing systems of this type should be phased out as soon as the Government are content that welfare related problems have been eliminated from the emerging alternative systems and that they are commercially viable.

The Government have accepted these conclusions and are seeking to have them implemented through European Community legislation as soon as possible.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the licensing requirements which bovine somatotropin met before milk containing bovine somatotropin was allowed to be offered for sale to the general public.

Mr. Maclean: All milk contains natural BST. Milk from cows treated with manufactured BST may be offered for sale to the public if the treatment was carried out in accordance with an animal test certificate—ATC. Before ATCs were issued the Veterinary Products Committee examined all available data relating to the BST products concerned and concluded that they were of good quality and that their use in field trials would pose no threat to the health of consumers, to persons handling the product or to the environment.

Field Sports

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to promote field sports such as fox hunting, deer hunting and hare hunting and coursing as a method of vermin control or for any other reason.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

Hunting is one of several methods by which the populations of certain wild animals can be controlled. The Government's position is that the choice of method is a matter for the landowner and that participation in field sports is a matter for individual decision and conscience.

THE ARTS

British Theatre Association

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he intends to take to secure accommodation and future support for the British Theatre Association and its library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I am in touch with the British Theatre Association and other interested parties and understand that a number of options are now being considered which should help to secure the future of the library. I have asked to be kept informed of developments.

PRIME MINISTER

Political Union

Q12. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what decision was made at the Dublin meeting of the European Council on United Kingdom participation in a conference on political union.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the statement my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made to this House on 28 June. The United Kingdom will participate fully in the preparation for and in discussion at the intergovernmental conference.

European Parliament

Q131. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what recent discussions she has had with the leaders of other European Community states concerning the structure, functions and powers of the European Parliament; and if she will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made to this House on 28 June about the European Council meeting in Dublin, at which the roles of the European Parliament and national parliaments were discussed in general terms.

South Africa

Q205. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the outcome of her discussions with Mr. Nelson Mandela with regard to the United Kingdom's contribution to the emergence of a just and equitable society in South Africa.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister had a very good exchange of views with Mr. Mandela on 4 July. Mr. Mandela expressed his appreciation of our efforts to secure his release and accepted our sincerity and determination to get rid of apartheid. My right hon. Friend's discussions with Mr. Mandela concentrated on examining the political and economic way ahead in South Africa.

Divorce

Q226. Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister whether the Government have any plans to make divorce easier or more difficult to obtain (a) in England and (b) in Scotland.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

It would be premature to say what reform might be brought forward in England and Wales ahead of the English Law Commission's report later this year on divorce. In considering any proposals the Government will be concerned to support marriage and the family and to ensure that those contemplating divorce recognise in advance the consequences of divorce, especially for their children, and wherever possible either draw back from it or at least make arrangements to provide a firm basis for the future upbringing and support of their children.

The Scottish Law Commission issued a report on reform of the ground for divorce in 1989 and recommended that the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 should be amended.

These proposals are embodied in clause 53 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Bill which is presently before the House of Commons.

Engagements

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 July.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 July.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is attending the economic summit in Houston.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Interest Rates

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the reduced availability of German and Japanese capital on the international market and its effect on long-term interest rates in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Data for the current and capital accounts of Japan and Germany are published by the IMF in "International Financial Statistics". The availability of capital from Japan and Germany is one of a number of domestic and international influences on United Kingdom long-term interest rates.

Royal Mint

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to the royal mint of the recent investigation into staff salaries carried out by Hay MSL.

Mr. Ryder: The cost of this study is commercially confidential.

EC Contributions

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the various published estimates or projections by Her Majesty's Government of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Community in 1989; and if he will indicate the date on which each such estimate or projection was made.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 5 July 1990]: The "Statement on the 1990 Community Budget"—Cm. 1059—which was published on 26 April 1990, included the outturn of £2,315 million for the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Community in 1989. The previous forecast for the 1989 net contribution, £1,966 million, was contained in the "Statement on the 1989 Community Budget"—Cm. 680—published on 27 April 1989. In addition, the Central Statistical Office balance of payments press notices of 13 March and 13 June 1990 gave, on a slightly different basis from the annual statements, an estimated outturn of £2,301 million for the United Kingdom's 1989 net balance with the European Community. These forecasts are on a calendar year basis.

The annual public expenditure White Paper includes calendar year forecasts and outturns of United Kingdom contributions and receipts arising out of successive budgets, irrespective of when receipts and payments occur.

VAT

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he proposes to reconsider the list of items considered for exemption from value added tax.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 9 July 1990]: No.

Government Shareholdings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the answer of 11 December, Official Report, column 463, on (a) the golden shares and (b) other shares currently owned by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 9 July 1990]: The Government hold special shares in the following companies: Britoil, Cable and Wireless; Jaguar; Sealink; British Telecom; British Aerospace; VSEL Consortium; British Gas; Rolls-Royce; BAA; British Steel; Anglian Water; Northumbrian Water; North West Water; Severn Trent; South West Water; Thames Water; Welsh Water; Wessex Water; and Yorkshire Water.

Details of the Government's other shareholdings are given in the "Consolidated Fund and National Loans Fund Accounts 1988-89: Supplementary Statements" (HC45). The 1989-90 supplementary statements will be laid before the House before the end of the year. In the case of the 10 water plcs, the Water (Target Investment Limit) Order 1990, laid before the House on 21 May, gave the maximum limits, by percentage, of the Government's residual shareholding. The current market value of the shareholdings can be established from the International Stock Exchange's official list.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General how many booklets have been printed advising the public on the European agreement on the transmission of applications for legal aid; and where they have been distributed.

The Attorney-General: No booklets advising the public on the European agreement on the transmission of applications for legal aid have been produced.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General whether his Department has sponsored any advertising of the European agreement on the transmission of applications for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: The Legal Aid Board, which is responsible for publicising the legal aid scheme, has not sponsored any advertising of the European agreement on the transmission of applications for legal aid.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration the Legal Aid Board has given to publicising the European agreement on the transmission of applications for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: In paragraph 2.17 of its annual report, which was laid before Parliament on 25 June 1990, the Legal Aid Board reported that it was reviewing its publicity requirements. The board expects to complete its review during the current financial year and publicity for the European agreement on transmission of applications for legal aid is one of the topics to be considered.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General how many United Kingdom citizens have received legal aid in foreign countries under the European agreement on the transmission of applications for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: Applications made by United Kingdom citizens under the European agreement on transmission of legal aid applications during the year 1 January to 31 December 1989 as follows:

	Transmitted	[1]Granted
England and Wales	30	10
Northern Ireland	3	n/a
Scotland	1	0
United Kingdom	34	10

[1] Information received so far. Information relating to Northern Ireland is not available.

Information relating to earlier years is not readily available.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General whether his Department has supplied legal firms offering the legal aid scheme with details of the European agreement on the transmission of applications for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: The Legal Aid Board publishes the "Legal Aid Handbook" each year. This guide to practitioners includes at note 52 of the notes for guidance detailed instructions on the preparation of applications including information on payment arrangements.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give the budget for publicising the European agreement on the transmission of applications for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: The Legal Aid Board is currently reviewing its publicity requirements and although at present no part of its publicity budget is spent on publicising the European agreement on the transmission of applications for legal aid consideration will be given to this as part of the review.

TRANSPORT

Bus Fares

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the most recent information his Department has on the level of bus fares since deregulation.

Mr. Freeman: The latest information on local bus fares is in the table.

	Great Britain (outside London)
	English metropolitan areas	Other areas[1]	All outside London
Percentage increase in fares between 1985-86 and 1989

Average fare per mile in 1989 (pence)	14p	15p	15p
Average journey length	2·9 miles	3·6 miles	3·3 miles

[1] English shire counties, Scotland and Wales.
[2] A sharp rise from a low level following the introduction of precept control in 1986-87. In 1989, fare levels in English metropolitan areas remained below those elsewhere.
[3] Using the retail prices index, which increased by 20 per cent., between 1985-86 and 1989.
[4] 1985-86 national travel survey data adjusted using the appropriate stage fares index.

Speed Limiters

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of coaches in the United Kingdom are now fitted with speed limiters; if he will make a statement about the benefits which have been secured for road users; and what is his policy with regard to speed limiters being fitted to heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Atkins: One hundred per cent. of those first used in Great Britain after April 1984. By next April, all coaches first used since April 1974 will also have to be fitted with limiters, and I am glad that the Bus and Coach Council is urging its members to act ahead of this deadline. It benefits all road users' safety if maximum speed limits are observed. We are currently looking into the merits of the European Commission proposal that speed limiters should also be required on heavy goods vehicles.

Air Services

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects his recent agreement with the United States Government in respect of air services to take effect.

Mr. McLoughlin: Documentation is being completed as quickly as possible and the agreement should come into full effect immediately thereafter. It will however probably take further time for airlines to plan and introduce new services.

Oil Field Workers (Insurance)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory provisions cover the insuring of oil field workers carried to rigs by hélicopters.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. However any helicopter operator serving United Kingdom oil and gas fields on the North sea requires an air transport licence from the Civil Aviation Authority. In deciding whether to grant such a licence the authority takes into account the financial arrangements of the operator, including the insurance arrangements which have been made.

Airlines

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that the operating opportunities for American airlines within the United Kingdom and Europe are reciprocated for British airlines in the United States of America.

Mr. McLoughlin: We and the United States Government are jointly to study liberalisation of United Kingdom-United States air services arrangements: issues of the sort my hon. Friend raises are bound to be discussed.

Driving Test

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what revisions are planned to the Department of Transport driving test in preparation for 1992.

Mr. Atkins: The European Commission published its proposals for a second directive on driver licensing in 1989. My Department consulted subsequently with interested parties on the implications of these proposals for driver testing and training. I shall announce the outcome of that consultation shortly.

Driving Instructors

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to restrict the register of approved driving instructors.

Mr. Atkins: Over the past two years the qualifying examinations for the register have been made more thorough. There are no plans to make any further alterations or to restrict entry in order to limit numbers in the profession.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list of categories of people excluded from becoming Department of Transport approved driving instructors.

Mr. Atkins: The grounds on which the registrar of approved driving instructors may refuse to enter a person's name in the register are given in section 125 of the Road Traffic Act 1988.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are (a) the number of people admitted to the register of approved driving instructors and (b) the total number registered in each year since 1980.

Mr. Atkins: The numbers at the end of each calendar year were as follows:

	New ADIs	Numbers on the register
1980	2,490	23,562
1981	2,476	25,098
1982	2,262	26,101
1983	2,281	26,942
1984	2,574	28,090
1985	2,290	28,675
1986	3,147	30,069
1987	2,862	31,336
1988	[1]1,925	[2]32,381

Internal Service Operations

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the countries with which reciprocal internal United Kingdom and Europe service operations have been agreed.

Mr. McLoughlin: No air services agreements containing cabotage rights exist between the United Kingdom and European partners.

Urban Roads

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the environmental measures taken to protect residents when trunk roads have been constructed or updated in urban areas since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: Measures to mitigate the impact of a new or improved road, and to enhance road safety, form an integral part of our planning and design. Each scheme is considered separately, and there is a wide range of possible measures appropriate in different circumstances. We aim to improve on our existing good practice in minimising the impact of new roads.

Local residents are consulted on route proposals at an early stage. Increased use of discretionary powers to provide noise insulation to dwellings was announced earlier this year.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many sections of trunk roads passing through urban areas have been constructed or updated in the west midlands since 1979; and if he will give the daily flow of (a) cars, (b) vans and light lorries and (c) heavy long distance lorries for the sections of these trunk roads which have (i) the heaviest and (ii) the lightest flow of traffic.

Mr. Atkins: There has been no major new on-line construction or other significant updating of trunk roads in urban areas of the west midlands since 1979. Small-scale new works and improvements to ease congestion or improve road safety are too numerous to list in detail.

A50, Stoke-on-Trent

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current estimate of the daily flow of (a) cars, (b) vans and light lorries and (c) heavy long distance lorries on the A50 at the Meir crossroads, Stoke-on-Trent; and what was the date of the traffic survey on which the estimate was based.

Mr. Atkins: Based on a survey carried out on 22 March 1990, the 12-hour two-way flow on the A50 east of Meir is:

	Number
Cars	14,648
Van and light commercial vehicles	2,760
Medium and heavy commercial vehicles	3,038
TOTAL	20,446

The estimated annual average daily 24-hour flow is 27,193.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the forecast figures for the daily flow of (a) cars, (b) vans and light lorries and (c) heavy long distance lorries on the A50 at the Meir crossroads, Stoke-on-Trent, in the year 2000.

Mr. Atkins: The forecast annual average daily 24-hours two-way flow on the A50 east of Meir is:

	2000 Low	2000 High
Cars and vans	31,800	34,300
Other goods vehicles (>30 cwt)	5,900	6,400
TOTAL	37,700	40,700

The forecast proportion of long distance other goods vehicles trips at Meir is approximately 36 per cent.

Winchester Bypass

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) deaths, (b) serious injuries and (c) minor injuries have been recorded for each of the last 10 years in respect of accidents on the Winchester bypass; and what is the recorded accident rate per 1,000 vehicle miles travelled.

Mr. Atkins: The only information readily available is as follows:

(a) The number of recorded accidents on the A33 Winchester bypass from its junction with A272 (M3) to A31 Compton in each of the last six years were:

	Fatal injuries	Serious injuries	Slight injuries
1984	2	8	35
1985	3	8	23
1986	0	12	30
1987	1	5	34
1988	1	3	22

(b) the estimated accident rate over the last three years is 0·0002 per 1,000 vehicles miles travelled.

InterCity Routes

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the impact of Government investment on the fastest scheduled journey time on InterCity routes in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) in the current year.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 July 1990]: InterCity journey times improved significantly between 1974 and 1979 as a result of investment in high speed diesel trains approved in 1973. Electrification approved in 1984 is bringing further reductions in journey times on the east coast main line.

A1

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the projected traffic flow figures for vehicles by category travelling north on the A1 from Newcastle following its upgrading to motorway status south of Newcastle.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 9 July 1990]: A precise assessment has not been carried out for projected traffic flow figures for vehicles by category travelling north from Newcastle upon Tyne following the upgrading of the A1. However, a study for routes south of Edinburgh commissioned by the Scottish Office indicated that completion of a motorway link to Newcastle would not lead to any substantial transfer of traffic with the majority of long-distance travelling from England to Scotland continuing to use the west coast motorway system.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the projected traffic flow figures for vehicles by category travelling north on the A1 from Newcastle for each of the next 10 years.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 9 July 1990]: Traffic predictions allow for both low and high growth. Based upon 1989 values the annual average daily traffic prediction on the A1 north of Newcastle are as follows:

Location	Year	Low	High
Between Newcastle and Morpeth	1991	21,350	21,970
	1992	21,780	22,700
	1993	22,210	23,430
	1994	22,630	24,170
	1995	23,060	24,900
	1996	23,490	25,630
	1997	23,910	26,370
	1998	24,340	27,100
	1999	24,770	27,830
	2000	25,190	28,570

The proportions of heavy goods vehicles are expected to range from 8 to 12 per cent.

Location	Year	Low	High
Between Alnwick and Berwick	1991	6,770	6,970
	1992	6,900	7,200
	1993	7,040	7,430
	1994	7,180	7,670
	1995	7,310	7,900
	1996	7,450	8,130
	1997	7,580	8,370
	1998	7,720	8,600
	1999	7,850	8,830
	2000	7,990	9,070

The proportions of heavy goods vehicles are expected to range from 25 to 39 per cent.

Planning

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now refund the costs and other expenses funded by the Laven Glaze Group, South Brent, Dartmoor, as a result of the abortive planning appeal made by Shell UK Oil Limited, regarding land adjacent to Carew filling station which ended on 6 September 1989; and if he will make a statement as to the reason for the delay in carrying out his obligations.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 9 July 1990]: My Department has no legal obligation to refund the costs of the South Brent and Lower Glaze Group in relation to this planning appeal by Shell UK Ltd. My Department has, however, decided to pay 50 per cent. of the appeal costs and is paying the objectors' costs in full, on behalf of itself and Shell. It will also pay half of Shell's costs, when these are quantified fully, less the element already paid to the objectors. The parties will have been informed by letter of this decision and the payments will follow.

Catalytic Converters

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make it compulsory for catalytic converters to be fitted to all new cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 9 July 1990]: Vehicle regulations of this sort need agreement within the European Economic Community. Now that this has been reached, the regulations laid before the House last month will mean that from 1993 onwards effectively all new petrol engined cars will need to be fitted with catalysts. Details are given in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 8 June at columns 722-23.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Courthouse, Basildon

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the opening of the new courthouse in Basildon is on schedule.

Mr. John Patten: Yes. I am very pleased to confirm that the official opening is due to take place on 30 November 1990, as arranged.

Private Security Industry

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to introduce a system of statutory regulation for the private security industry;

(2) if he will publish the membership of the Home Office working group on self-regulation of the private security industry and the date when the group's report will be published.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering, in the light of the report of the working group on the self-regulation of the private security industry, a range of options for improving the regulation of the industry. The working group included representatives from the Home Office, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Association of Chief Police Officers, the British Security Industry Association, the International Professional Security Association and the National Supervisory Council for Intruder Alarms.

When consideration of this issue has been completed, we will decide what circulation to give the working group's report.

Guard Dogs

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions exist in respect of the length of time a guard dog can work before it is rested.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The use of guard dogs is regulated by the Guard Dogs Act 1975. Section 1 of the Act defines the circumstances in which a guard dog must be secured or under the control of a handler. Neither this section, nor the remaining sections of the Act which have not been brought into force, include explicit restrictions on the length of time for which a guard dog can work before it is rested.

Forensic Pathology

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now make a statement on the Government's response to the recent working party on forensic pathology.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are still considering our response to the working party's report and we will make an announcement as soon as possible.

Child Care

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the strategy of the ministerial groups on women's issues to encourage the growth of child care facilities.

Mr. John Patten: The ministerial group on women's issues believes that high quality in the provision of child care should be encouraged. To this end, the group has agreed a range of measures designed to maintain and improve the standards of child care for those parents who choose to combine their family responsibilities with employment opportunities.

Summaries of the initiatives on child care agreed by the group are contained in the press releases issued after the group's meetings in April 1989 and February 1990, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Lottery Tickets

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the directors of the state lottery companies in Germany regarding the sending of lottery tickets to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply of my right hon. Friend the Minister of State on 8 May at column 30 to his earlier question.

As I have further explained in correspondence with my hon. Friend, the directors have also suggested that action by them to penalise agents who continued to try to promote the lotteries here might be disputed by the agents on the ground that European Community law overrides both our 1976 Act and the lotteries' own operating rules; although there appears to be no specific or related judicial decision on this, it is our view that the prohibitions on foreign lotteries in the 1976 Act are compatible with EC law; Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have impounded huge quantities of promotional material for the lotteries sent here by post; and I understand that some court proceedings are imminent in this country relating to the seizure of some of this material.

Community Charge Defaulters, Coventry

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases the Coventry courts have so far processed against poll tax defaulters.

Mr. John Patten: No information on the processing of community charge enforcement cases in the magistrates courts is yet available. The Home Office is conducting a survey of the workload consequences for magistrates courts; the first return covers the period 1 April to 30 September 1990, and results will be available at the end of 1990 or beginning of 1991.

Management Consultants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each of the contracts awarded by his Department to management consultants on which work is currently in progress (a) when they started, (b) when they are expected to be completed and (c) their cost.

Mr. Waddington: Information about contract costs still extant is a matter of commercial confidentiality which it would not be proper to disclose. The details of contracts with management consultants on which work is currently in progress are as follows:

Management consultants	Contract details	Start	Finish
Coopers Lybrand Deloitte	Study and estimate of costs associated with the start-up and running of a magistrates courts agency.	1 May 1990	31 August 1990

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long from arrival at Lunar house or the nationality department at Liverpool it takes for a letter to reach a case worker.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At Lunar house the current average time taken for non-directly addressed letters to reach caseworkers is eight working days from initial receipt and 10 working days for citizenship applications which are routed via accounts branch for the extraction of fees. Directly addressed items reach caseworkers the same day. At the Liverpool nationality office letters are opened and passed to caseworkers within 24 hours.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of applicants for naturalisation, registration or immigration die before a decision is made on their case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it takes for 100 letters to be opened at Lunar house and the nationality department at Liverpool.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On average it takes each of the 20 staff in the Lunar house post room engaged on this work five minutes to open, date, stamp, check contents, identify any omissions, remove any valuables, prepare acknowledgement and route one item to its next destination. No information is available for correspondence opening averages in the Liverpool nationality office.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of naturalisation, registration or immigration can be dealt with concurrently within the same office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to provide any such estimate.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of letters received at Lunar house, Croydon, and the nationality department at Liverpool on the first day of each month for (a) 1988, (b) 1989 and (c) 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following is the information:

Letters received and opened in IND post room, Lunar house

	1988	1989	1990
January	[1]1,716	1,394	1,496

October	1,957	1,999	—
November	2,099	2,057	—
December	1,398	1,464	—

[1] These figures do not include an estimated 14,044 applications received in the first quarter of 1988 which, because of the then backlog were not counted on a daily basis.

Notes:

The table does not include letters addressed to individuals, rooms or groups which currently average 1,400 per day. These are not opened in the post room but redirected on receipt to the addressee.

The information requested is not available in respect of the Liverpool nationality office.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the percentage of all cases where the applicant for naturalisation, immigration or registration is between the ages of one and five years, and every interval of five years through 80 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only readily available information relates to applicants for citizenship whose dates of birth are recorded on the nationality division computer. The number of applicants for citizenship in each age band, expressed as a percentage of the number of outstanding citizenship applications is as follows:

Age band Years	percentage
1 to 5	2·3
6 to 10	3·9
11 to 15	4·9
16 to 20	6·2
21 to 25	8·0
26 to 30	14·2
31 to 35	17·1
36 to 40	14·2

66 to 70	1·5
76 to 80	0·3

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outstanding immigration applications there are at Lunar house; what time savings in dealing with applications from (a) students, (b) family members in the United Kingdom applying for variation of stay, (c) settlement entry clearance applications referred from overseas posts and (d) asylum-seekers have been achieved by the 1988 changes in procedures and practice; and what are the average times applicants in each category might expect to wait before a decision.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of March 1990, there were about 28,000 cases in the immigration caseworking groups, including eastern European cases, and referred entry clearance applications, the majority of which were under consideration or the subject of further inquiries and about 16,300 cases in the refugee unit.

A number of changes in procedure and practice have been introduced over the last two years in order to reduce the level of outstanding applications and reduce the time taken to process them. Information on administrative time savings as a result of these changes is not available in the form requested.

The estimated average length of time between the receipt of an application and the decision, for cases decided in caseworking groups and the public inquiry offices, in the first quarter of 1990 was two and a half months for students and nine and a half months for refugee status. Information on average waiting times for family members in the United Kingdom for variation of leave and for settlement entry clearance applications referred from overseas posts is not available.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from hon. Members during each quarter of 1989 and the first quarter of 1990 to delay the removal of passengers refused entry at British ports of entry; and, for each period, how many representations resulted in (i) the delay of the passenger's removal for up to a week, (ii) the delay of the passenger's removal for more than a week and (iii) reversal of the immigration officer's decision.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 12 March at column 16.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) single entry and (b) multiple entry visit visas were (i) received, (ii) granted, (iii) refused initially and (iv) granted at appeal at each post in the Indian sub-continent, Ghana, Nigeria, Turkey and Jamaica in each quarter of 1989 and the first quarter of 1990; and what was the delay between application and interview for those whose applications were felt to need a second or long interview at each of the above posts in (1) June 1989, (2) January 1990 and (3) June 1990 or the nearest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on applications in Jamaica for a visit entry clearance, and separate information on applications in the other countries for single entry and multiple entry visit visas, are not available centrally. The other information requested is given in the tables.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outstanding applications there were at Lunar house and the nationality department at Liverpool in each month of 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his earlier question on 25 June at column 36. The nationality figures in that reply include applications outstanding at Liverpool.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of (a) Jamaica, (b) Turkey, (c) Morocco, (d) the United States of America, (e) Australia, (f) Malaysia, (g) Hong Kong, (h) Guyana, (i) Trinidad, (j) Colombia, (k) Algeria, (l) Barbados and (m) Tunisia were (i) granted and (ii) refused permission to enter the United Kingdom at ports of entry, in each quarter since January 1989 to the nearest available date.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were received into prison department establishments under Immigration Act powers during (a) 1988 and (b) 1989, by individual prison establishment; what was the average daily population of persons so detained in each of those years; what was the average length of time spent in detention by persons so detained in each of those years; and whether he will give a breakdown by nationality of persons so detained for each of those years.

Mr. Mellor: Information about detainees received into prison service establishments in England and Wales under the Immigration Act 1971 in 1988 is given by establishment and nationality in the tables. Similar information for 1989 is not yet available. The average period of detention completed by such persons in 1989 is provisionally estimated as nearly five weeks. The average population was 157 in 1989, including persons originally received for a criminal offence. The average population and the average length of detention of detainees in prison service establishments in 1988 were published in tables 1.1 and 6.6 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales"—Cm 825—a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained under Immigration Act powers for a period of more than two months on completion of a custodial sentence during (a) 1988, (b) 1989 and (c) the first quarter of 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The figures, excluding deportation cases who served a custodial sentence of seven days or less for whom the information is not readily available, are as follows:

	Persons
1988	11
1989	16
[1]1990	2

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were recommended for deportation with no custodial sentence during 1989 and the first quarter of 1990; and in how many such cases the courts directed release (a) subject to conditions and (b) without conditions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During 1989, a total of 86 persons were recommended for deportation by the courts with no custodial sentence and a total of 13 persons during the first quarter of 1990. The other information requested is no longer collected centrally and is not readily available.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons detained under Immigration Act powers applied to his Department to be allowed to depart voluntarily under the supervised departure provisions of the immigration rules in each quarter since January 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The readily available information on the numbers of persons removed under the supervised departure procedures for 1989 is published in table 14 of the statistical bulletin issue 8/90 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Fourth Quarter and Year 1989" and more recently in table 18 of the Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration Statistics United Kingdom 1989"—Cm. 1124—copies of both of which are in the Library. The available information for 1990 is given in the table. Most of these persons would have been detained prior to departure. A number would have been subject to restrictions as an alternative to detention but such cases could be separately identified only at disproportionate cost.

Late Night Trading

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to legitimise the existing pattern of late night trading.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his question on 23 May at columns 178-79.

Injuries (Police Custody)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people by ethnic origin have (a) died and (b) been injured while detained in police custody over the past 12 months and the past 24 months, or the nearest equivalent periods for which figures are available; and what were the causes of these deaths and injuries, broken down by the ethnic origin of the victims.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information about persons who have died in police custody, including the cause of death, is published in the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary and the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. No record is kept of the person's ethnic origin. Information about injuries is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Political Asylum

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will provide a breakdown by nationality of the numbers of passengers seeking political asylum who were detained under Immigration Act powers in 1989 in (a) prison department establishments and (b) immigration detention accommodation;

(2) how many passengers seeking political asylum in (a) 1988, (b) 1989 and (c) 1990 up to the nearest available date were granted temporary admission.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance in order to seek asylum in the United Kingdom were (a) received and (b) granted, by country, during 1989 and the first quarter of 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on applications for asylum in the United Kingdom made abroad is given in the table:

[2] Figures rounded to the nearest 5, with "*" = 1 or 2.

[3] Grants in the time periods shown do not necessarily relate to applications made in those periods.

Police (Damages Claims)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims for damages against the police have been lodged in the past 12 months or the last complete period of 12 months for which figures are available; and if he will give in the most convenient form (a) the ethnic origin of the claimants, (b) the average level of damages claimed and (c) the reasons for the claims.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Poland

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what steps he is taking to encourage joint ventures by British companies in Poland;

(2) what steps he is taking to encourage the establishment of commercial and business know-how funds in Poland.

Mrs. Chalker: With the agreement of the Polish authorities our highest priorities for the know-how fund are areas directly related to the fostering of a market driven economy—banking and financial services, energy, industrial regeneration, management, accountancy and the teaching of English. A substantial programme of work is now being implemented. In addition, we are introducing schemes under the know-how fund to support pre-investment feasibility studies and the training of potential east European joint venture partners. A number of proposals under these schemes relating to Poland have been received and are being considered.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manhole Covers

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the total volume of manhole covers imported from India in 1989; and what is that amount as a percentage of the United Kingdom foundries' production for the same period;

(2) what was the tonnage of manhole covers imported from India in December 1989; and what information he has on the percentage that were defective.

Mr. Redwood: Manhole covers are not separately identified within the United Kingdom customs tariff but fall within a general category "cast articles of non-malleable cast-iron for sewage, water, etc, systems" which also covers a number of other items such as cast iron pipes. A breakdown of the detailed products within the category would involve disproportionate costs.

Imports from India for the category as a whole were 6,149 metric tonnes in 1989.

United Kingdom production data for manhole covers are also not separately available from official statistics, but the industry has estimated that current production amounts to about 80,000 tonnes per annum. No information is available on the proportion of manhole covers that were defective.

Brewing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will request a report from the Director General of Fair Trading on the implementation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on brewing.

Mr. Redwood: When announcing decisions on the MMC report, we made it clear that the Director General of Fair Trading—DGFT—will be assessing the effectiveness of the measures once the Supply of Beer Orders have had time to take full effect. Under the Supply of Beer (Tied Estate) Order, brewers have until 1 November 1992 to complete the process of releasing premises from ties, although certain measures took effect on 1 May 1990. The DGFT is ready to receive any complaints or evidence of anti-competitive practices. If he thinks at any stage that further steps are necessary I will consider what action is appropriate following advice from him. In the meantime the Department and the Office of Fair Trading are maintaining cose contact on developments.

Structural Adjustments Initiative

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what impact the agreement between Japan and the United States of America at the structural adjustments initiative talks will have upon the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: Both Japan and the United States have made it clear that any trade benefits which result from the structural impediments initiative will be available multilaterally. The United Kingdom attaches particular importance to the continued movement from exports led to domestic demand-led growth in Japan and to the development of an environment within Japan which enables foreign companies more easily to acquire and develop businesses there.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals exist to harmonise the Securities and Investments Board and its Group of Seven equivalents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. For legal and historical reasons, national regulatory regimes are very diverse. However, globalisation of financial markets is leading to a growing international awareness of the importance of increased co-operation between national regulators and enforcement agencies and of the need for mechanisms to ensure that regulatory disparities do not hinder growth of cross-border trade. The Government, through the participation in the work of the International Organisation of Securities Commission and through direct contacts with other countries' governments and regulators, are seeking opportunities for moves towards arrangements for the mutual recognition of comparable regulatory regimes. The European Community is following a similar approach in the proposed investment services directive which will create the single European market in investment services.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the Group of Seven organisations and the powers which are comparable to the five United Kingdom self-regulatory organisations responsible to the Securities and Investments Boards.

Mr. Redwood: I have extensive information on the regimes and powers of the securities regulatory authorities of the Group of Seven countries both through regular, frequent bilateral contact between my Department and these authorities and through the valuable work of international organisations such as IOSCO—the International Organisation for Securities Commissions.

Calder Valley Trade and Industry Exhibition

Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to Calder Valley trade and industry to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 16 July until 20 July.

Textile Mill Closures

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many mill closures have been reported in the textile and clothing industry in the past 12 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Industry sources indicate that there were 45 mill closures in the 12 months to May 1990.

Regional Policies

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce new regional policies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to introduce new regional policies. The Government remain committed to an effective regional policy and will continue to make the necessary resources available.

Office of Fair Trading

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the investigations currently being conducted by the Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Redwood: It is not practicable to do so. The Director General of Fair Trading's Office conducts a considerable number of inquiries under the competition, consumer, companies and financial services legislation for which he is responsible. It is in the nature of such inquiries that much of this work must be carried out on a confidential basis.

Arms Conversion

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to set up an arms conversion agency.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have nothing to add to the replies I have given to the hon. Member's earlier questions on this subject.

Financial Services

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry with whom the duty lies to vet financial products which are on offer as to whether they constitute investments under the terms of the Financial Services Act or the Banking Act.

Mr. Redwood: It is the responsibility of the person proposing to offer a financial product to assess whether that product falls within the scope of either the Financial Services Act or the Banking Act, or both, and to obtain any necessary authorisations before offering it. In the case of the Financial Services Act, the primary responsibility for investigating and, if appropriate, taking action against those offering a financial product without the requisite authorisation lies with the Securities and Investments Board. In respect of the Banking Act, the responsibility lies with the Bank of England.

Companies Act 1989

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further plans he has to implement the provisions of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: I signed an order yesterday which commences certain provisions of the Act. Section 130—company seals—section 138—directors' loans—and section 211(2) and (3)—building societies—will commence on 31 July 1990. Section 129—membership of holding company—section 144—definition of subsidiary—and section 207—order-making power for transfer of securities—will come into force on 1 November 1990. The order provides for certain transitional and saving provisions for sections 138, 144 and 211(2) and (3). I have placed a copy of the order in the Library.

Import and Export Licences

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences he has granted under the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939 in each year since 1979.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 2 July 1990]: Under the powers conferred upon him by the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has granted import and export licences as follows:

	Number
Import licences
1985	144,951
1986	186,869

	Number
1987	191,532
1988	214,522
1989	200,746
1990[1]	79,693
Export licences
1987	97,809
1988	89,800
1989	72,527
1990[2]	20,969

[1] To end of June.
[2] To end of May.

Complete figures for import and export licences issued prior to these dates are not readily available, and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

From time to time my Department also issues open general licences for importers and exporters, which preclude the need to obtain individual licences for certain goods.

Import Restrictions

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there are any restrictions on the import of turpentine and oil of camphor.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 2 July 1990]: There are no quantitative restrictions on imports to the United Kingdom of turpentine or oil of camphor. Under the common customs tariff of the Communities, import duties ranging from 3·2 to 7·1 per cent. would be payable on these products although in the case of certain types of turpentine duties have been partially or totally suspended.

ECGD Insurance Service Group

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the full analysis of the costs of operating the insurance service group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 5 July 1990]: ECGD's published annual trading accounts include an analysis of the costs of operating ECGD as a whole but do not separately identify the costs of operating the insurance services group. Appropriate information will be made available to potential investors when final decisions have been taken about the proposed method of sale of the insurance services group.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what indemnification was provided against litigation arising out of the loss of MV Derbyshire; when the indemnity was agreed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 July 1990]: Under the terms of an indemnity given at the time of the privatisation of Swan Hunter Shipbuilders in January 1986, British Shipbuilders assumed responsibility for all claims made against Swan Hunter in relation to all vessels delivered prior to the sale of the yard. I do not intend to make a statement at this time.

Uruguay Round

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the meetings of the Uruguay round at which the United Kingdom has been represented and the names of the United Kingdom representatives on each occasion.

Mr. Redwood: The United Kingdom participates in the GATT Uruguay round as a member of the European Community, and is represented at meetings by the European Commission. United Kingdom officials also attend all formal meetings as observers.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the United Kingdom's policy in respect of eliminating farming subsidies via the Uruguay round; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

All parties to the GATT round negotiation have agreed the long-term objective. It is to provide "substantial progressive reductions in agricultural support and protection sustained over an agreed period of time, resulting in correcting and preventing restrictions and distortions in world agricultural markets".

The United Kingdom attaches great importance to the success of the round as a whole, of which agriculture is a key element; and we are working hard with our EC partners and others to achieve this.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. and Mrs. Konin

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Russians about their failure to grant an exit visa to Mr. and Mrs. Leo Konin of Moscow.

Mr. Waldegrave: We can certainly raise the case of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Konin with the Soviet authorities, but in order to make our representations most effective we shall need further details.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to (a) encourage educational, economic, social and cultural links with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, (b) enable the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to open a mission in the United Kingdom and (c) end the international isolation of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We do not recognise North Korea as a state and consequently have no official dealings with any authorities in North Korea. But we impose no restrictions on educational, trade and other informal links. We welcome the resumption of contacts between South and North Korea on 3 July.

El Salvador

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he envisages any role for Her Majesty's Government in the election process in El Salvador later this year.

Mr. Sainsbury: The nature of the arrangements for the elections due in El Salvador in March 1991 is under discussion in talks between the Government of El Salvador and representatives of the FMLN. It should become clearer, in the light of the outcome of these talks, what role the international community might play.

Malawi

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reply he has sent to the letter to him from the Rev. John Harvey about Mr. Orton Chirwa and Mrs. Vera Chirwa, held incommunicado in a Malawi prison.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will be sending the hon. Member a copy of my reply.

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for entry clearance as woking holidaymakers have been (a) received, (b) granted and (c) refused in (i) India, (ii) Bangladesh, (iii) Australia and (iv) Canada, during 1989 and 1990 to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is as follows:

	Received	Withdrawn	Granted	Refused
(i) India 1989	3	1	0	2
January to June 1990	1	0	0	1
(ii) Bangladesh	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—

January to June 1990	1,202	12	1,182	2

[1] Accurate figures are not available: the numbers are believed to be minimal.

Legal Aid

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what details are made available by consulate staff to United Kingdom citizens seeking legal aid in foreign countries;

(2) approximately how many United Kingdom citizens visiting United Kingdom consulates in foreign countries have been advised on the availability of legal aid.

Mr. Sainsbury: Consular officers can advise British nationals who inquire whether legal aid is available and how to apply. No record is kept of the number of such inquiries received.

Contras (Demobilisation)

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received on the demobilisation of the Contras; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Demobilisation of the Contras was completed on 29 June, by which time 19,369 men had been demobilised in Nicaragua. A further 2,607 have been demobilised in Honduras. Some 17,000 weapons have been collected and destroyed. The prospects for peace and stability in Nicaragua have been greatly enhanced by this successful operation, and I congratulate all concerned with it, in particular the United Nations force responsible—ONUCA.

Voting Statistics

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his reply of 29 June, Official Report, column 384, if he will list in one table and in descending order the percentage of the population entitled to vote who voted for the main governing party in each NATO and Warsaw pact country.

EMPLOYMENT

Written Answers

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make it his policy that, henceforth, written answers from his Department will be published as before.

Mr. Eggar: Recent changes to the way that written parliamentary questions are answered by Ministers in this Department have been in the context of the establishment of the Employment Service as an executive agency and of training and enterprise councils. The arrangements for responding to inquiries from hon. Members were described in the booklets that were sent in April to right hon. and hon. Members entitled "The Employment Service: The Handling of MP's Inquiries and Parliamentary Questions" and "Guidelines on the handling of representations by members of parliament about the activities of Training and Enterprise Councils". I refer the hon. Lady to the answer on 21 May, Official Report, columns 145-52.

Local Offices

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people registered unemployed fortnightly and quarterly, at the part-time benefit signing office in Ferryhill, County Durham, during its last month of operation;

(2) what arrangements will be made to cover the transport costs of claimants affected by the closure of the part-time benefit signing office in Ferryhill, County Durham;

(3) what are the latest figures for the number of people who register unemployed, by individual office and by region, on a fortnightly and quarterly basis, at the part-time unemployment benefit offices now in operation;

(4) how many people registered unemployed fortnightly and quarterly at the part-time unemployment offices closed between April 1985 and April 1990, for each office and by region;

(5) what was the estimated annual savings incurred by the closure of part-time unemployment benefit offices between April 1985 and April 1990, for each office and by region.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Women

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of women work in the United Kingdom; and what are the comparable figures in European countries.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest comparable figures are given in the table. At that time 57 per cent. of women of working age—14-64—in the United Kingdom were in employment; only Denmark had a higher percentage.

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of self-employed people are women; and what was the percentage in 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: In December 1989, the latest date for which estimates are available, self-employed women represented 24 per cent. of the total self-employed in the United Kingdom, compared with 19 per cent. in June 1979.

Working Hours

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what restrictions exist on the length of time an employee may work before he or she is legally entitled to rest.

Mr. Nicholls: In general, these are matters for agreement between employers and their employees or their representatives, but all employers have a general duty under section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, the health, safety and welfare at work of all their employees. This means they cannot normally require people to work excessive hours or unsuitable shift patterns likely to lead to ill health or accidents caused by fatigue. Work schedules should also allow for adequate rest periods. There are also particular restrictions on the periods that may be worked without a rest by heavy vehicle drivers, aircrews and workers covered by the Shops Act 1950.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which bodies are being consulted on his consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities".

Mr. Eggar: I look forward to receiving comments from all interested parties on the consultative document. Copies have been sent to a wide range of organisations and individuals; including the all-party disablement group, the Select Committee on Employment, the National Advisory Council on Employment of Disabled People, committees for the employment of disabled people, organisations of and for people with disabilities, providers of employment and training opportunities for people with disabilities, the CBI, the TUC, local authorities and professional bodies with an interest in the employment and training of people with disabilities. Copies of the document are available to anyone who wishes to comment.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many parliamentary questions, since 1 April he has answered and, of that number, how many he (a) arranged a reply from the Employment Service agency's chief executive direct to the hon. Member concerned, (b) offered to write direct to the hon. Member himself, (c) referred the hon. Member to a document in the Library and (d) declined to answer because of disproportionate cost; and what were the comparable figures for the same period in 1988-89.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested in the period between 1 April and 6 July is set out in the table.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when individual local education authorities were provided with their allocated budget for TVEI extension for 1991-92; and if he will publish them.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1990]: Education authorities have not yet been given their budgets for TVEI extension for 1991-92.

WALES

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total amount paid to farmers under the environmentally sensitive area scheme in each of the designated areas in the year to 31 March; how much was reimbursed by the European Economic Community; and when he expects to be able to assess any savings made under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. David Hunt: Participants in the ESA schemes in the Cambrian mountains and the Lleyn peninsula received £478,000 and £228,000 respectively in 1989-90. The payments attract 25 per cent. reimbursement from EC Funds—FEOGA. The economic studies which will provide information on any change in support costs under the CAP are not yet complete.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the emoluments of (a) chairmen and women, (b) vice-chairmen and women, (c) board members and (d) chief executives of non-departmental public bodies in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The emoluments of (a) chairmen and women, (b) vice-chairmen and women and (c) board members are shown in "Public Bodies 1989", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The emoluments of chief executives (or equivalents) of the executive non-departmental public bodies in Wales are as follows:

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those chairmen and women of non-departmental public bodies in Wales who are at the same time vice-chairmen or women of other such bodies in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Mr. J. D. Allen CBE is chairman of Housing for Wales and deputy chairman of the Land Authority for Wales.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he next expects to convene a meeting with the chairmen and women of the non-departmental public bodies in Wales;

(2) when he next expects to convene a meeting of the non-departmental public bodies in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I meet the chairmen of the executive non-departmental public bodies for which I am responsible individually as and when necessary and not collectively.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to exclude chairmen and women and vice-chairmen and women of one non-departmental public body in Wales from being chosen as chairmen or women or vice-chairmen or women of any other such bodies.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many are on waiting lists for accommodation in each district authority area in Wales; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the average percentage rise in house prices, by district authority area in Wales, annually in the last 10 years and (b) the current average house price in each district authority.

Mr. Grist: Average house prices are available only for Wales as a whole and relate to building society borrowers only. The average selling price of dwellings in Wales in the first quarter of 1990 was £44,324. The annual percentage rises in average price are given in the table[1].

Health Authority Funding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he will take to improve the financial basis of Gwynedd area health authority.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 4 July 1990, at columns 578-79.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit (a) Clwyd, (b) Gwent, (c) Mid-Glamorgan, (d) West Glamorgan, (e) Powys, (f) Gwynedd, (g) South Glamorgan, (h) Dyfed and (i) South Pembrokeshire area health authorities to discuss problems associated with underfunding.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend hopes to visit each of the district health authorities in Wales over the coming months and will expect to hear, at first hand, how the authorities are managing the record levels of resource provision in real terms which have been made available to them under this Government.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will institute a reassessment of the funding of health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Health authorities in Wales have received a revenue cash increase averaging 7·8 per cent. over last year —1989-90. This increase together with the resources which authorities are expected to unlock by cash improvement programmes and income generation schemes totalling a further 1·3 per cent. should be sufficient to meet anticipated inflation and provide for further service developments. Provision for the next year will be considered in the course of this year's public expenditure survey. However the NHS and Community Care Act 1990 requires changes in the way health services are to be provided and funded in future. This has necessitated a review of the resource allocation methodology to enable health authorities to be funded as procurers of services rather than, as at present, as providers of services. At the same time the method of allocating capital is being reviewed to take account of the new arrangements. Consultation on the proposals for change will take place over the next six months. The new arrangements will be phased in from next year for revenue and from 1992-93 for capital.

Health Authorities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many health authorities he has visited in Wales.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has not visited any health authorities in Wales to date, but hopes to visit all of them over the coming months. He is today meeting health authority and FPC chairmen.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local education authorities he has met in Wales since his appointment as Secretary of State.

Sir Wyn Roberts: To date I have met a number of chairmen in the course of my visits to schools and my regular meetings with the Wales Advisory Board for Local Authority Higher Education.

Teacher Unions

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which teacher unions he has met since becoming Secretary of State.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have not met with the teacher unions since May. However a meeting has been arranged with representatives of the NAS-UWT (Wales) on 7 September.

Reading

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken since 1979, and what initiatives he intends to take, to improve reading ability in the schools of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since 1979 the Department has supported a number of surveys and research into reading ability. Since 1983 all reports by Her Majesty's Inspectorate have been published which include, for individual schools, an assessment of reading. One of the aims of the national curriculum is to improve reading standards. The programmes of study for both English and Welsh will lead to attainment targets in reading.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales from which bodies he receives advice on the teaching of reading in the schools in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Our main source of advice is Her Majesty's Inspectorate but we also receive reports on reading from research projects specifically funded by the Welsh Office.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how prevalent in schools in Wales is the look-say technique of the teaching of reading; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The look and say technique is used in many schools but most infants' teachers are eclectic in their teaching of reading and use the approach which best meets the individual child's needs. It is unusual to find schools exclusively committed to one method of teaching children to read.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to assess the level of reading ability in schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Assessment is an integral part of the national curriculum and the progamme of study for both Welsh and English will lead to an assessment of a pupil's reading ability. Additionally, HM inspectorate will continue to monitor and assess pupils' attainments in reading throughout primary schooling as part of their normal inspection programme.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent assessment he has made of the standard of reading ability in (a) infant schools and (b) primary schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In recent years, about 40 Her Majesty's inspectorate reports on individual schools have been published annually and there have also been a number of schools sampled in surveys.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what means he has measured reading ability in the schools of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my replies to him early today.

Parent Teacher Associations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to meet the Parent Teachers Association Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no present plans to do so.

HM Inspectorate of Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met Her Majesty's inspectorate in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: HM inspectorate is part of the Welsh Office and my right hon. Friend meets and is advised by officials as and when required.

Earnings

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish average gross weekly earnings for (a) full-time adult men, (b) full-time adult women and (c) all adults in Powys for (i) 1987, (ii) 1988 and (iii) 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: The average gross weekly earnings of full-time males in Powys in 1988 was £191·20. No separate data is available for males and females in the other years requested due to the small sample sizes for Powys used in the new earnings survey. The average gross weekly earnings of all adults in full-time employment in Powys in 1988 and 1989 were £182·20 and £206·20 respectively: figures for 1987 are not available.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish average taxable weekly earnings for full-time adult (a) women and (b) men in Powys for (1) 1987, (2) 1988 and (3) 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: Estimates of taxable income at county level are not presently available.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish average (a) gross weekly earnings for full-time adult men working in manual occupations and (b) disposable weekly earnings for adult men, in Powys for (1) 1987, (2) 1988 and (3) 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: Reliable estimates or average gross weekly earnings for full-time adult men working in manual occupations in Powys are not available from the new earnings survey.

In 1988 the average disposable weekly earnings for adult men in full-time employment in Powys was £160·50, calculated on the basis set out in table 48 of "Welsh Economic Trends", No. 11, 1987. There are no reliable figures available using this definition for 1987 or 1989. Estimates for all full-time men are not available.

Water Quality

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the reasons for the decrease between 1980 and 1988 in the frequency of sampling carried out to determine the quality of potable water in Wales as shown in table 2.04 of the environmental digest for Wales No. 4 1988-89.

Mr. Grist: This was a matter for the respective water authorities. The Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations prescribe the sampling regime now to be followed by water companies to monitor the quality of water supplied for domestic purposes.

Paper Recycling

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what quantity of paper was reclaimed in Wales in total for each of the years from 1983 to 1988.

Mr. Grist: Information on waste paper reclamation is not collected centrally. The British Waste Paper Association produces the following statistics, on a United Kingdom basis only. Waste paper collection is not measured directly, but as a function of United Kingdom mill use, imports and exports.

Bathing Water

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the causes of the reduction in sampling of non-EC identified beaches in South Glamorgan as set out in table 2.11 of the environmental digest for Wales No. 4 1988-89.

Mr. Grist: This was a matter for the Welsh water authority and is now a matter for the National Rivers Authority.

Inflation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of inflation in those costs falling on (a) district councils and (b) county councils in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 9 July 1990, at column 59.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of inflation in the current financial year in respect of costs falling on the national health service in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I have made no such estimate. I refer the hon. Gentleman to my right hon. Friend's answer of 9 July 1990. Health authorities are advised each year by the Welsh Office of the general inflation forecast made by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement. It is for individual health authorities to assess the impact of pay and price changes on their own programmes, and to budget accordingly.

No figures for cost inflation falling on health authorities in Wales are produced by the Welsh Office.

National Health Service Reform

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether there are any documents, publications or advice notes in relation to (a) reforms of the national health service and (b) community care which arise from work commissioned or assisted by his Department which are not contained in the list referred to in his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 298.

Mr. Grist: No. The updated list will be comprehensive.

Welsh Health Planning Forum

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his response to the Welsh health planning forum's proposals for a strategic intent and direction for the national health service in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Following widespread commendation of the planning forum's proposed strategic intent and direction for the National Health Service in Wales, I was pleased to inform district health authority and family practitioner committee chairmen today of my endorsement of the planning forum's ideas.

I am anxious to maintain the momentum generated by the forum and have asked the chairmen to develop by 31 December 1991 local strategies for health covering the period to the year 2002, and to submit these to me for endorsement, after full consultation with local interests, including users.

Copies of my statement to the chairmen have been placed in the Library.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list any new responsibilities which will be exercised by district health authorities in Wales in addition to those previously exercised (a) prior to the passing of the national health service and Community Care Act and (b) prior to the full implementation of the Government's plan for reform of the national health service.

Mr. Grist: Under our programme of reforms, DHAs will be responsible for securing quality health services for their resident populations, rather than, as before, providing a service within a given geographical area.

In addition, when the relevant provisions of the Act come into force, authorities will be responsible for determining the extent to which accommodation and services are made available for private patients.

ENERGY

Waste Reprocessing

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how often British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. has exercised its option to return wastes under their contracts for reprocessing spent fuels from overseas utilities in Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland; and if he will itemise such returns since 1976 to date.

Mr. Baldry: Since 1976, the overseas reprocessing contracts of British Nuclear Fuels plc have contained options for the return of wastes arising. The Government intend that such options should be exercised and that wastes should be returned. Before such wastes can be returned they have to be put into a form in which they can be safely transported and stored. I understand that the vitrification plant for treating high-level waste will be operational later this year and that the encapsulation plant for intermediate-level waste should be operational by 1992, when the thermal oxide reprocessing plant begins commercial reprocessing.

JET Project, Culham

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement concerning the recent release of CFC-113 into the atmosphere at the JET project at Culham.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what steps he is taking to ensure further accidents do not take place at Culham;

(2) if he will order a comprehensive check on safety procedures at Culham, following the emission of 2 tonnes of Freon-113 at the JET project;

(3) why a public announcement on the emission of Freon-113 at Culham was not made immediately.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that the JET joint undertaking of Euratom recently switched from water to Freon 113 for cooling the magnetic field coils in their fusion experiment because it is non-toxic, non-flammable and does not produce short-circuits on electrical equipment. In commissioning the new system on 4 June a pipe came loose and $1m^3$ of the liquid was released in the torus hall, some of which was recovered. The incident was reported to HM principal inspector of factories at Oxford as required by the regulations for the reporting of occupational occurrences. JET aim to work to the highest standards and are taking precautions to avoid any recurrence.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he will place in the Library a copy of the letter on the risks attached to privatising nuclear power generation sent by Kleinwort Benson to his Department in August 1988;

(2) what advice his Department received in August 1988 from Kleinwort Benson concerning the sale of nuclear power stations and financial guarantees.

Mr. Baldry: I have nothing to add to the very full evidence, both written and oral, given by my Department and Klienwort Benson to the Select Committee on Energy.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library copies of the 11 papers listed in the Energy Committee report, "The Cost of Nuclear Power," volume II, page 27, sent by his Department to the Committee.

Mr. Baldry: No. The papers are confidential.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made an assessment of the possible economies in respect of the storage of advanced gas-cooled reactor fuel in dry conditions, as referred to in the Energy Committee report, "The Cost of Nuclear Power", Volume II, page 77; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Disposal of spent fuel is a matter for the owners who will take into account safety, economic and technical considerations. The possible economies referred to by the hon. Member were mentioned in evidence submitted by the South of Scotland electricity board.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the average price per unit of electricity from the advanced gas-cooled reactor stations in England and Wales in April 1990.

Mr. Baldry: The price of electricity for the nuclear power stations is determined by Nuclear Electric's contracts with the public electricity suppliers. The terms of these contracts are a commercial matter for Nuclear Electric plc.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what initiatives he intends to introduce to increase the use of low energy electric light bulbs (a) in his Department (b) in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In the case of the Department of Energy headquarters, 1 Palace street, I have ensured that the developer installed low-energy light bulbs wherever it was economic to do so. In the wider context of the United Kingdom, I have received a consultant's report on the efficiency of domestic electrical appliances, including lights; the report is now being prepared for publication.

I am now considering the report with a view to deciding how best the increased use of low energy light bulbs can be encouraged. I have also had discussions with the manufacturers of the bulbs.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to publish the report on the energy efficiency of electrical appliances commissioned by his Department in 1989.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I expect to publish the report before the autumn.

Non-fossil Fuel Levy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on what calculations and information he bases his statement that the non-fossil fuel levy will decrease between now and 1998.

Mr. Baldry: The rate of the levy depends predominantly on the difference between the market price for electricity and the cost of electricity under the terms of the nuclear contracts which contain incentives for Nuclear Electric to improve efficiency. This difference is expected to get smaller over the period of the contracts. The rate of the fossil fuel levy is therefore expected to decline significantly during the eight-year period of the nuclear contracts.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Department of Education Staff

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals there are to relocate staff from the offices of the Department of Education for Northern Ireland at Rathgael to Londonderry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: It is intended that the teachers' administration and superannuation branches of the Department of Education, involving some 95 posts, will move from Rathgael to Londonderry. The extent to which staff will transfer with the posts has not yet been determined.

Terrorism

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Royal Ulster Constabulary officers were killed or injured, for each year since 1969, as a result of a terrorist incident.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is as follows:

Inner City Trust, Londonderry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any public investigations are under way into the allegations made about the inner city trust, Londonderry in a recent "Spotlight" programme.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 July 1990]: There are no investigations under way in regard to any allegations made in the programme.

Fair Employment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will request the Fair Employment Commission to carry out an investigation into the Londonderry inner city trust.

Mr. Needham: The Fair Employment Commission is a statutory body which is entirely independent of Government. As such, the commission determines its own investigation policy without any participation by the Government.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table to show for each year since it was set up the sums paid to the North West Centre for Learning and Development; which body or bodies provided such monies and the amounts; for what purposes they were provided and used; and if the Fair Employment Agency or its successor has carried out or is considering carrying out any investigation into this body.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 July 1990]: The Department of Economic Development under the Action for Community Employment (ACE) programme paid the following sums of money to the North West Centre for Learning and Development for the purpose of providing temporary employment for long-term unemployed adults. The work carried out by the centre, under the ACE programme, includes environmental work, community development activity and research associated with a genealogical centre.

Financial year	ACE financial assistance (£)

1989-90	690,429

The North West Centre for Learning and Development has not been investigated by the Fair Employment Agency or its successor body the Fair Employment Commission. As an independent body the Fair Employment Commission determines its own investigation policy and the Department plays no part in this.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show how many trainees have been taken on by the Inner City Trust, Londonderry since its inception; and how many of these were (a) Protestants, (b) Roman Catholics and (c) others in each year and in total, or as much of such information as is currently available to him.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 July 1990]: The Inner City Trust does not have any trainees. However, since August 1988 it has sponsored an ACE project providing temporary employment places as follows:—

Year	Average number of places
1988	131
1989	131
1990	135

The religious affiliations of the employees are not known.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show, from its inception, the sums paid from public funds and by whom to the Inner City Trust, Londonderry, the purposes for which those sums were given and used, or as much of such information as is currently available to him.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 July 1990]: The information is as follows:

The work carried out by the Trust under the ACE programme commenced in 1988 and is related to the redevelopment of a large area of the city including the building of a craft village, heritage library and offices for local community groups.

Local Enterprise Development Unit (LEDU)
Funds paid towards the construction of a craft village as part of LEDU's contribution to the Making Londonderry Work Initiative.

European Regional Development Fund (ERDF)
Funds paid in respect of the creation of a craft village within Londonderry City walls.

European Social Funds (ESF)
Funds paid in respect of vocational training provided.

Foyle Co-op

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been paid from public funds to the Foyle Co-op; and for what purposes.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 July 1990]: A review of available records reveals that no moneys have been paid to the Foyle Co-op from public funds.

HEALTH

Data Systems

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list, for each regional health authority, the number of (a) coding clerks, (b) data entry clerks, (c) other medical records staff, (d) information staff, (e) computer programmers and systems analysts, (f) statisticians, (g) operations research staff and (h) health economists employed by the hospital and community health services;

(2) if he will list, for each family practitioner committee in England and Wales, the total number of (a) coding clerks, (b) data entry clerks, (c) other medical records staff, (d) information staff, (e) computer programmers, (e) statisticians and systems analysts, (g) operations research staff and (h) health economists employed in the family practitioner services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The precise information requested is not available centrally. The numbers of NHS administrative and clerical staff shown as working in computing, medical records, statistics and information, and operational research in each regional health authority at September 1988 are given in the table. These figures will include the staff detailed in the question with the exception of health economists; those for computing staff include additional categories. 1988 is the latest date for which information to this level of detail is available.

Similar information for each family practitioner committee is not collected centrally. Comparisons between regions need to be interpreted with caution. Health authorities will have regard to a number of different factors in setting staffing levels, including the size of the area, population, throughput of patients and current and future levels of service provision.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of beds in use in national health service hospitals in January and February; and what was the average number of medical nursing and auxiliary staff employed to care for the patients using them.

Mr. Dorrell: Data is not available yet for January and February. The latest centrally-available figures are as follows:

Smoking (Children)

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the MORI social research unit's report to the health education authority on smoking by children between the ages of nine and 15 years.

Mr. Dorrell: We welcome the report which was undertaken as part of the Health Education Authority and Department of Health's joint teenage smoking programme. It should prove valuable both in managing the programme and in planning its future direction. The report confirms the evidence that smoking among schoolchildren has fallen since 1984. However, the figures remain disturbingly high, and the aim of the teenage smoking programme, to which the Government have committed over £2 million a year, is to achieve further significant reductions.

Cervical Cancer

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to reduce deaths from cervical cancer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The cervical screening programme forms an important part of our strategy to promote women's health. The improvements that have been introduced over recent years—we were the first country in the EC to introduce nationwide computerised call and recall systems—should further increase the effectiveness of the programme. Five-yearly cervical screening can reduce deaths among women screened by approximately 80 per cent. By March 1993, we expect all women aged 20 to 64 years to have been brought into the scope of the programme and to have received their first invitation for a cervical smear.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects new salary and regrading arrangements to be made for speech therapists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Any changes arising from the forthcoming review of pay rates and the 1988 grade restructuring agreement will be effective from 1 October 1990.

Maternity Services

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much increased spending on maternity services has taken place in the last 11 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Between 1977-78 and 1988-89 total expenditure on National Health Service maternity services—community and hospital—increased from £235 million to £736 million—an increase in real terms of 27·1 per cent.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the changes made to maternity services in the last 10 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There has been a concerted programme of action aimed at reducing maternal, perinatal and infant mortality, and developing a partnership between health service professionals and mothers and their families in the delivery of a more personal standard of maternity care. There has also been a major expansion in neonatal intensive care.

As a result mortality rates have been reduced to the lowest levels so far achieved, it is general practice for a partner to remain with the mother during delivery and schemes are being introduced for early discharge from hospital into the care of a community midwife. Since 1980-81, real-term expenditure on the maternity services has increased by 16 per cent., the number of midwives by 17 per cent., and the number of nursing and midwifery staff employed in special and neonatal intensive care by 136 per cent.

Chiropody

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide statutory protection to the new title of its profession adopted by the Society of Chiropodists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has not been notified by the Society of Chiropodists that it has adopted a new title for its profession.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage increase there has been in the total establishment of speech therapists since 1979; how many posts are currently filled and how many vacancies exist; and how many speech therapists have left the profession in the past 11 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about the establishment and the number of speech therapists leaving the profession for the periods requested is not collected centrally. At 30 September 1979, there were 1,510 speech therapists in post; by 30 September 1989, this number had risen to 2,830, an increase of over 87 per cent. At 31 March 1989 there were 178 funded posts vacant for over three months.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the local authorities which use their discretionary powers to supplement health authority provision of speech therapy.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

General Practitioners

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements have been made to pay general practitioners under the new contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All general practitioners were paid promptly at the end of the first quarter of 1990-91. Doctors in contract with 75 of the 90 family practitioner committees were paid in full at the end of June either by computer, manual methods or by a combination of the two. The remaining 15 family practitioner committees made an advance payment based on the previous quarter's earnings. All family practitioner committees used either the new quarterly payments software issued earlier this year or made local arrangements based on assessment of entitlement. Family practitioner committees have discretion to make advance payments, so there is no reason why any general practitioner should be in financial difficulties due to the new arrangements. Family practitioner committees are dealing promptly with any queries from general practitioners who believe they have been underpaid.

Statements from the British Medical Association on this subject are seriously misleading. It is nonsense for the British Medical Association to claim that the Government forced through the changes without proper consultation with the profession. Detailed discussions with the British Medical Association's general medical services committee—GMSC—took place over a period of 18 months involving over 100 hours of discussion including meetings with Ministers. Every single detailed change to the general practitioners' terms of service and their statement of fees and allowances was sent to the general medical services committee for its comments and the general medical services committee was given every opportunity to respond.

Midwives

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what salary is presently paid, and will be offered in the next pay round to (a) a senior nurse sixth grade and (b) clinical midwives on grade 1; and what are the reasons for the difference;

(2) what factors account for the delay in making an offer of a new pay and grading structure for midwifery managers;

(3) when he will make an offer of a new pay and grading structure for midwifery managers; and when he expects to reach agreement with the staff side.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government take decisions on pay levels for midwives in the light of recommendations from the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors and the Professions Allied to Medicine. Pay structures are a matter for negotiation in the nursing and midwifery staffs negotiating council.

The basic pay for a nurse or midwife on grade I from 1 April 1990 is £16,990 to £19,240—from 1 January 1991 £17,305 to £19,600. The existing senior nurse/midwife structure has been under review by the negotiating council, which reached agreement last month on a new structure, to come into effect from 1 January 1991. The review body is expected shortly to make recommendations on the pay of staff in the senior nurse 6 grade with effect from 1 April 1990, and on the pay levels to be attached to the new structure from 1 January 1991.

Heart Valves

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures are in place to co-ordinate warnings to (a) cardiac specialists, (b) district general hospitals, (c) general practitioners and (d) patients fitted with suspect valves in cases where a fault is identified in a specific make of valve.

Mr. Dorrell: Hospitals and manufacturers of such devices are required to report incidents involving defective or potentially defective devices to the Department's national defect reporting centre for investigation by appropriate technical experts. Where a risk to patients or staff is identified, appropriate advice is issued and other action taken if required. The basis of circulation of such advice is considered in each particular case, on its merits.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what controls there are over the range of heart valves which may be purchased by the National Health Service.

Mr. Dorrell: This is a matter for the health authority concerned. The Department advises authorities to purchase from manufacturers registered under its manufacturer registration scheme or equivalent scheme of manufacturing quality assurance.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many companies supply artificial heart valves to the National Health Service; and in which countries these companies are based.

Mr. Dorrell: Currently nine companies supply heart valves to the United Kingdom National Health Service. Their manufacturing sites are based in the USA, Switzerland, Puerto Rico, Canada, Italy and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will request the Medicines Commission urgently to establish a licensing system for artificial heart valves and other specialised devices used for medical purposes;

(2) if the Medicines Commission has considered the need to license and monitor the use of artificial heart valves.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Use of heart valves in the United Kingdom is monitored since 1986 by the national heart valve registry at Hammersmith hospital. The Medicines Commission has expressed concern about certain products, including critical medical devices such as heart valves, but accepts that adequate provision for the necessary controls should be pursued through the current European Commission initiatives for the harmonisation of regulation of these devices.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if any heart valves which have been refused licences in the United States of America have been used by the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: We are aware of two United States manufactured heart valves used in the National Health Service where marketing approval in the United States of America was withheld, pending receipt of further clinical data.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in the last year for which figures are available how many yellow cards were received reporting failures of artificial heart valves.

Mr. Dorrell: Medical devices such as heart valves are not included in the "yellow card" reporting system. However, the Department's national defect reporting centre for medical device incidents has received four reports of mechanical failure of heart valves in the last 12 months.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many British heart patients died because of a faulty artificial heart valve in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: We are aware of 15 deaths in the United Kingdom in the last five years due to mechanical failure of implanted valves. All were implanted prior to the setting up of the United Kingdom heart valve registry in January 1986.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the European Economic community has put forward any proposals to control the use of artificial heart valves.

Mr. Dorrell: An EC working document is in preparation which is intended to lead to a directive to harmonise the regulation of all non-powered medical devices, including heart valves.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health approximately how many artificial heart valves are fitted annually; and what is the estimated percentage that are successful.

Mr. Dorrell: About 5,000 artificial heart valves are implanted annually in the United Kingdom, 94 per cent. of these patients survive surgery and leave hospital.

Exhaust Fumes

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies are being carried out by his Department to assess the effects on human health of inhalation of exhaust fumes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: No studies are being carried out by the Department.

The concentrations of pollutants in the United Kingdom associated with traffic sources are, in most circumstances, below those assessed by the World Health Organisation and other advisory groups to have detectable effects on health. The effects of airborne emissions of pollutants at levels currently experienced cannot be isolated from many other factors unrelated to air contaminants which may contribute to health problems.

GP Contracts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there are any outstanding payments under the new general practice service contracts not completed as due from 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All Family practitioner Committees made payments to the GPs on the due date. Most FPCs made payments calculated in detail; the remainder made estimated payments only, to be adjusted shortly when the detailed calculations have been completed.

Health Authority Accounts

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to publish the 1989-90 financial accounts special cost forms of individual health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The annual accounts of health authorities are regarded as documents within the public domain which are normally laid before authorities' members meeting in public session. The Department consolidates submitted annual accounts into an England summary which is presented to the National Audit Office by 30 November each year. It is the responsibility of the National Audit Office to publish the summarised accounts, following their audit, in an annual series of House of Commons papers.

Financial returns of health authorities which provide information on the costs of health authorities' services, are submitted to the Department which, after processing them, compiles salient data into national tables in an annual series of booklets. The publication covering the returns for 1989-90 is planned for early in the new year.

Publications

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money has been spent in each of the last five years on distributing (a) the Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin, (b) the Prescribers Journal, (c) Health Trends, (d) the British National Formulary, (e) the Adverse Drug Reaction Bulletin and (f) prescribing analyses and costs data, to doctors in the NHS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The cost of printing and distributing the publications to professionals and other bodies throughout the National Health Service (in England) in each of the years requested was:

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
a. Drugs and Therapeutic Bulletin and Adverse Drug reaction Bulletin	581,300	728,500	452,000	660,600	723,500

e. PACT Data	—	—	—	833,700	901,000

Footnotes

1. The Drugs and Therapeutics Bulletin and Adverse Drug Reaction Bulletin are funded jointly. Records are not held of disaggregated costs. Figures given are for printing and distribution costs invoiced in each of the years.
2. Details of costs for Prescriber's Journal and Health Trends are not available for 1985-86 and 1986-87 as they cannot be disaggregated from other Departmental printing and publishing costs. The costs provided for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are estimated as final costs are not yet available. Editions of both publications due for issue in February 1990 have been postponed to June/July 1990. Postage costs were paid in advance in 1989-90 but printing costs will be incurred in 1990-91.
3. The PACT system came into operation in August 1988—hence there are no costs attributable to PACT data in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88. The figures given are for the full cost of production and distribution including staff costs and systems support, maintenance and operation.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money is likely to be spent in each of the next five years on (a) employing independent medical advisers within the NHS, (b) the cost of running the medicines resource centre and the distribution of its monthly bulletin, (c) the provision of PACT data, (d) the distribution of the Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin, (e) the Prescribers Journal (f) Health Trends, (g) the British National Formulary (h) the Adverse Drug Reaction Bulletin and (i) the NHS management executive guide to self-audit and research, abridged and unabridged versions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The information requested is not yet available for the next five years. The estimated costs in England for 1990-91 are supplied in the table. We expect costs of the same order for the following four years.

		1990-91 £
(a)	Independent Medical Advisers (including support staff and training)	5,000,000
(b)	Medicines Resource Centre (including distribution of monthly bulletins)	250,000
(c)	PACT Data[1]	993,000
(d)	Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin[2] and Adverse Drug Reaction Bulletin[2]	770,000
(e)	Prescribers' Journal	140,000
(f)	Health Trends	115,000
(g)	British National Formulary	1,194,000
(h)	The Analysis of Prescribing in General Practice A Guide to Audit and Research (abridged and unabridged)[3]	42,000

[1] The figure given for the cost of PACT Data is for the full cost of production and distribution including staff costs and systems support, maintenance and operation.

[2] The Drugs and Therapeutics Bulletin and Adverse Drug Reaction Bulletin are invoiced jointly—it is not possible to disaggregate the costs. Funding of the Adverse Drug Reaction Bulletin ceases after the June 1990 issue.

[3] The cost of the Analysis of Prescribing in General Practice was incurred over two financial years. This was a one-off exercise to issue the guide to all practices in England. We do not anticipate there being any additional costs after 1990-91.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Funeral Grant

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much he estimates it would cost his Department to provide a statutory payment of £600 to all pensioners and dependants of pensioners as a funeral grant.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The cost of supplying a statutory payment of £600 as a funeral grant to all people over state pension age is around £300 million per year.

Benefit Values

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the value of supplementary benefits/income support received each year since 1979 by a unemployed husband aged 30 years, wife aged 29 years, and children aged five and 11 years, excluding benefit in respect of housing costs, assuming they were in good health and did not require any special diet, did not need extra baths and did not wear out their clothing unusually quickly, did not require extra laundry facilities, and had accommodation of average size and condition for such a family, assuming they were not in receipt of any other social security benefits other than unemployment benefit; and if he will give the figures both at current prices and at constant 1990 prices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 28 June 1990]: The information requested is shown in the tables, with two separate measures of the real value of the benefit. In table A the benefit rates at each uprating date are revalued to April 1990. In table B the real value of benefit has been averaged over the whole period during which the relevant benefit rates applied.

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the level of the supplementary benefit/income support for each year since 1979 scale rates and for (a) a single person aged 20 years and (b) a non-pensioner couple aged over 25 years both at current prices and at 1990 constant prices; and what was the percentage change each year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 28 June 1990]: As the question does not specify the exact circumstances, household status, or length of time spent on benefit for either client group, the tables provide information to cover each possible circumstance.

The information requested is shown in the tables with two separate measures of the real value of the benefit. In table A the benefit rates at each uprating date are revalued to April 1990. In table B the real value of benefit has been averaged over the whole period during which the relevant benefit rates applied. In each case the percentage change since the previous year is shown.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security pursuant to his answer of 5 June, Official Report, column 559, if he will set out the real terms value of supplementary benefit income support for (a) a young person aged 20 years who is unemployed and: (i) a householder and (ii) a non-householder and (b) a married couple aged over 25 years where the husband is unemployed, the wife not working, and with children aged five and 10 years, each year since 1979, on an index basis taking 1979 as 100.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is shown in the tables, with two separate measures of the real value of benefit. Table A gives the benefit rates at each uprating date in real terms indexed to November 1979 = 100. Table B gives the real value of benefit averaged over the whole period during which the relevant benefit rates applied, indexed to 100 for the average for the period November 1978 to October 1979.

SCOTLAND

Capercaillie

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sum he intends to spend on research on the capercaillie.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Most of the responses to my consultation letter of 23 March on whether to introduce a statutory ban on shooting capercaillie have commented on the need for research. I shall announce my views on the consultation soon.

Low Pay Unit

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Scottish low pay unit on overtime, and the pay of Scotland's adult work force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: During the past year my right hon. and learned Friend has received no representations from the Scottish low pay unit. Since 1979 earnings at all levels have increased significantly in real terms with the lower paid sharing in the prosperity created by a vigorous free enterprise economy.

Road Accidents

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of children under 14 years of age who were killed or injured as pedestrians involved in road accidents during the last 12 months in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest information available centrally is for 1989 for children aged 14 years and under. The provisional figures are:—

Fatal	Per cent.	Serious	Per cent.	Slight	Per cent.	Total
26	(−26)	728	(−2)	1,570	(+6)	2,324

These figures would appear to show an improvement over the previous years for fatal and serious injuries, but a small increase in the number of slight injuries involved in road accidents. However, I would stress that these figures are provisional, final figures will be published later in the year in "Road Accidents Scotland 1989".

GPs' Budgets

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report those practices in Grampian and Tayside regions who are taking part in the shadow fundholding project for general practitioners.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

Forfar

Dr. G. Peterkin and Partners
Dr. A. F. Catto and Partners
Dr. S. M. Birse and Partner

Grampian

Dr. G. H. McIntosh and Partners
Dr. A. F. Maclean and Partners
Dr. J. M. Taylor and Partners
Dr. G. A. Taylor and Partners
Dr. R. J. Stewart and Partners and Dr. D. J. Murray and Partners

Historic Buildings

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of Scotland's historic buildings are being eroded as a result of acid rain; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 July 1990]: There is no accurate information available upon which to determine how many of Scotland's historic buildings are being eroded as a result of acid rain. The issues involved are complex and further detailed research is required to clarify and assess all the factors involved.

Officials of the Scottish Development Department participated in the Department of the Environment's building effects review group on acid deposition which reported in 1989. A current national materials exposure programme arising from the group's recommendations includes five sites in Scotland. There will be continued co-operation in future research programmes with a view to answering many of the outstanding questions which were raised following the publication of the group's first report.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the impact of the changes in design to the proposed bridge to Skye upon (a) the likely construction costs involved, (b) the proposed timetable for the submission of plans and (c) the level of toll charge to be levied; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 July 1990]: In my announcement on 3 July I said that the welcome reduction of 6 m in the required navigational clearance for a bridge to Skye removed the need for either major embankments or a viaduct over Eilean Ban or Eilean Dubh, which previously caused concern regarding visual impact.

The exact changes in construction costs have not been assessed; but it is expected that they will be reduced. The timetable is unlikely to be affected. The levels of toll charges will form part of each tenderer's bid and the exact amounts are therefore unknown as yet; however, the toll charges will be no greater than current ferry fares in real terms and must allow for existing concessions to users.

Mental Welfare Commission

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the qualifications and reasons for appointment of Mrs. Iris Isbister to the Mental Welfare Commission; and if he will review the appointment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 9 July 1990]: I am well satisfied that Mr. Isbister is well qualified on grounds of her experience and her interest in the field to be a member of the Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland. Prior to becoming chairman of Forth Valley health board she was an active member of a number of organisations involved with mental health, including the Stirling Association for Mental Health.

68. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current implementation of local management of schools.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent responses he has had to local management of schools; whether he has any further proposals relating to local management of schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Eighty-seven local education authorities introduced local management schemes in April 1990. Most headteachers and governors welcome the prospect of greater autonomy in the running of their schools. I have recently announced an increase in the programme of education support grants to help implement this important reform. Supported expenditure will increase from £36 million to £61 million in 1991-92.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of Kirklees council's total schools' budget has been passed on to individual schools with the introduction of local management schemes; and what was the comparable figure for Government targets and guidelines.

Mrs. Rumbold: The budget statement provided by Kirklees local education authority under section 42 of the Education Reform Act, indicates that 65 per cent. of the general schools budget—GSB—is being passed down to individual schools. The discretionary exceptions, subject to the Government's limit of 10 per cent. of the GSB, account for 9·2 per cent. of the GSB. The discretionary exceptions not subject to any Government limit account for 14 per cent. of the GSB.

37. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of local management in schools in Northumberland county council.

Mrs. Rumbold: Northumberland local education authority's scheme for local management of schools was approved on 15 March 1990 for introduction on 1 April 1990. The LEA appears to be making a most satisfactory start to local management. The Government are supporting the introduction of LMS in Northumberland through £402,400 of specific grant in this financial year alone.

Grant-maintained Schools

15. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications for grant-maintained status he has received; and how many he has approved.

16. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the impact of the national curriculum on small schools in rural areas.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Evidence from Her Majesty's inspectorate shows that most schools are making satisfactory or good progress with introducing the national curriculum. HMI has reported no overall difference in standards of implementation between small schools and others.

Student Loans

17. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any recent representations regarding the implementation of the student loans scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Student Loans Company is making good progress, completing its computer systems and recruiting clerical staff needed for the autumn. It is also holding constructive discussions with the higher education institutions about the certification of students' eligibility. This bodes well for the introduction of the scheme this autumn.

Teachers' Duties

18. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is planning any changes in the timing of the implementation of the national curriculum as it relates to teachers' duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Speech Therapists

19. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from special schools in Norfolk about the availability of speech therapists.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received no representations on the subject from special schools in Norfolk.

Sixth-form Students

20. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the needs for a broader curriculum for sixth-form students.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has this under active consideration. Advanced supplementary examinations supply one means of adding breadth to advanced-level studies. Wider availability in schools of vocational courses would also deliver greater breadth. In addition, my right hon. Friend expects shortly to receive from the School Examinations and Assessment Council advice on the scope for embodying in the programmes of all advanced-level students a range of core skills needed for adult working life.

Secondary Education, Sheffield

21. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning budgetary provision for secondary education in Sheffield; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has received only three such representations since 1 April, when Sheffield's local management of schools scheme was introduced.

52. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the number of 16-year-olds entering full-time further education.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to the hon. Members for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) and for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam) on 12 June 1990, Official Report, column 169.

51. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement regarding education and training for 16 to 19-year-olds.

54. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement regarding education and training for 16 to 19-year-olds.

57. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement regarding education and training for 16 to 19-year-olds.

Mr. Jackson: The Government believe that many more young people should be participating in education and training, both full time and part time. Participation in full-time post-compulsory education has increased very substantially in recent years.

The Government are doing much to encourage the development of education and training beyond 16. We are committed to maintaining the standards of A-levels and advanced supplementary examinations, and to improving their effectiveness in meeting both the needs of students and the requirements of higher education and employment. The National Council for Vocational Qualifications has been established to put in place a coherent framework of relevant vocational qualifications. Steps are being taken more generally to make the range of courses and qualifications available to this age group more attractive, notably by the development of core skills which all young people and adults will need in future in all walks of life.

Training credits for 16 and 17-year-olds who have left full-time education are to be piloted from next year. They will make clear to young people their entitlement to training. They have the potential to increase significantly the number of young people in jobs who receive worthwhile education and training.

23. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has made an assessment of the effects of charge capping upon the delivery of the education service.

46. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has made an assessment of the effects of charge capping upon the delivery of the education service.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has considered all the representations made to him by the capped authorities, including those about service delivery, together with all other information he considers relevant, and he is satisfied that the final caps he is proposing will permit them to maintain their services at a reasonable level.

Businesses

24. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps the Government are taking to encourage business men to take greater interest in education and to value good education more highly.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The business community is becoming increasingly aware of the importance of education in helping to meet the challenges of the 1990s, both nationally and internationally. The constructive involvement of the business community at all levels in education continues to be a major plank of this Government's policies. We have made statutory provision to encourage this in the governing of institutions, and have encouraged training to make this effective. We have also taken a range of other initiatives, both alone and in conjunction with other Departments and outside organisations to promote continuing links between education and industry, building on the substantial progress of the last decade.

Pre-school Education

25. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to increase the number of pre-school education places.

44. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to increase the number of pre-school education places.

35. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current level of teacher vacancies throughout London; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 12 June 1990, Official Report, column 168. My right hon. Friend hopes to publish later this month the data for teacher vacancies as at January 1990.

University Education

27. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average cost of university education over the three years of graduates in (a) social sciences, (b) languages and (c) physical sciences.

Mr. Jackson: Expenditure is not disaggregated in the form requested. However, an indication of the costs of teaching in the relevant subjects met annually from block grant and tuition fees is given by the University Funding Council's current "guide prices", as follows:

Economics, Sociology, etc.	2,700

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on recent progress in promoting the teaching of Spanish, German and Russian in maintained schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The national curriculum includes a modern foreign language as a foundation subject to be studied by all pupils aged 11 to 16 in maintained secondary schools. German, Russian and Spanish are among the languages which may qualify as the foreign language foundation subject. Within this framework, we are encouraging schools to offer a greater diversity of languages such as German, Spanish and Russian and we have made provision within the specific grant programme for 1991-92 for local education authorities to bid for funds for the diversification of first foreign languages.

Universities

30. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has recently had any meetings with the chairman of the University Funding Council to discuss funding and management of universities.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of the Universities Funding Council from time to time in the course of normal business.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

31. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the pupil-teacher ratio in England and Wales; and what information he has on the figure for Japan.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The readily available information for the United Kingdom, upon which international comparisons are usually made, and Japan, is as follows:

Pupil/teacher ratios by level, 1985-86

Up to 1st level (nursery and primary)	22·4[2]	22·0[3]

[1] The overall ratio for public sector schools in England decreased from 18·9 in 1978-89 to 17·0 in 1987-88. The corresponding ratios for Wales are 19·3 and 18·6. Government policy has been to allow teacher numbers to fall at a slower rate than pupil numbers.

39. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the city technology college programme.

Mrs. Rumbold: The city technology college programme continues to make excellent progress. Three colleges are up and running, a further eight are due to open in September 1990 and 1991, and my right hon. Friend is currently consulting on proposals for a further three.

Mr. Alan Howarth: No. The Government believe that young people should be allowed a real choice at age 16 of the various forms of education and training on offer, or of

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department wrote to all local education authorities in England on 18 May 1990, asking for their views on the education of deaf-blind children and what provision they made at present for such education. Foreign Languages

69. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he proposes to take steps to encourage the study of foreign languages.

That is why the national curriculum includes a modern foreign language as a foundation subject to be studied by all pupils aged 11 to 16 in maintained secondary schools. Mrs. Rumbold: Of the 87 local education authorities required to prepare budget statements for 1990-91 under section 42 of the Education Reform Act, 53 have submitted statements to date. Mr. Jackson: The project team commissioned by the Department, together with the Training Agency and the Welsh Office, to conduct a quality assurance study of computerised management information systems in further education, presented its findings in March this year. It was decided that the greatest value would be obtained from the study if a report was produced which set the team's findings within a wider national context and drew attention to related developments. This report is currently being written and should be ready for publication in early autumn.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to amend the regulations made under section 12 of the Education Act 1981 relating to the approval of special schools; and if he will make a statement.

Options for Change

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he is giving in his current exercise, options for change, to the job implications in the defence industry for (a) Coventry and (b) nationally.

Mr. Alan Clark: The implications of options for change for the balance of expenditure on defence equipment, and hence the defence industry, are being studied but it is too early to say what their impact will be.

Radiation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of the monitoring of radiation levels now being conducted by the Royal Navy in the St. Bride's area of Newport, West; and when he expects to publish the results.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Readings of natural background radiation are routinely taken in areas where nuclear submarines are cleared to berth. In this instance, the berth concerned was Cardiff. Readings are not intended for publication; however, the marine environmental surveys of nuclear submarine berths produced by the defence radiological protection service are published.

Land Ownership and Use

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Ashfield, Official Report, 6 March, column 719, what was the total acreage used by his Department in 1989; and what are the comparable figures for (a) ownership and (b) use by his Department in (i) 1960, (ii) 1970 and (iii) 1980.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The relevant figures are shown in the table:

Year	Land and Foreshore in MOD Ownership (Freehold and Leasehold) (acres)	Land and Foreshore over which MOD has long term rights (acres)
1989	596,265	249,699
1980	618,477	76,785
1972	658,756	56,331
1970	630,096	53,406
1960	782,819	79,000

The figures for 1960 and 1970 exclude the Procurement Executive estimate. Title in property held by the former Minister of Aviation Supply was transferred to the Secretary of State for Defence on 1 May 1971; figures for 1972 have been included in the table to reflect these changes.

The increase in land held under rights in 1989 is due to the renewal of two leases which granted long-term rights over areas where previous arrangements were on a short-term basis and did not qualify for inclusion in the statistics. Records of land used under rights for periods of less than three years are not held centrally.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which types of aircraft's noise levels produced by NATO allied air forces which are common users of the United Kingdom's low-flying system, will be included in the forthcoming noise survey to be conducted by his Department.

Mr. Neubert [pursuant to his reply, 5 July 1990, c. 643]: The noise measurement trial conducted at the Royal Aerospace West Freugh range last month covered the following common users of the United Kingdom low-flying system: F-111, Hawk, Harrier GR5, Jaguar and Tornado.

ENVIRONMENT

Corvids

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to alter the law relating to the use of live decoys in traps for the purpose of taking corvids; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We have no plans to make any changes to existing legislation on this matter.

Radiation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he became aware for the first time that inspectors from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution were conducting a radiological survey of Rainham marshes.

Mr. Trippier: Following publicity over claims that higher than normal background levels of radiation were present at Rainham marshes officials from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution first visited the area on 3 April.

Water Meters

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require the fitting of water meters to be carried out free of charge to householders, where the decision to fit has been taken by a water supplier; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Charging for water services is a matter for each water company and like any other business they must cover their costs. Where water companies require water meters to be installed in new properties as a condition of supply, the cost of installation is borne by the developer. Water companies that opt for widespread matering of existing domestic properties will meet the initial costs of installation. They will be able to recover these costs through charges to customers as a whole by applying to the Director General of Water Services for an interim adjustment of their limit on charges increases. The director general will ensure that charges are fair and reasonable and do not show undue preference to, or undue discrimination against, any class of customer. Compulsory metering will be one of the issues dealt with in a consultation paper on methods of charging for water services that the director general will be issuing later this year.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are available in the current year to the National Rivers Authority for managing and protecting the water environment.

Mr. Trippier: I am pleased to announce that, subject to any necessary parliamentary approval, an extra £11 million will be made available to the National Rivers Authority this financial year, if required. This is additional to the £93 million grant in aid already agreed. This decision will enable the authority to continue its planned capital restructuring programme and to carry out the full range of its pollution control and other functions, in line with the Government's commitment to maintaining the quality of the water environment.

Recycling

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total indentifiable expenditure on research into recycling by his Department in each year since 1979; and what proportion was expended in each year into the investigation of the capabilities of new technology.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 4 July 1990]: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Waste

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make public the conclusions of the consultation on his Department's draft code of practice for waste holders under the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 9 July 1990]: I hope to make an announcement about the outcome of our consultations on the draft code of practice for the duty of care before the summer recess.

North Sea Pollution

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on whether the proposals for reducing pollution in the North sea include a sufficient reduction in heavy metal deposits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 9 July 1990]: I receive regular representations on the marine environment but these have not focused in particular on reduction of pollution by heavy metals. The second North sea conference agreed on a precautionary basis a target of 50 per cent. reductions 1985-95 in inputs via rivers and estuaries for the most dangerous substances, and the recent third conference in the Hague raised this target to 70 per cent. for four substances including mercury, cadmium and lead. The United Kingdom has since 1985 already achieved reductions of 31 per cent. and 22 per cent. discharges to the North sea of mercury and cadmium and these initiatives will help to achieve measurable improvements in North sea water quality.

Compulsory Purchase Orders

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many compulsory purchase orders have been confirmed by his Department, broken down by local authority, in each of the last three financial years;

(2) how many applications for compulsory purchase orders he has received from local authorities in England and Wales, broken down by local authority, in each of the last three financial years;

(3) how many compulsory purchase orders in each of the last three financial years were subject to public local inquiry from local authorities in England and Wales, broken down by local authority.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 9 July 1990]: Comprehensive data in the form requested are not available except at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for compulsory purchase orders he received in each of the last three financial years were in respect of (a) unfit housing which was occupied, (b) empty private sector properties and (c) poor management of privately rented property.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 9 July 1990]: The main compulsory purchase powers for unfit housing are contained in part IX of the Housing Act 1985 and the main powers for other housing in parts II and VIII. The numbers of orders received for confirmation in the last three financial years were:

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Part IX	151	112	93
Parts II, VIII	187	187	111

Orders are considered on their merits and statistics on the occupancy and management of properties are not kept.

Local Government Finance

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to seek to amend the Local Government Finance Act 1988 with respect to the standard community charge, in addition to the proposed changes for holiday caravans; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he intends to change the law of joint and several liability under the Local Government Finance Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 9 July 1990]: My right hon. Friend hopes to make a statement shortly about the community charge.

CFCs

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the impact upon the environment of the leak of chlorofluorocarbons from Harwell atomic research centre.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 9 July 1990]: I understand that about 1 cu m of CFC113 was released when a new cooling system was being commissioned at the JET laboratory at Culham, some of which was subsequently recovered. I regret any avoidable release of ozone-depleting chemicals, but the quantity involved is not significant compared with current levels of CFC consumption.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 11 July 1990

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Leasehold Reform

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to introduce leasehold reform legislation to give tenants rights of commonhold.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 18 June 1990 at column 389.

ENVIRONMENT

Mundic Aggregates

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the 28 June edition of the "Construction Journal" article concerning Mundic aggregates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I understand that the hon. Member is referring to the journal "New Builder", which my Department receives regularly.

The article suggests that unsatisfactory aggregates for concrete made from mine waste, are still in use in the west country. The effect of "Mundic" in aggregates impairs durability of concrete used in construction. As such the matter is of concern to the Government as well as to householders and others affected by the problem. The Government have overall responsibility for the health and safety aspects of new construction under building regulations as well as those interests arising out of their purchasing role.

The mechanism of "Mundic" in aggregates is little understood and, as the article makes clear, there is confusion within the construction industry. The first priority is to obtain a better understanding of the factors that indicate a risk of the effect and work on this is being carried out by the Building Research Establishment within the Department's research programme on aggregates. We shall then examine the extent to which the existing British standard (BS 882(1983): Aggregates from natural sources for concrete) may need amendment to be able to function as an effective check on unsuitable aggregates.

The results of this research are being made available to the responsible BSI technical committee. However, a European standard for aggregates that, in due course, will take the place of the British standard is currently under development within CEN—the European Standards Organisation. United Kingdom interests within CEN are represented by BSI. The Department will support action by BSI to ensure that the European standards and the accompanying methods of testing provide the United Kingdom construction industry with an effective means of ensuring that the Mundic problem does not recur.

Otters

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made an assessment of the threat to the otter population posed by the practice of mink hunting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have made no assessment of the threat to otter populations posed by mink hunting. However, the Nature Conservancy Council advises me that voluntary guidelines are already in place to discourage mink hunting in areas where otters may be found.

Air Conditioning

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to improve the efficiency of the air conditioning in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Chope: Only a limited area of the Palace has air conditioning or mechanical ventilation. Although there is no immediate need to carry out any major work, the replacement and upgrading of some plant and controls is included in the forward maintenance programme.

Housebuilding

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what proportion the level of housebuilding completions in 1989 differs from the figure for 10 years earlier.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Figures for housebuilding completions in England for 1989 appear in table 2 of my Department's press release issued on 5 July 1990, and for 1979, in table 6.1(a) of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988". Copies are in the Library.

AEA Technology

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to assess the potential of AEA Technology, Dounreay to be included in the European Environment Agency's proposed monitoring network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The regulation establishing the European Environment Agency has not yet come into force, but some preparatory work has been set in hand in my Department on the compilation of a list of United Kingdom institutions which could contribute to the work of the agency. AEA Technology, Dounreay has provided details of its capabilities which have been noted in this respect.

Arts (Planning Policy)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to issue planning policy guidance on the arts for consultation with local authorities.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has not yet decided whether or when to issue for public consultation draft guidance on planning policy in relation to the arts, but we have recently received from the Arts Council its proposals for such guidance. We will consider the council's draft carefully in the context of reviewing planning policy guidance note 1 (PPG1—general policy and principles).

Archaeological Areas

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has now completed his consideration of English Heritage's advice on the effectiveness of part II of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979 concerning archaeological areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have considered English Heritage's advice on the operation and effectiveness of areas of archaeological importance (AAIs) in the light of the likely impact of the Department's planning policy guidance note (PPG) on archaeology and planning. We are currently considering the 200 or so responses to the draft guidance note and expect to publish final guidance within the next few months. English Heritage has advised me that no further areas of archaeological importance should be designated at present but that it would be premature to take decisions on the future use of the existing statutory provisions until the impact of the Department's forthcoming planning policy guidance note on archaeology and planning has been assessed.

The provisions of part II of the 1979 Act are broadly intended to help prevent important archaeological sites being damaged or destroyed without there first being an opportunity for archaeological investigation and recording. By contrast the draft planning policy guidance note places archaeology more firmly in the planning process with its message to developers and local planning authorities to consider the possible existence of archaeological remains on site before submitting planning applications and the desirability of preserving them. This guidance will apply across the country whereas areas of archaeological importance must be limited to specified areas.

In the circumstances I have concluded, in agreement with English Heritage advice, that it would be sensible to allow time for the impact of the planning policy guidance note to be assessed before considering further the role of areas of archaeological importance. I therefore intend to review the position with regard to areas of archaeological importance 12 months after publication of the planning policy guidance note by which time we can begin to form a judgment on the effectiveness of the forthcoming planning policy guidance note.

Satellite TV Antennas

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue a consultation paper on planning controls over satellite television antennas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have today issued a consultation paper on permitted development rights for satellite television antennas.

The Government are fully committed both to protecting the environment and to facilitating the growth of telecommunications. There have been major changes since the present planning regime for satellite television dishes was introduced in the mid-1980s. We need to provide better safeguards for the visual environment, respond to the growth in satellite broadcasting, and take advantage of the development of smaller antennas. The consultation paper sets out a range of options. Any extension of permitted development rights—which remove the need to apply for specific planning permission—should in our view be balanced by additional controls over unnecessarily obtrusive installations, particularly in sensitive areas.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would have been the total level of local government spending in the current year had local government spending plans not been subject to capping.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 27 June 1990]: The caps which, if the House approves, my right hon. Friend intends to set for the designated authorities will result in the £35·8 billion total of all local authorities' budgets being reduced by £217 million.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from those local authorities that have been community charge-capped over the reduction and disruption of services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 9 July 1990]: My right hon. Friend received many representations about the effect of charge capping on services, including those from the designated authorities which put forward alternative maxima. My right hon. Friend carefully considered all the information which he considered relevant, before taking his decisions on final caps which are at present before the House in the draft Charge Limitation (England) (Maximum Amount) (No. 2) Order 1990 and the draft Charge Limitation (England) (Maximum Amount) (No. 3) Order 1990.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered increasing the upper spending limit for local authorities for each adult in their area when assessing their poll tax before applying the charge capping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 9 July 1990]: My right hon. Friend considered carefully all the relevant information before him before taking his decisions on designation of authorities for community charge capping for 1990-91; he is satisfied that the principles he adopted for designation were appropriate.

JET Project, Culham

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will conduct an inquiry into the recent release of CFC-113 at the Culham JET laboratory.

Mr. Chris Patten: No: I understand that a representative of the Health and Safety Executive has already visited the plant and is satisfied that improvements have now been made to the system which failed. CFC-113 is not itself a toxic substance and this release has not imperilled achievement of our obligations under the Montreal protocol. Nevertheless avoidable releases of ozone-depleting chemicals are regrettable.

RECHAR

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account was taken of the funds to be made available under the European Community

RECHAR initiative when standard spending assessments for local authorities for the current financial year were drawn up.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 10 July 1990]: No account was taken.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will take steps to ensure that the required contribution from Wakefield district council under the European Community RECHAR scheme does not count against its current approved capital programme;

(2) what steps have been taken by his Department to ensure that money made available through the European Community RECHAR initiative is additional to local authorities, over and above their approved level of borrowing.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 10 July 1990]: The Government take anticipated European Community receipts into account at the national level when setting the level of public expenditure programmes, so that these programmes are higher than they would otherwise be.

Thereafter, capital allocations are made to individual authorities on the basis of overall assessments of their needs to spend. No explicit account is taken of whether expenditure may be financed in part through grant from the European Community. A limited exception has been made in the case of expenditure on the "other services" block. In the current financial year, the Government have held back credit approvals of £25 million to be distributed in respect of ERDF grant claims for expenditure on that block.

PCBs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what tonnage of polychlorinate bi-phenyls was imported into Newport by sea in the past three years.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 6 July 1990]: I have been asked to reply.

The information sought is available only since the introduction of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988.

Records of shipments under the regulations show that 479 tonnes of polychlorinate bi-phenyl contaminated materials were imported via Newport for disposal in the year 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990.

TRANSPORT

A11

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work on the A11 Red Lodge bypass to start; and what arrangements are being made about the timing of a new A45/A11 connector road.

Mr. Atkins: Selected contractors are currently preparing bids for the construction of the A11 Red Lodge bypass. Work is expected to commence in early autumn this year. My Department has no proposals to construct a new link road between the A45 and A11.

Draft proposals have also been published which would provide a second carriageway for the A11 between Red Lodge and the A45. Further progress on this scheme depends on the outcome of statutory procedures.

Fuel Tankers (Safety)

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment the railway inspectorate has made of the safety of parked railway fuel tankers at Port Talbot station.

Mr. Freeman: The primary responsibility for railway safety rests with the operator. British Rail has already taken a number of steps to reduce leakages from fuel tank wagons at Port Talbot station. There were eight such incidents in 1989 but only one so far in 1990.

The railway inspectorate will be reviewing the situation to make sure that all reasonably practicable safety measures are being taken.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents have occurred with parked railway fuel tankers in south Wales in the last two years; and on how many occasions passengers have had to be disembarked from main line trains because of concern with safety.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from British Rail that there have been 14 incidents of seepage or leakage from railway fuel tank wagons in south Wales since January 1988. No passengers have been disembarked from trains as a direct result, but it is usual for the fire service to be called and the passage of other trains stopped whilst any leakage is investigated and rectified.

A1 (Upgrading)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of traffic flows on the A1 north of Newcastle following upgrading to motorway standard of the A1 between London and Newcastle.

Mr. Atkins: Estimates of increased traffic flows resulting from a new motorway link from London to Newcastle have not been assessed specifically. However, the study commissioned by the Scottish Development Department, "Routes South of Edinburgh", indicated that the completion of a motorway link between London and Tyneside would not lead to any significant transfer of traffic to the route north of Newcastle.

The joint A1 steering group will of course monitor the traffic flows on the route between Newcastle and Edinburgh.

Roads

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of his road construction programme for 1990-91.

Mr. Atkins: Following publication of the report "Trunk Roads, England" in February, the latest information for the current financial year is as follows:

10 contracts have been let (value £101 million).

11 contracts have been advertised in the Official Journal (value £114 million).

18 further contracts are expected to be let, subject to satisfactory completion of statutory processes (estimated value £260 million).

59 schemes are currently under construction (value £1,384 million).

A list of these schemes will be placed in the Library and sent to contractors.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the new roads which have been built in each of the last five years in (a) areas of outstanding natural beauty, (b) sites of special scientific interest and (c) national parks.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 4 July 1990]: The information for trunk roads is as follows. Information about local authority roads is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners were transferred from (a) England and Wales to Northern Ireland and (b) Northern Ireland to England and Wales in 1989; and under what section of the Criminal Justice Act 1961 such transfers were carried out;

(2) how many prisoners in British gaols who give as their domicile Northern Ireland have been returned to Northern Ireland to serve the whole or part of their sentences in 1989; and how many of these prisoners were serving sentences for terrorist-type offences.

Mr. Mellor: In 1989, 15 prisoners were transferred from England and Wales to Northern Ireland under section 26 of the Criminal Justice Act 1961, one of whom was convicted of terrorist-type offences. One other prisoner was transferred under section 27. All were either domiciled in, or had close family links with, Northern Ireland. In the same year, four prisoners were transferred fom Northern Ireland to England and Wales under section 26, two under section 27 and one under section 28 of the Act.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in British gaols give as their place of domicile (i) the Republic of Ireland and (ii) Northern Ireland; and how many of these prisoners are serving sentences for terrorist-type offences as on 31 December 1989.

Mr. Mellor: The information which is readily available centrally relates to prisoners' place of birth and to those terrorist-type prisoners who are held in category A. On 31 December 1989, 561 sentenced inmates of prison establishments in England and Wales were recorded as born in the Republic of Ireland and 378 in Northern Ireland. Of those, 13 born in the Republic of Ireland and 21 born in Northern Ireland had been convicted of terrorist-type offences and were held in category A.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners giving as their domicile either the Republic of Ireland or Northern Ireland have been permitted to return home to the Republic of Ireland or Northern Ireland on parole for humanitarian reasons in 1989.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available.

Civil Unrest, Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of deaths and injuries which have occurred in Great Britain and mainland western Europe in 1989 which are regarded as being connected with present civil unrest in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Waddington: The information is given in the table.

Terrorism

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average number of days spent on remand by those remanded in custody for terrorist-type offences in 1989, with regard to cases now completed in England and Wales and the number of bail applications refused;

(2) how many persons were remanded in custody before trial for terrorist-type offences in 1989.

Mr. Mellor: The only relevant information which is readily available relates to prisoners who are now in prison custody in category A and does not cover prisoners who have been released or downgraded.

Three such prisoners were first received in custody in 1989. The case of one of them has now been completed. This prisoner spent a total of 479 days on remand, and, according to our records, no applications for bail were made.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons in England and Wales were charged with terrorist-type offences relating to Northern Ireland in 1989; how many of those charged were released on bail; and what was the average period between remand and trial for prisoners refused bail relating to such charges in Britain in 1989.

Mr. John Patten: The criminal statistics do not distinguish between terrorist-related and other offences. However, information about the number of people charged with criminal offences following detention under the Prevention of Terrorism Act is published quarterly for Great Britain in statistical bulletins which are placed in the Library. The latest issue, 15/90, gives in table 1 the number charged in 1989 after detention in connection with Northern Ireland terrorism. Of the 12 people who were so charged in England and Wales in 1989, eight were charged with relatively minor offences; six of these were dealt with at court on the same day or the next day, and two were released on bail. Of the four who were remanded in custody, one person who had been charged in February 1989 was brought to trial in April 1990, and a second, who had been charged in October 1989, was released in January 1990 after the Director of Public Prosecutions decided to offer no evidence against him. The two others, who were charged in December 1989, are currently in custody awaiting trial.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average period of custodial remand for female custodial remand prisoners in England and Wales in 1989.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 3 May, at column 658.

Marches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the number of marches that have been banned in England and Wales in relation to Northern Ireland, since 1986, detailing what the marches were, who applied for permission to hold them and the grounds on which they were refused.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only public processions relating to events in Northern Ireland which are known to have been prevented as a result of an order made under section 13 of the Public Order Act 1986 are a procession organised by the Manchester branch of the Apprentice Boys of Derry to take place on 21 November 1987 and a procession organised by Manchester Martyrs' Memorial Committee to take place the following day.

Section 13 of the Public Order Act 1986 provides that if a chief officer of police has reason to believe that his powers to impose conditions on public processions are not sufficient to prevent the holding of a procession from resulting in serious public disorder, he may apply to the district council for an order prohibiting all processions, or specified classes of processions, for a period not exceeding three months.

The district council may make such an order with the consent of the Home Secretary.

Firearms

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to require a photograph of the bearer to appear on a certificate of registration as a firearms dealer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. It would not be possible to do so as many firearms dealers are companies.

Visa Fees

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the income from visa fees for each of the offices in the United Kingdom from 1980 to the present for each year inclusive.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the total income received from fees for visas issued in the United Kingdom for the financial years 1981-82 to 1984-85 inclusive and by office for the financial years 1985-86 to 1989-90 inclusive.

Remand System

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is yet in a position to announce the Government's decisions on private sector involvement in the remand system.

Mr. Waddington: In his statement to the House on 1 March 1989, at columns 277-78, my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary indicated that, in the light of the comments received on the Green Paper "Private Sector Involvement in the Remand System"—July 1988, Cm. 434—and of the report to the Home Office on the practicality of such involvement from the management consultants Deloitte, Haskins and Sells, the Government wished to take further their consideration of the possibility of contracting out to the private sector the design, construction and operation of new remand centres, the escorting of prisoners to and from court and their guarding whilst at court. Final decisions depended, however, on the outcome of further research into the likely cost-effectiveness of contracting out in these areas.

In the light of the results of this further research, I have decided to go ahead with preparations to reorganise arrangements for court escorts, custody and security services and to invite competitive tenders for the provision of these services. I am confident that the resulting rationalisation of the existing complex and overlapping arrangements will lead to a substantial improvement in the cost-effectiveness with which these services are provided. An important objective of the new arrangements will be to enable the police and prison services to concentrate their efforts on work which makes more effective use of the skills and training of their officers.

I am today issuing to interested parties a discussion document setting out the Government's proposals in greater detail, and describing the legislative framework which the Government propose should support the reorganisation of these services. A copy has been placed in the Library. Further copies can be obtained from Room 1103, Home Office, 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London, SW1H 9AT. Any comments should be submitted to the same address by 7 September 1990.

The further evidence which has been obtained on the cost-effectiveness of privately operated remand centres indicates that the private sector could, if invited to operate remand centres, reasonably be expected to provide a good standard of service and value for money for the taxpayer. But the opportunities for involving the private sector in the running of remand centres will be considerably more limited than appeared likely at the time of the publication of the Green Paper and my right hon. Friend's statement on 1 March 1989.

In the context of a general reduction in the prison population recently, the remand population in custody, including those held in police cells, has fallen from an average of 11,400 in 1988 to an average of 10,500 in 1989, and at the end of May this year stood at about 9,800. The proposals set out in the White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public"—February 1990, Cm. 965—should lead to a further significant reduction in the numbers in custody. Taken with the success of the prison building programme, the result of these developments is that the likely need for additional remand places provided by the private sector is now very limited.

The opportunity to mount a trial of competitive tendering for the operation of a remand centre still arises, however, in respect of the new remand centre currently under development at Everthorpe, Humberside. This establishment is due to be completed in 1992. Subject to the passage of the necessary enabling legislation, I have decided that a trial should be mounted in which competitive tenders would be invited from the private sector for the operation of this remand centre. If one or more satisfactory tenders were received from the private sector which offered better value for money than the prison service could offer, a contract would be awarded for private sector management of the establishment. The arrangements for letting and supervising any such contract would in the main follow the recommendations of the report from Deloitte, Haskins and Sells. The staff would be prisoner custody officers, with duties and protections similar to those which it is proposed staff engaged in court escorts and custody should have, and which are described in the discussion document.

I believe that the introduction of this element of competition into the management of the prison system will make a valuable contribution to the prison service's continuing and successful efforts to raise standards and improve efficiency.

Maguire Family

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take in the cases of the Maguire family and their co-defendants.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General and I have now received Sir John May's interim report on these cases. In the light of the report, I have decided to refer the cases of Mr. and Mrs. Maguire, their sons, Vincent and Patrick, Mr. William Smyth and Mr. Patrick O'Neill to the Court of Appeal under the provisions of section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968.

I will seek the views of the Court of Appeal under section 17(1)(b) of the 1968 Act on the question of whether it is possible to refer to the court under section 17(1)(a) the case of a person who is now dead. If the court's view is that such action is legally possible, I will refer the case of Mr. Patrick "Guiseppe" Conlon also under the provisions of section 17(1)(a). If the court's view is that such action is not possible, I will consider what further steps to take in the light of its advice.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General and I are arranging for Sir John May's interim report to be published tomorrow at 3 pm in response to an order of the House for a return. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Prisoners' Pay

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the results of the review of prisoners' pay.

Mr. Mellor: Consideration of the review of inmates' earnings by the prisons board has identified the need for some further work to be done. The outcome will be announced as soon as conclusions are reached.

Police Officers

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his policy on having an officer class in the police forces;

(2) what consideration he is giving to the introduction of an officer class in the police forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We need to look actively for opportunities to recruit talented people from all sources while recognising that senior police officers need to start their careers by gaining experience as constables.

Immigration

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on a common immigration policy at European Community level.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: EC Heads of Government agreed at the European Council in Strasbourg in December 1989 that an inventory of member states' immigration position should be prepared, with a view to further discussion at ministerial level. I would not wish to prejudge the outcome of this discussion, but we have made it clear that we regard immigration policy as a national matter.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how much crime figures have increased since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: Since 1979 and up to the end of March 1990, recorded crime has increased by 58 per cent. However, there is evidence from the British crime survey that the real increase in crime has been less than that recorded by the police: between 1981 and 1987, survey crimes increased by 30 per cent. compared with 41 per cent. for comparable crimes recorded by the police. Results of the 1988 British crime survey are published in Home Office research study 111. Recorded crime figures for 1979 are published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1988"—Cm. 847—and for the 12 months to March 1990 in Home Office statistical bulletin 19/90. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Territorial Seas

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the territorial sea round the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands is to be extended to 12 miles.

Mr. Waddington: The Isle of Man has asked that such an extension be made. Agreement in principle has been reached on the terms and conditions for the transfer of rights relating to petroleum beneath the sea bed. Agreement has also been reached for compensation to be paid to the Crown Estate for its interests in the extended territorial sea. Rights for coal will not be transferred at this time, but may be subject to negotiation at a later date. In exercising jurisdiction over fisheries, the established rights of all fishermen will be safeguarded and any measures will be subject to approval by Fisheries Ministers. On the basis of these negotiations, it is proposed that the territorial sea wil be extended. Discussions are continuing with Jersey and Guernsey.

HEALTH

Benefit Provision

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to investigate ways in which the families of individuals who are seriously ill can be given better financial security.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

On 10 January we laid before Parliament "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" which details our major proposals arising from our review of the balance and structure of social security benefits for long-term sick and disabled people and their carers. With effect from October 1990 we propose to remove the six-month qualifying period for attendance allowance for people who are terminally ill. Carers of people who are terminally ill will automatically be eligible to claim invalid care allowance. Also effective from October 1990 a carer's premium, initially at a rate of £10 a week, will be introduced into income support and housing benefit for those receiving invalid care allowance. This will help 30,000 carers.

Complementary Medicine

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of complementary medicine; what aspects of impending EEC legislation were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: My hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State met representatives of the complementary therapies on 29 November 1989. At the meeting they expressed fears that their professions might be adversely affected by EC legislation.

There are three current EC directives in this area—two on higher education diplomas one of a general nature, containing nothing specific to individual professions; they will not affect alternative practitioners' right to practise in the United Kingdom. The purpose of the other directive, on homeopathic medicinal products, is to achieve a single market whilst safeguarding public health. Our considerations will take account of United Kingdom interests and traditions.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what money Her Majesty's Government have allocated specifically for public health education for the avoidance of contracting HIV and AIDS in each year since such an allocation was first made; whether any major new campaign is proposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The table sets out total allocations made to regional health authorities, local authorities and to the voluntary sector as a contribution towards the development of HIV and AIDS-related services, including educational and other initiatives to help further prevent the spread of HIV and AIDS. The table also shows spending by the Department of Health and the Health Education Authority (HEA) on AIDS public education work between 1985-86 and 1987-88, and allocations to the HEA for the development of the national AIDS public education campaign from October 1987 and in subsequent years. These amounts include the running costs of the national AIDS helpline and related telephone information and advice services. Not shown in the table are the amounts spent by other Government Departments on HIV prevention work within their own spheres of interest.

So far as general Government strategies for HIV prevention are concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 15 June at columns 372-73.

Graham Gaskin

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will direct Liverpool city council to allow Graham Gaskin access to his file.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no power under which my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State can order a local authority to release confidential records of this kind.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health following the ruling of the European Court of Human Rights on the Graham Gaskin case, what steps the Government have taken to implement the ruling; whether an independent procedure has yet been established to consider the release of Graham Gaskin's file; and what legislation is being considered arising out of the case.

Mr. Dorrell: The implications of the ruling of the European Court of Human Rights for the arrangements governing access to personal records are being carefully reviewed. Decisions on the need to modify those arrangements will be taken on completion of the review, at which stage I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ascertain whether the Graham Gaskin file is complete and request that a copy be deposited with his office for safe keeping.

Mr. Dorrell: The file relating to Mr. Graham Gaskin is, quite properly, held by Liverpool city council. We have no wish to assume its responsibility for its safe keeping, nor does my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State have power to require the council to supply a copy.

Child Migrants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) further to his answer of 15 January, Official Report, column 81, how many further inquiries he has received on the Child Migrant Trust; and what steps he is taking to encourage such inquiries;

(2) how many child migrants has the Department helped since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Two further inquiries relating to the Child Migrant Trust's grant application have been received since 15 January.

Responsibility for the welfare of former child migrants rests with the countries to which they have emigrated.

Neuroblastoma

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to the statement by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health in the Adjournment Debate on neuroblastoma on 30 March, Official Report, column 870, if he will now state the number of children diagnosed with the disease and the number of deaths from it in each of the years since 1980; if there is any progress he can report in regard to research on screening the disease; and if there is any further action he is taking arising from the debate.

Mr. Dorrell: I understand that the Medical Research Council is considering the need for research on screening for neuroblastoma. I wrote to the right hon. Member on 27 June offering to discuss this topic further with him and parents' representatives. The statistical information requested is as follows:

Year	Neuroblastoma diagnosed at age 0-14 (England)	Neuroblastoma deaths at age 0-14 (England)

Hospital Watch Schemes

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department is doing to encourage the extension of hospital watch schemes.

Mr. Dorrell: It is the responsibility of health authorities to determine security arrangements but we welcome local initiatives such as hospital watch schemes.

Health Authorities

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his reasons for seeking to prohibit full-time trade union officials from sitting on health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 July 1990]: The new Membership and Procedure Regulations disqualify from non-executive membership of a regional or district health authority a person who holds any paid employment or office with a trade union which represents the interests of members who are employed by a health service body. This is one of a number of grounds for disqualification from health authority membership which aim to avoid any conflict of interest on the part of health authority members. It is for the same reason that directors of NHS trusts; members of other regional and district health authorities; members of the family health services authorities (FHSAs) (except for the FHSA chairman member of RHAs) and GPs who are practice fund holders are disqualified from membership by the regulations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many written parliamentary questions he has answered; and how many of these were in reply to hon. Members representing Northern Ireland constituencies in each of the last two parliamentary Sessions and the current Session to the latest convenient date indicating in a table (a) how many were answered by each Northern Ireland Office Minister, (b) how many were answered on the date requested and (c) in how many cases a holding reply was first given.

Mr. Cope: In the 1988-89 and 1989-90 (to 9 July 1990) Sessions 1,162 and 1,079 written parliamentary questions were answered. Of those 766 and 781 respectively were in reply to hon. Members for Northern Ireland. Similar information for the 1987-88 Session is not available.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the information from the 1991 census in Northern Ireland will make it possible to aggregate population and employment statistics on a constituency basis.

Mr. Needham: As for past censuses, the 1991 census in Northern Ireland will have the capacity to aggregate population and employment statistics on the basis of local government districts and wards. Since the boundaries of these do not correspond to constituency boundaries it will not be possible to produce exact statistics for the latter. Instead, where required, they will be provided on an estimated basis, making appropriate adjustment for boundary differences.

Unemployment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the latest available figures which indicate unemployment in each parliamentary constituency and in each electoral ward in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The information available is as follows:

Numbers of unemployed claimants by parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland at 10 May 1990

Parliamentary constituency	Total number of unemployed claimants
Belfast East	3,994
Belfast North	6,588
Belfast South	4,465
Belfast West	9,222
East Antrim	4,576
East Londonderry	6,986
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	6,363
Foyle	9,835

North Down	3,400
South Antrim	3,927
South Down	5,117
Strangford	3,258
Upper Bann	4,920
Total	96,064

Note: Figures for parliamentary constituencies are estimated from ward data.

Since there are 566 electoral wards in Northern Ireland I will write to the hon. Member, giving unemployment figures for each electoral ward, and place copies of the information in the House of Commons Library.

Housing

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's activities in the last financial year and what figures in respect of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive are available to indicate (a) the dwelling stocks, (b) the collectable rent which should have been received from tenants, (c) expenditure on repairs and maintenance of stock, (d) expenditure on new buildings, (e) expenditure on rehabilitation of stock, (f) expenditure on salaries and administration, (g) expenditure on grants to the private sector, (h) expenditure incurred on interest charges and (i) grant received from the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total cost of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's activities in the last financial year (1989-90) was £476,310,000.

The detailed information sought is as follows:

(a) Total housing stock at 31 March 1990 was 169,971
(b) Rent collectable £169,414,000
(c) Expenditure on repairs and maintenance £70,139,000
(d) Expenditure on new building £51,280,000
(e) Expenditure on rehabilitation of stock £76,606,000
(f) Expenditure on salaries and administration £46,256,000
(g) Expenditure on grants to the private sector £36,185,000
(h) Expenditure incurred on interest charges £170,000,000
(i) Housing grant from DOE (NI) £157,373,000

Most of the information concerns the executive's revenue expenditure which is financed partly by rental income and partly by a grant (housing grant) from the Department of the Environment Northern Ireland to meet the difference between rental income and approved revenue expenditure.

The executive's capital expenditure includes new build and rehabilitation of existing stock which is financed by borrowing mainly from the Government and by capital receipts from the sale of dwellings, land and mortgage redemptions.

Firearms

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the Ulster Defence Regiment, and its reserve, currently hold private firearms certificates.

Mr. Cope: The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has informed me that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Emergency Provisions

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to publish the report on Lord Colville's review of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts 1978 and 1987.

Mr. Brooke: It has been published today (Cm. 1115). I am most grateful to Lord Colville for his comprehensive and detailed report, which deserves to be widely read. The Government will consider carefully his recommendations and in due course bring forward proposals for new legislation. In the meantime, the Government would welcome the views both of hon. Members and of the public at large on the matters addressed in the review.

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what system he employs to classify, log and otherwise record each document generated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 2 July 1990]: Staff are provided with clear instructions on the registering and classification of documents and on the transmission and storage of classified documents.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria he uses when deciding which documents to pass on to the Public Record Office.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 2 July 1990]: No document falls due for selection and transfer to the Public Record Office until it is at least 30 years old. A document's suitability for permanent preservation under the terms of the Public Records Act 1958 will be reviewed during that period. The Act does not require statistics to be kept in the form requested and to do so would inevitably incur disproportionate cost. However, in order to comply with their duties under the Act, Departments are obliged to ensure that all documentary records are properly preserved with a view to possible transfer to the Public Record Office and eventual release to the public. The general criteria under which the Department may retain documents over 30 years old are set out in section 3(4) of the Public Records Act.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Monetary Union

88. Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has discussed with his European Community counterparts the compatibility of European monetary union with the principle of subsidiarity.

Mr. Lilley: In discussions with his ECOFIN colleagues my right hon. Friend has stressed the need for all economic and monetary arrangements in the Community to respect the principle of subsidiarity.

89. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the current progress of discussions regarding the achievement of economic and monetary union in the European Community.

Mr. Lilley: Economic and monetary union was last discussed at the European Council in Dublin on 25-26 June. It was agreed that more convergence of member states' economic performance and wider use of the ecu were needed during stage 1; and that the intergovernmental conference to decide on further stages should open on 13 December. ECOFIN and the Foreign Affairs Council and their committees will now continue their preparatory work.

Inflation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the rate of inflation for the period April 1990 to April 1991.

Mr. Ryder: It is not the practice to publish month-by-month forecasts for inflation. The FSBR forecast that all-items RPI inflation would be 5 per cent. in 1991Q2.

Football Clubs

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he holds on arrears of three months or more on (a) pay as you earn and (b) value added tax payments by professional football clubs.

Mr. Lilley: Information held by the Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise about individual football clubs is, of course, confidential and may not be disclosed. A global figure of arrears over three months old for all professional football clubs could not be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost.

Independent Taxation

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the benefits of independent taxation for married women.

Mr. Lilley: Independent taxation, which took effect on 6 April 1990, offers all married women the opportunity to enjoy independence and privacy in their own tax affairs.

Every married woman is now entitled to a personal allowance and basic rate band in her own right, which she can set against her own income of any kind. This includes any income which she may have from savings or investments, and any state retirement pension which she may receive by virtue of her husband's national insurance contributions. The allowance is given at higher, age-related levels if she is aged 65 or over, subject to her own income limit.

Almost 3 million wives (just under half of all wives on whose income tax is charged) will have less tax charged on their income, because they will have their own personal allowance and their income will no longer be taxed as if it belonged to their husband. These changes remove the tax penalty on marriage because the tax payable on a married woman's income will now never exceed—as it could previously—the tax payable by a single woman on the same income.

Sterling-Deutschmark Link

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what dates the pound sterling has been linked by Her Majesty's Government informally to the deutschmark at given rates of exchange since June 1983; what were the exchange rates on each given date; how long each arrangement was maintained; and if he will list the changes in the United Kingdom interest rates during each period of each informal link.

Mr. Major [holding answer 5 July 1990]: Tables 13.1 and 13.8 of the Central Statistical Office's monthly publication "Financial Statistics" give information on sterling's exchange rate against other major currencies and United Kingdom short-term interest rates, respectively.

Government Shareholdings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the answer of 11 December, Official Report, column 463, on (a) the golden shares and (b) other shares currently owned by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Lilley [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1990, c. 112-13]: I regret that Southern Water was accidentally omitted from the list of companies in which the Government hold a special share.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hampshire

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what are the statutory duties of (a) Hampshire county council and (b) his Department and its regional offices in relation to the development of commercial and industrial links with the lower Normandy area of the EEC;

(2) what are the statutory duties of (a) Hampshire county council and (b) his Department for the provision of services to assist the location of industry and commerce in Hampshire.

Mr. Ridley: The Hampshire county council has no statutory duties to develop commercial and industrial links with lower Normandy or to provide services to assist the location of industry and commerce in Hampshire.

My Department has a number of powers (but no statutory duties) to achieve these ends, but is making limited use of them at present.

GATT

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration has been given to the environmental implications of the European Community and the United States' proposals on trade-related investment measures and trade in intellectual property rights in the current general agreement on tariffs and trade round.

Mr. Redwood: The Government believe that agreements such as those sought by the European Community and the United States in the current GATT Uruguay round negotiations to liberalise trade in the fields of investment and intellectual property will helpfully complement wider international efforts to tackle global and regional environmental problems. For example, by providing greater incentives and security for innovators, a GATT agreement leading to improved international protection of intellectual property would help facilitate the investment and technology flows needed to meet environmental challenges.

Chambers of Commerce

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many chambers of commerce have received assistance from his Department in the last 12 months.

Mr. Redwood: Thirty-seven chambers have received funding in respect of their position as local host organisations under the enterprise and education initiative. Seventeen chambers have received funding to assist with the appointment of export development advisers. Six chambers have received funding for various activities from inner-city task forces. Three chambers have received funding as part of the Department's support for the South-West Export Federation initiative.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the matters which are under discussion between himself and chambers of commerce; when he next plans to meet their representatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is intending to meet Mr. Miles Middleton, president of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce (ABCC), later this month to discuss the ABCC's five-year development plan.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of chambers of commerce; and what was discussed.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of chambers of commerce at a dinner organised by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce on 19 December 1989. A general discussion of the role of chambers of commerce took place.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in which Group of Seven countries it is compulsory for local businesses to be members of the chamber of commerce in order to trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: It is compulsory for local businesses to be members of the chamber of commerce in order to trade in France, Italy and West Germany.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what functions are currently contracted out by his Department to chambers of commerce; and what proposals he has to extend this cover.

Mr. Redwood: The Association of British Chambers of Commerce (ABCC) has, since 1966, acted as the Department's agent in the administration of the certificates of origin scheme. Since January 1989 the export marketing research scheme has been operated by the ABCC on behalf of the Department on a three-year contract. In May 1990 the ABCC assumed responsibility for issuing international import certificates. Officials are currently holding discussions with the ABCC regarding the possibility of transferring the issue of certificates of experience to chambers of commerce.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the Government have done to protect the title and definitive status of chambers of commerce and industry.

Mr. Redwood: The titles "Chamber of Commerce", "Chamber of Industry" and "Chamber of Trade" are specified in the schedule to Statutory Instrument 1981 No. 1685 ("The Company and Business Names Regulations 1981").

This schedule specifies words and expressions for whose registration as, or as part of, a company's corporate name or whose use as, or as part of, a business name the Secretary of State's approval is required.

Insider Trading

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases of alleged insider trading were investigated by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Redwood: The power to appoint inspectors to investigate possible insider trading is contained in section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986 which came into force in November 1986. The Secretary of State has made the following number of appointments for each year since then:

1986	1987	1988	1989	[1] 1990

[1] to date

These statistics are published at page 152 of the Trade and Industry Committee third report on company investigations.

British Telecom

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any proposals to relinquish his golden share in British Telecom.

Mr. Forth: The articles of association of British Telecommunications plc require that the special share in the company may be held only by Her Majesty's Government. It could not therefore be sold.

Share Transfers

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Scretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to facilitate the introduction of electronic recording and transfer of shares.

Mr. Redwood: Section 207 of the Companies Act 1989 gives me power to make regulations to enable title to securities to be evidenced and transferred without a written instrument. The international stock exchange (ISE) has published proposals for the introduction of TAURUS, its scheme for recording and transferring shares electronically in October 1991, and I am therefore considering the form of the regulations which I should make.

I welcome developments that improve the international competitiveness of the United Kingdom as a financial centre. However, the introduction of electronic share transfers will also affect the way in which companies can meet their obligations, and change the manner in which investors hold shares. Striking the right balance between the interests of investors, companies and market participants may not be easy and I would like to hear the comments of a wide range of interested parties before reaching decisions on how to proceed.

I am today publishing a consultative paper which describes the proposed legal framework for TAURUS, and seeks views on how different rights and obligations should be handled by statutory provisions or by the appropriate regulatory bodies. Comments are invited by 14 September. I am arranging for a copy of the paper to be placed in the Library of the House.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to take any steps to ensure that the privatised insurance group of the ECGD will not operate in direct competition with the ECGD.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 July 1990]: The core business of the Insurance Services Group of the ECGD is quite different from that of the project group. The question of their competing is therefore unlikely to arise.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce the name of the successful bidder for the Insurance Services Group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 July 1990]: Final decisions have not yet been taken about the proposed method of sale of the Insurance Services Group, which would be subject to the necessary legislation. It is not therefore possible at present to say when I will be in a position to announce the name of any successful bidder(s).

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce the site of the new offices of the Insurance Services Group, Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 July 1990]: Decisions on the site of any new offices would be for the new management and owners.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any proposition has been submitted to him and the ECGD concerning the possible conversion of the ECGD's projects group into a "next steps"-style agency.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 July 1990]: In his written answer of 18 December 1989, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced that the precise form of the organisation of ECGD after the separation of its Insurance Services Group would be decided as soon as possible. Decisions would focus on whether ECGD should remain a Department or acquire agency status.

A review has been conducted by the Office of the Minister of the Civil Service (OMCS) to inform that decision. This has taken account of the views expressed by a number of interested parties some of which were opposed to the idea of agency status. A final decision is expected to be announced very shortly.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the accumulated net annual profit or loss in respect of the Export Credits Guarantee Department and the main export credit insurers in (a) the United States of America, (b) Japan, (c) West Germany, (d) France and (e) Italy at the end of the 1988-89 financial year.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 10 July 1990]: The accumulated net annual profit and loss of the Export Credits Guarantee Department as at the end of the 1988-89 financial year can be found in the trading accounts laid before the House in HC 153 in February 1990. Owing to different organisational structures and accounting practices, no comparable figures are available for the other countries from published sources.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the annual profit or loss in respect of the Export Credits Guarantee Department and the main export credit insurers in (a) the United States of America, (b) Japan, (c) West Germany, (d) France and (e) Italy in 1988-89.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 July 1990]: The profit and loss account for the 1988-89 financial year of the Export Credits Guarantee Department can be found in the trading accounts laid before the House in HC 153 in February 1990. Owing to different organisational structures and accounting practices, no comparable figures are available for the other countries from published sources.

Leather Industry

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he intends to take, in conjunction with the United States of America and European Community countries, to protect the leather industry when the current tariff quota agreement expires in March 1991.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 4 July 1990]: The hon. Member is right that the tariff quota agreement with Japan expires in March 1991.

The agreement imposes high import duties on all but a small volume of EC imports of dressed leather and leather footwear whereas EC import duties on those products are low.

Negotiations are handled by the EC. They are currently aiming to reduce Japan's import duties on dressed leather and leather footwear in the Uruguay round and bilaterally.

The EC Commission will look at any allegations of unfair trade practices if damage is being done to the domestic EC industry.

Takeovers

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to alter his policy regarding hostile takeovers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 5 July 1990]: No. The 1988 blue paper policy made clear our belief that the possibility of takeover acts as an important discipline on incumbent managements to demonstrate to their shareholders that they are running their companies as efficiently as possible. I have no plans to amend our policy in respect of hostile takeover bids (which form only a small proportion of the total merger activity in the United Kingdom). It is in general up to the shareholders whether to accept or reject a bid. The main grounds for deciding whether to refer a bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will continue to be its likely effect on competition.

Amateur Radio

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much time the radio investigation service spends monitoring (a) the amateur bands, and (b) amateur radio licence enforcement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 6 July 1990]: The radio investigation service (RIS) works to clearly defined priorities. These are firstly to deal with complaints of interference to radio used by emergency and other safety of life services; secondly with complaints of interference to those who depend on radio for the successful operation of their businesses; and thirdly with other categories of radio use. The amateur radio hobby falls within the third category. Figures of time spent monitoring the amateur bands and on amateur licence enforcement are not separately recorded.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce a novice amateur radio licence.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 6 July 1990]: The licensing of amateur radio is the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry. I announced on 19 April 1990 that a final draft of the amateur novice licence has been published and that the Radiocommunications Agency of the DTI hoped to be ready to issue the first novice licence in early 1991. A press notice was issued to that effect.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what action radio investigation service officers are taking to stop abuse on GB35L, GB3BM and GB3NA amateur radio repeaters; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received about the damage being done to amateur radio by continuous abuse of the VHF two-metre repeater network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 6 July 1990]: A number of complaints have been received about abuse on these repeater stations. When the radio investigation service (RIS) of my Department's Radiocommunications Agency is able to prove offences or to establish that improper use of radio facilities has occurred, appropriate action is taken. This may include licence variation or prosecution. In addition to action which the RIS can take it is currently discussing proposals with the Radio Society of Great Britain, the licensee for repeaters, to exercise closer control of repeater stations.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many radio investigation service officers were in post in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990 to date.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 6 July 1990]: Staff in post figures for radio investigation service district offices are published each year in the annual report of my Department's Radiocommunications Agency. The figures were (at 1 April each year):

	In post
1986	188
1987	184
1988	154
1989	140·5
1990	143·5

The figures for 1985 are not available.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will close down radio voice repeaters in the United Kingdom until the Radio Society of Great Britain self-policing scheme is in operation.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 6 July 1990]: In general, no. The majority of amateur radio repeaters are used by responsible licensees. Closure in specific cases is an option if there is abuse.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the number of radio investigation service officers required to cope with the workload.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 6 July 1990]: The performance of the radio investigation service of my Department's Radiocommunications Agency is kept under review to ensure that the service is correctly resourced. I am satisfied that the number of officers is appropriate to the present workload.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many amateur radio operators licences have been revoked by him in 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 6 July 1990]: The number of amateur radio licences revoked was: in 1988, nil; in 1989, seven; in 1990 to date, two are being considered.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Radio Society of Great Britain amateur observation service is currently operational; and if he will list any occasions in the last year in which it has not been operational.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 6 July 1990]: This is a matter for the Radio Society of Great Britain.

0898 Telephone Lines

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the voluntary codes for governing services available on 0898 number telephone lines; and if he has plans further to regulate such lines.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 9 July 1990]: This is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications who has taken firm action to control 0898 and other premium-rate services. He announced on 29 June that from 10 July he is to withdraw recognition of the code of practice that governs "one-to-one" premium-rate services. They will not be able to operate from that date unless a new code of practice is recognised by the director general.

Philately Counters

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on (a) the number of specialist philately counters currently operating at post offices in England and Wales, (b) the location of those currently proposed for closure and (c) the total value of annual sales through these counters.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 9 July 1990]: The Post Office tells me there are currently 33 philatelic counters in operation in England and Wales of which seven are new-style "collections" centres opened this financial year. There are, I understand, no plans to close any philatelic counters at present. The figure for the total value of annual sales through these counters is not available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

United Nations Development Programme

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the United Kingdom's contributions to the United Nations Development Programme for every year since 1979 in current prices, real prices (1990 prices) and as a percentage of United Nations Development Programme's total budget.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all aid and trade provision projects from 1979 to date with the companies and the sums of money involved.

Mrs. Chalker: The aid and trade provision projects funded since 1979 are listed in the following schedule.

[1] Economic Commission for West African States.

India

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, column 125, what proportion of United Kingdom bilateral aid was spent on the projects in housing, welfare, education and renewable natural resources sectors, which were regarded as being for direct poverty alleviation.

Mrs. Chalker: The proportion of bilateral aid to India spent from 1980 to 1988 on projects in housing, welfare and education was 7 per cent., and in renewable natural resources sectors 11 per cent., giving a total for the poverty-focused sectors of 18 per cent.

It is not possible to extend this analysis to the aid programme as a whole because the circumstances in India, which mean that spending there in these sectors can be directly attributed to poverty alleviation, are not necessarily applicable in other countries.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Secondary Schools

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria he uses to define the physical capacity of secondary schools; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of these criteria.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The pupil capacity of a maintained school is defined in the light of the statutory minimum teaching area (MTA) requirements set out in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. In connection with the more open enrolment provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988, an LEA or school governing body wishing to vary the standard number for admissions to a secondary school is invited to complete a questionnaire based on pupil work places. The information provided permits the calculation of an indicated admission limit for the school. The method, with minor amendments, has been in use since 1978. It takes account of the size, purpose and intensity of use of each space, and of the number and age of pupils on roll. These criteria appear adequate for the purpose. The procedures allow for the individual consideration of cases where necessary.

Computers

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the level of integration of computers on to the school timetable.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information is not available. The level of integration of information technology across the curriculum will vary with such factors as the age of pupils, subjects timetabled, the availability of microcomputers and other information technology equipment, and the expertise of teachers in the effective use of information technology. This is not statistically quantifiable.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to have all appointments to the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college suspended until such time as the Haberdashers' city technology college trust company has been formed and that body has adopted a code of good employment practices.

Mrs. Rumbold: Appointments will be made in conformity with the requirements of employment legislation following the establishment of the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college trust.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will make a statement concerning the compensation of local education authorities for costs they may incur directly or indirectly, as a result of the closure of a voluntary school under section 14 of the Education Act 1944 for the purposes of converting the school to a city technology college;

(2) if he will fully compensate Lewisham education authority for the redundancy payments it will be obliged to make as a result of the closure of the Haberdashers' Aske's schools in Deptford and their conversion to a city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is not empowered to pay compensation to any local education authority for the costs, if any, it may incur as a result of the discontinuance of a voluntary school under section 14 of the Education Act 1944.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the deadline for receiving proposals relating to the catchment area, admissions policy and pupil numbers for the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college trust, when established, to decide when it wishes to invite applications for first year places at the CTC for September 1991, subject to the Secretary of State having already agreed the trust's admissions policy.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the £1 million sponsorship for the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college, to be underwritten by the Haberdashers' Company, additional to the value of the existing schools' sites, will be contributed towards either capital or revenue costs of the college.

Mrs. Rumbold: The £1 million sponsorship which the Haberdashers' Company has undertaken to underwrite may be contributed towards capital costs.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional steps his Department will take to consult those local education authorities whose own educational planning may be affected before approving any proposals relating to catchment area, admissions policy and pupil numbers for the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave her on 22 June 1990, Official Report, column 717.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college will be legally constituted, for the purposes of section 105 of the Education Reform Act 1988 and paragraph 21 of the model funding agreement, as a single school or two schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college will be a single CTC which has single-sex departments. The college will be managed by a single charitable company, and will be conducted by one governing body on the basis of a single instrument of government and one funding agreement with the Secretary of State.

Higher Education (Research Equipment)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to ensure that the most recent allocations of the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council for research equipment in universities and polytechnics match the investment recommended by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The allocation of grant to individual higher education institutions is the responsibility of the funding councils. The Universities Funding Council's allocations for equipment take into account relative research strengths. The Government's latest expenditure plans allow for further increases in spending on equipment.

Reading Standards

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will place in the Library of the House a note summarising the main evidence and conclusions of the group of senior educational psychologists from nine local education authorities, concerning reading standards; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what study, and with what conclusions, Her Majesty's inspectors have yet been able to make of the evidence and conclusions about reading standards of senior educational psychologists from nine local education authorities.

Mr. MacGregor: I have called for the evidence underlying the reported conclusions of the nine senior educational psychologists. The information that has been made available to Her Majesty's inspectors to date provides an insufficient basis to support firm conclusions concerning the claim that reading standards have fallen significantly. I am continuing to try to accumulate evidence.

SCOTLAND

Takare plc

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct Greater Glasgow health board to disclose the weekly cost per bed which it will pay to Takare plc under the recently signed contract for care of the elderly in Rutherglen.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have already asked Greater Glasgow health board to write to the hon. Member on this matter. I understand that it has now done so.

City of Culture

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any current plans to commemorate Glasgow's year as the City of Culture by releasing further specific funding to the city for a permanent environmental testament to the year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government are contributing £0·5 million directly to the European City of Culture 1990 and, in addition, Government-funded bodies are committing significant resources in support of particular events taking place in 1990. The City of Glasgow district council did not include in its latest financial plan any proposals to commemorate Glasgow's year as City of Culture and there has been no subsequent request for funding or capital consent for this purpose.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many registered holdings in Scotland are eligible for less-favoured area projects.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland, 19,047 holdings submitting agricultural census returns in 1989 contained land classified as less favoured, which confers eligibility for benefits such as hill livestock compensatory allowances and enhanced rates of capital grants.

Drinking Water

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to make mandatory the awarding of grant where the level of lead in drinking water of a privately owned house is above that set out in the European Community directive on the quality of water for human consumption.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have at present no plans to alter the grant arrangements for replacement of lead plumbing. I shall, however, give this matter further consideration when I have the findings of a survey which the Scottish Development Department is currently undertaking of local authorities, new towns and Scottish Homes to establish the incidence of domestic lead plumbing in Scotland.

Mental Welfare Commission

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members of the Mental Welfare Commission are members of health boards; and if he will give their names.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: One, Mrs. J. I. D. Isbister.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members of the Mental Welfare Commission since its inception have simultaneously held health board appointments; and if he will give their names.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not readily available.

Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average length of custodial sentence of female prisoners in Scotland in 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics on court disposals during 1989 are not yet available. Provisional estimates based on prison reception statistics indicate that in 1989 the average length of sentence of females received into the penal system on direct sentence was 118 days. Thee were no females received into penal establishments in 1989 sentenced to life imprisonment or indeterminate detention.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners were transferred from (a) Scotland to Northern Ireland and (b) Northern Ireland to Scotland in 1989; and under which section of the Criminal Justice Act 1961 such transfers were carried out.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: One from Scotland to Northern Ireland and one from Northern Ireland to Scotland, both under section (27)1.

Paramilitary Activity

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons have been (a) killed and (b) injured in Scotland in 1989 as a result of paramilitary activity; and if he will break down the figures specifying whether the paramilitaries were (i) from western Europe, (ii) from Northern Ireland, (iii) from the Republic of Ireland, (iv) from other parts of the world and (v) of unknown origin.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

A1 (Upgrading)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to upgrade the A1 to motorway standard.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Traffic levels on the A1 through Borders region are approximately 5,000 vehicles per day. Even on the highest predictions for traffic growth and making allowance for improvements to the route south of Newcastle we do not expect this figure to rise to a level which would justify dual carriageway or motorway provision. We are, however, providing dual carriageway on those sections of the route which justify it, and plan to spend £50 million on the A1 in due course.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of agricultural land has been designated as environmentally sensitive in Scotland; what percentage of land in the environmentally sensitive areas is farmed under this scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Approximately 3 per cent. of agricultural land in Scotland is within environmentally sensitive areas. Some 46 per cent. of the eligible agricultural land within those areas is farmed under the scheme.

School Class Sizes

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown by subject of class sizes from years S1 to S6 categorised according to (a) normal classes, for class sizes (i) under 20, (ii) 20 to 24, (iii) 25 to 30 and (iv) over 30 and (b) practical classes, for class sizes (i) under 15, (ii) 16 to 20 and (iii) over 20.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 21 May 1990]: The information requested is shown in the form of a percentage distribution of subject groups by average teaching group in roll bands, using provisional figures for September 1989.

Four key points arise from these figures of interest to those concerned about the issue of class sizes in our schools.

(i) in years S1 and S2 over 96 per cent. of teaching groups have no more than 30 pupils (the normal maximum in the teachers' scheme of conditions of service is 33 pupils per class);

(ii) in S3 and S4 almost two thirds of teaching groups have 20 pupils or fewer. In languages, mathematics and social subjects around 80 per cent. of teaching groups have 25 pupils or fewer (the S3-S6 maxima are 30 pupils per class);

(iii) in S5 almost 80 per cent. of teaching groups have up to 20 pupils and over 80 per cent. in many subjects have up to 15 pupils;

(iv) in S6 84 per cent. of teaching groups have up to 15 pupils.

Seals

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show the species of seals and the number of each species found and/or resident in Scottish coastal waters, and indicate how many (a) juveniles, (b) adult males and (c) adult females there are of each species; what the numbers were five, 10 and 20 years ago; and if he will indicate his estimate of the amount of fish consumed by each seal species every year and the breakdown of fish species consumed by weight and/or number or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 July 1990]: There are no complete counts of either grey or common seals in Scottish waters, and no separate figures for the numbers of juveniles, adult males, or adult females of either species.

Estimates of total population of seals, resident in Scottish waters, made by the sea mammal research unit (SMRU) of the Natural Environment Research Council are as follows:

GREY SEALS

1989—between 76,500 and 97,500
1984—between 58,500 and 74,500
1979—between 41,000 and 53,500
1969—between 27,000 and 34,000

COMMON SEALS

1989—19,900

The figures for grey seals are based on counts of pups, and the ranges given reflect the confidence limits of indirect calculation in this way. The estimate for common seals in 1989 is the only such estimate available at present.

The diet of seals varies with locality and season and it is difficult to analyse or estimate accurately prey taken by seals at sea.

Estimates of total diet of grey seals in the North sea in 1985 have been made by SMRU for a report, "Impact of Grey and Common Seals on North Sea Resources", under a research contract for the Commission of the European Communities (Contract Number ENV 665 UK(H)). The estimates, based on faecal analysis, were as follows:

Estimated consumption by grey seals in 1985

Tonnes

	Northern North sea ICES division IVa	Central and Southern North sea ICES division IVb and IVc
Cod	1,250	9,575
Whiting	146	1,245
Haddock	690	788
Saithe	2,278	933
Norway Pout	—	31
Ling	—	374
Plaice	—	127
Lemon Sole	—	407
Mackerel	—	21
Sandeels	29,803	5,180
Dover Sole	—	304
Flounder	535	481
Dab	196	95

There are no reliable estimates of consumption by either species of seal in waters to the west of Scotland (ICES division VIa).

Methods of estimation of consumption by seals are known to have limitations. Further research is being undertaken to improve identification of the species and estimation of the quantities of fish in seal diets. The findings of these studies will be published in due course.

Warrant Sales

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what research has been carried out into warrant sales since the research report from the Scottish Law Commission published in October 1980;

(2) whether he has instructed any research to be undertaken as to the impact of (a) the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 and (b) the Debtors Scotland Act 1987 upon the use of warrant sales; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will commission further research into the characteristics of warrant sales, with particular reference to the number of warrant sales per annum, the total principal sums, expenses and sums realised, pursuer groups, amounts of principal sums, and the proportions of expenses and principal sums covered by sale proceeds distinguishing between personal warrant sales and commercial warrant sales.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 July 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Advocate keeps under review the need for and the optimum timing of the commissioning of research into the law of diligence. To this end, the operation of the new diligence legislation is being monitored, including the collection of statistical information on the number of poindings and warrant sales. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has policy responsibility for the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985.

Security Contracts

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy in respect of the Department of the Registers of Scotland putting security contracts out for private tender.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 July 1990]: Consistent with Government policy, and with a view to achieving value for money, the Department of the Registers of Scotland has been testing the market for the provision of security guarding at its premises.

EMPLOYMENT

Advisers

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to second a public relations adviser from the firm WPP to his Department.

Mr. Howard: I have no such plans.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to appoint further advisers to his Department.

Mr. Howard: My Department employs advisers in a range of specialist areas, including further education, TVEI and health and safety. Such appointments are made as circumstances require.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the external advisers currently assisting his Department.

Mr. Eggar: My Department seeks advice from those in a position to help with the development of its policies and its programmes. Details could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which firm has been appointed to advise on the work of his Department in the autumn campaign on training.

Mr. Eggar: Saatchi and Saatchi was appointed in May to advise on the Department's paid publicity. No decisions have been taken on an autumn training campaign.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) when he last met representatives of the firm WPP to discuss services to his Department;

(2) if he will make a statement on his meeting with Mr. Martin Sorrell, chief executive of WPP Group plc.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 9 July 1990]: I last met the chief executive of WPP plc on 21 March 1990. We discussed a wide range of issues.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what has been the total cost of paying retirement pensions in each year since 1980;

(2) what would have been the total cost of paying retirement pensions in each year since 1980, had pensions been uprated in line with the higher of earnings or movements in the retail prices index in each year concerned.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is set out in the table.

Residential Homes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much was spent on supplementary benefit or income support to people in independent residential care homes and nursing homes in Wales for each year since 1979 in Wales; and for each year what was the average payment made;

(2) how many claims there were for supplementary benefit or income support by people in independent residential care homes and nursing homes for each year since 1979 in Wales; and what proportion of residents received supplementary benefit for each year since 1979 in Wales.

Mr. Scott: Information in the form requested is not available.

Rochdale Offices

Sir Cyril Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to close offices in Rochdale metropolitan district council area, including Middleton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have no such plans. We have been carrying out a comprehensive review of the Department's existing network of local offices, arising from our plans to convert social security benefit operations into a "next steps" agency from April 1991. We intend to devolve authority for the day-to-day running of operations, to the greatest extent possible, from headquarters and the present regional tiers of management to local level. In practice, these units of administration, to be known as local management units, will be made up of two or more existing local offices controlled by a single management team. It is no part of our plans to reduce the number of local offices.

Local managers will have much more responsibility for planning their service to fit local needs, depending on factors such as the population to be served, predicted economic activity and local transport facilities. The emphasis will be on making the local service more responsive to the needs of local customers, not less.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he proposes to implement to increase the take-up of attendance allowance among members of the social security disabled persons register.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to mount such a campaign. The number of people receiving attendance allowance has more than doubled from 306,000 in 1979 to 763,000 in 1989.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the percentage of people on the social security disabled persons register currently not receiving the attendance allowances entitled to them; and how much money the unclaimed benefit amounts to.

Mr. Scott: Information is not kept in a form which would enable such a comparison to be made.

Pensioners

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners have ceased to be eligible for exemption from community charge benefit as a result of SI 1990 No. 462.

Mr. Scott: The statutory instrument quoted by the hon. Member amended the rules governing the exemption of severely mentally impaired people from any liability to pay the personal community charge. It did not alter the rules governing entitlement to community charge benefit: any person liable to pay the personal community charge, except for registered students who pay only 20 per cent. of that charge, is eligible to receive community charge benefit if his net income is low enough.

DEFENCE

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give such details as he is prepared to make public of the military equipment of the Ulster Defence Regiment and its reserve, listing separately firearms and the type of firearms, motor vehicles, armoured vehicles and the number of radio, radar and electronics surveillance equipment with which the regiment was equipped at the end of 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current deployment of weapons and vehicles for the Ulster Defence Regiment is as follows; the equivalent data for the end of 1989 have not been kept. The UDR has no reserve.

Weapons and vehicles	Number
5·56mm Rifle SA 80	5,843
5·56mm Rifle Light Support Weapon	912
7·62mm Machine Gun	6
9mm Pistol (Browning)	[1]865
9mm Pistol (Walther)	[2]1,985
Shotgun	3
L67 Riot Gun	167
Landrovers	447
4 Ton Trucks	16
Trailers	61
Recruiting Trailer	1
Other Vehicles	340

[1] 265 of which are issued as personal protection weapons—PPWs.
[2] 1,846 of which are issued as PPWs.

The Walther 9mm pistol has replaced the ·38in revolver, the ·22in pistol, and 7·65mm pistol as the standard UDR PPW. However, some Browning 9mm pistols are still issued as PPWs. The L67 riot gun was issued for use by the UDR in 1989. Other equipment can be issued when commitments or circumstances dictate. The radio allocation varies from week to week, depending upon the tasks and commitments of each battalion.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning current policy and practice of deployment of the Ulster Defence Regiment, with particular reference to the areas and circumstances in which it is deemed opportune and inopportune to deploy the regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The role of the Ulster Defence Regiment, as of any other regiment deployed in Northern Ireland, is to support the Royal Ulster Constabulary in the fight against terrorism. To fulfil this role the Ulster Defence Regiment may be deployed how and where military support to the police is required, except that for policy reasons the Ulster Defence Regiment is not deployed in west Belfast or the city of Londonderry; nor is it used for crowd control or riot duties.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Ulster Defence Regiment are currently estimated to be Catholics; what was the total recruitment in 1989; and what proportion of those recruited in 1989 are thought to be Catholic.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At the end of April 1990, a total of 184 soldiers, or 3 per cent. of the UDR were Roman Catholics. During the period 1 January to 31 December 1989, a total of 898 were enlisted, 34 of whom were Catholics.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the number of operatives, by rank, of those who have joined the Ulster Defence Regiment and its reserve, and of those who have resigned from the Ulster Defence Regiment, and its reserve, in the calendar year 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the costs of the Ulster Defence Regiment and its reserve, divided between wages and salaries, other personnel costs, costs of construction and buildings, investment in military equipment and other costs for the fiscal years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Estimated costs of the Ulster Defence Regiment for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90 are as follows:

£ million, current prices

Financial year	Wages and salaries	Support costs	Capital expenditure on equipment	Total
1988-89	54·1	5·0	0·6	59·7
1989-90	54·7	5·0	0·6	60·3

The figures for works costs are not readily available.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average time served by (i) full-time and (ii) part-time (a) officers and (b) other ranks of the Ulster Defence Regiment as at 31 December 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The most recent information available is for 1988 when the average length of service in the UDR was:

	Permanent cadre	Part-time
Officers
Male	4 years 6 months	9 years 4 months
Female	4 years 5 months	4 years 1 month
Soldiers
Male	7 years 6 months	6 years 9 months
Female	6 years 9 months	4 years 6 months

Radiation

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the implications for other ex-service personnel who were exposed to radiation, of the Lancashire coroner's findings in the case of Mr. Walter Fazackerley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the right hon. Member.

Military Flights

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 21 June, Official Report, columns 647-48, to the hon. Member for Don Valley, concerning the cost of passengers on military flights, what insurance cover was provided for the non-military persons involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

WALES

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the (a) chairmen and women, (b) vice-chairmen and women and (c) members of the boards of non-departmental public bodies in Wales.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines to non-departmental public bodies in Wales at chief executive level on equal opportunities principles to be used in appointments procedures for vacancies.

Mr. David Hunt: The principles of equal opportunities are covered by legislation of which non-departmental public bodies are aware. More detailed advice is given as and when the need arises.

Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department is taking to help first-time house seekers in Wales to secure a house to buy or rent at a price within their reach.

Mr. Grist: A large number of first-time buyers are able to buy a house at prices well within their reach through our right-to-buy policy and, more recently through our pilot flexi-ownership scheme in mid-Wales. Furthermore, there are a number of established low-cost home ownership initiatives operating in Wales and several authorities have developed innovative schemes to meet particular local needs. The Department actively encourages the development of these schemes both through the dissemination of information and best practice and by allowing the beneficial treatment of capital receipts derived from such schemes. In addition, Housing for Wales, funded this year in excess of £100 million, will provide some 3,000 new homes to rent and to buy at affordable prices, including innovative schemes for the elderly and for homes in rural areas. These new homes will supplement the substantial number of homes available for rent each year by local authorities at affordable rents.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information there is as to the number and proportion of homes in Wales (a) in need of repairs exceeding £2,000 and (b) which lack basic amenities; and whether the Welsh housing survey identifies those occupied by pensioners, unemployed single-parent families, disabled people and people with low incomes, respectively.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the following table; that for disabled people is not available.

Repair Costs and Availability of Basic Amenities, By Household Type[1]

Occupied first homes	Number	As a percentage of all occupied first homes[2]
Repair costs of £2,000 and over	180,900	17·7
Of these:
Household headed by person of pensionable age	71,200	7·0
Single parent household headed by unemployed person	500	—
Gross household income less than £4,000	90,900	8·9
Lacking one or more basic amenity	42,200	4·1
Of these:
Household headed by person of pensionable age	22,600	2·2
Single parent household headed by unemployed person	200	—
Gross household income less than £4,000	28,600	2·8

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses were built in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector in each district authority area in Wales in 1989; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the following tables. Figures exclude dwellings provided by rehabilitation or conversion.

District Nurse Training

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many places were (a) offered and (b) filled on district nurse training programmes in Wales in each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Grist: The information from 1983-84, obtained from the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, is given in the table. Data are not held centrally before the setting up of the board in 1982.

[1] Data not available.

It is the responsibility of each district health authority in Wales to determine its demand and training needs for district nurses according to manpower requirements.

Corlan Housing Association

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 4 July, if the investigation of the affairs of Corlan housing association will include its purchases of land over the last five years and the prices paid for that land.

Mr. Grist: The investigation is to establish whether mismanagement of the affairs of Corlan housing association or misconduct have taken place. The inquiry will focus on relevant events, including purchases of land, which have taken place in the last two years.

Inflation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he is offering to (a) district councils and (b) county councils in Wales in respect of the estimate of inflation they should use in the initial stages of preparing their finances for 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 9 July 1990, column 59.

Rivers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the causes of the increase between 1987 and 1988 in the percentage of rivers in Wales that fall into class 3 and 4 of the National Water Council grading system as shown in table 2.09 of the "Environmental Digest for Wales".

Mr. Grist: Between 1987 and 1988, 364 stretches of rivers in Wales, totalling 1,602·6 km, changed classification. Details are held by the Welsh region of the National Rivers Authority. The increases of stretches falling within classes 3 and 4, at 0·8 per cent. (37 km) and 0·2 per cent. (7 km) respectively are such that the authority does not consider them to be indicative of any significant overall trend.

Recycling

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to encourage the reclamation and recycling of (a) paper, (b) domestic waste and (c) industrial waste in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Environmental Protection Bill contains a range of measures which will assist and promote waste recycling and waste minimisation including a requirement for local authorities to draw up recycling plans. The Welsh Office is currently setting up an initiative to encourage industry to develop high standards of performance in waste minimisation and recycling. A wide range of Government grants is available to support research and development and industrial innovation in these areas.

Beaches

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by which date he expects those non-EC identified beaches currently failing to comply with standard criteria to meet such criteria; what standard criteria it is his policy that they should meet, and what actions he is taking or encouraging to that end.

Mr. Grist: The Government's priority is to ensure compliance of bathing waters identified under the EC directive. However, the recent announcement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment that all significant coastal and estuarial discharges of sewage will, as soon as practicable, receive treatment should have a beneficial effect on all our bathing waters.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of agricultural land has been designated as environmentally sensitive in Wales; what percentage of land in the environmentally sensitive areas is farmed under this scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The designated areas of the Lleyn peninsula and Cambrian mountains ESAs between them represent just over 11 per cent. of the total agricultural land in Wales. The Lleyn peninsula ESA covers 39,700 ha, 40 per cent. of which has been entered into the scheme. The Cambrian mountains ESA covers a total area of 153,000 ha, within which 79,900 ha will be eligible for management agreements. Twenty-eight per cent. of this eligible land has been entered into the scheme. Further applications are being processed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Central America

18. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any contact with the countries of central America on the prospects for peace in and between the countries concerned.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have regular contacts with the Governments of central America, including at the San Jose VI conference at which the EC, central America and Panama were represented together with Colombia, Mexico, and Venezuela. We consistently make clear our support for peaceful negotiated settlements to the various conflicts in the region. Recent events have given grounds for optimism.

Burma

19. Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the elections in Burma and the implications for Her Majesty's Government's policies.

Mr. Sainsbury: In a decisive rejection of the repressive policies of the current regime, the National League for Democracy won a massive victory in the election on 27 May. We welcome this, and are doing all we can to ensure that the regime gives effect to the clearly expressed wishes of the Burmese people by handing over power and releasing detained political leaders immediately.

Soviet Union

20. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the European Community proposal to provide an £8·5 billion economic development package for the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Maude: There is no such Community proposal.

European Free Trade Association

21. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in negotiations with the European Free Trade Association for the extension of the single market to European Free Trade Association countries through the creation of a European economic area.

Mr. Maude: These negotiations opened on 20 June and are being conducted in five working groups. Both the Community and the European Free Trade Association countries want agreement by the end of 1990 on the creation of the European economic area. We strongly support this.

Antarctica

22. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had expressing concern about non-scientific activities in Antarctica.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have received representations from many hon. Members and members of the public.

31. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning proposals to make Antarctica a world park.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to a reply given on 9 May to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall). I also met representatives of the environmental organisation Wildlife Link on 5 March.

26. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to ensure that the environment is protected in Antarctica.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 13 June to the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir. R. Johnston).

Middle East

23. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to European Community statements of 26 June on the middle east, what further action Her Majesty's Government intend taking to ensure protection of the Palestinian population.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Dublin declaration speaks for itself. We and our partners are committed to continued vigilance over human rights abuses in the occupied territories and to taking these up, in as effective a manner as possible, with the Israeli authorities.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts have been made by Her Majesty's Government with the newly formed Government in Israel.

Mr. Waldegrave: There have been a number of contacts on diplomatic channels. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to see his new Israeli colleague before long.

72. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to seek the same undertakings from the Government of Israel in relation to international terrorism as he has sought from the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Israeli Government know we abhor terrorism from whichever quarter it comes. Resort to deliberately planned acts of violence can only increase tension in the region and set back the search for peace.

63. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organisation to discuss the situation in Palestine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Mr. Bassam Abu Sharif on 1 March and I met him again as recently as 4 June.

We remain in regular contact with the PLO leadership and take every opportunity to urge them to maintain their commitment to the moderate policies adopted in 1988.

60. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received about the plight of United Kingdom citizens kidnapped in the Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have continued to receive representations as described in my answer of 12 July 1989 to the hon. Member.

58. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has plans to meet the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organisation to discuss the peace process in the middle east.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to meet Mr. Arafat. We are however in regular contact with the PLO leadership and urge them to maintain their commitment to the moderate policies adopted in 1988. It is this commitment which entitles them to participate in the peace process.

54. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to visit Israel to discuss the middle east peace process.

82. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Israel to discuss the peace process in the middle east.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to visit Israel before long. The Israeli Government are well aware of our views on the urgent need for direct dialogue with representative Palestinians.

40. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process.

53. Sir Dennis Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards a peace settlement in the middle east.

59. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to advance the peace process in the middle east.

Mr. Waldegrave: The situation in the middle east is serious. The continuing stalemate in the peace process plays into the hands of extremists on all sides and increases the danger of greater violence. European concerns were expressed in the Dublin declaration of 26 June. We are working closely with partners and with the United States to encourage Israel to open a dialogue with representative Palestinians as a first step towards a comprehensive settlement.

38. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet the new Foreign Minister of Israel to discuss the middle east situation.

64. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet a representative of the Israeli Government to discuss the middle east peace process.

65. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Israel concerning the situation in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs hopes to meet the new Israeli Foreign Minister before too long. We regularly discuss the peace process with the Israelis. They are well aware of our view that a direct dialogue between Israel and representative Palestinians is needed soon as a first step towards an overall settlement.

37. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Israeli Government about the occupation of the west bank and Gaza strip.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Israeli Government are in no doubt about our view that Israel should withdraw from territories occupied since 1967 as part of a comprehensive peace settlement and that pending such a withdrawal Israel should adhere to its obligations under the Geneva convention.

Economic and Political Co-operation

24. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the President of the European Commission to discuss economic and political co-operation.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and the President of the European Commission are at present taking part in the economic summit discussions at Houston. They will meet again at the Foreign Affairs Council on 16 July, which is likely to discuss follow-up to the Dublin European Council.

Cambodia

25. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to advance the peace process in Cambodia.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs' reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 26 March, we have continued to promote a comprehensive political settlement, notably through meetings of the five permanent members of the UN Security Council.

The permanent five plan to meet again later this month.

51. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to review the Government's position on the seating of Cambodia at the United Nations when the matter comes before the credentials committee.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 13 June.

36. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed Cambodia with members of (a) the United States Government and (b) European Economic Community Governments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discusses Cambodia regularly with the US Secretary of State and his European colleagues.

Treaty of Rome

27. Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the extent, under United Kingdom legislation, to which article 27(2) of the Rome convention has been invoked.

Mr. Maude: Article 227 of the treaty of Rome is fully incorporated into United Kigndom law and the question of invocation does not arise.

Drug Traffickers

28. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion he has had with the Foreign Ministers of Spain and Portugal about the strengthening of their external non-European Community borders against drug traffickers.

Mr. Maude: The subject of strengthening external Community borders against drug traffickers, terrorists and other criminals, is discussed regularly between Interior and Justice Ministers of the Twelve, and in the relevant working groups.

Yemen

29. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has plans to have early talks with the Foreign Secretary of the new Republic of Yemen to discuss United Kingdom-Yemen relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no firm plans for an early meeting with the Yemeni Foreign Minister. But Dr. Al Iryani has an open invitation to visit London. I recently met the Vice-President of the Republic of Yemen when he was visiting London.

74. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with the new Republic of Yemen.

Mr. Waldegrave: We enjoy good relations with the new Republic of Yemen. This was reflected in the warm messages of congratulations from the Queen, my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, sent on the occasion of the unification of the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen on 22 May. We wish the Government and people of the Republic of Yemen well.

Franco-British Relations

30. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the French Minister for Foreign Affairs to discuss Franco-British relations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had extensive discussions of Franco-British relations with M. Dumas at the annual bilateral summit on 4 May. Since then they have kept closely in touch when they have seen each other at a dozen or so multilateral meetings.

Bilateral relations are extremely good. We consult and co-operate very closely.

Eastern Europe

32. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement regarding recent developments concerning anti-Semitism in eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: We deplore anti-Semitism in all its forms and will continue to do all we can to counter it. We worked for the unequivocal condemnation of anti-Semitism contained in the concluding document adopted by the CSCE participating states at the human dimension conference in Copenhagen on 29 June. We strongly endorse the recent statement in Dublin by the European Council on anti-Semitism, racism and xenophobia.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for which countries he has received IPU observers' reports on the elections in eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received reports, either written or oral, from IPU observers to the elections in East Germany, Romania, Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia. We have found the information from the IPU observers of great interest and value, along with reports from others, in assessing the fairness of the elections. We welcome these elections and look forward to continuing moves towards full democracy in all of the countries of eastern Europe.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy to apply the principle of conditionality to United Kingdom assistance to the countries of eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our policy remains that the type and degree of aid to the reforming eastern European countries should match the stage of political and economic reform they have each reached.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the grounds upon which he would extend the know-how funds to other countries in eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: The know-how fund, which currently covers Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and the GDR, will be extended to other eastern European countries once they are firmly committed to reform.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the Foreign Secretary of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to discuss the relationship between the European Community and the Baltic states.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will doubtless discuss progress in negotiating between Moscow and the Baltic states at one of his forthcoming meetings with Mr. Shevardnadze; he has no plans specifically to raise relations between the EC and the Baltic states.

44. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European partners concerning the reconstruction in eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs attended the second ministerial meeting of the Group of 24 countries on 4 July in Brussels. Ministers welcomed the reforms being undertaken in Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia and the GDR, and agreed to extend G24 assistance to these countries, in addition to Poland and Hungary. Ministers have called on Romania to implement the necessary reforms to permit it to qualify for such assistance. There was brief discussion of aid to the Soviet Union.

35. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Foreign Affairs Council is next due to discuss the proposed introduction of association agreements with those countries of eastern Europe making progress in implementing political and economic reforms.

Mr. Maude: The FAC on 16-17 July will discuss association agreements with the reforming countries of central and eastern Europe. The European Council on 25-26 June called for exploratory talks to be opened soon. We are continuing to press the European Commission to make rapid progress with Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

Hong Kong

34. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in encouraging the Chinese Government to introduce a series of confidence-building measures with respect to the future of Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: The Chinese Government have, on a number of recent occasions, reaffirmed their commitment to the joint declaration. During my forthcoming visit to China I will be discussing with the Chinese leadership measures which both our Governments can take to build confidence in Hong Kong.

Romania

39. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations were made by the United Kingdom and by the European Community about the violent repression of demonstrations in Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: We protested formally to the Romanian authorities in London and Bucharest on 15 June about President Iliescu's use of vigilantes to crush the opposition on 14-15 June. We invoked the Helsinki agreement on 21 June to request information on three arrested student leaders. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and his EC colleagues strongly condemned the violence in a statement on 18 June.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Romania to discuss the aftermath of the recent elections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs plan to visit Romania at present. We condemn President Iliescu's use of miners as vigilantes to attack the opposition on 14-15 June, and urge the Romanian Government to take decisive steps to restore progress towards democracy.

NATO

42. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation headquarters; and what he plans to discuss.

50. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the Secretary-General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and what he plans to discuss with him.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following the successful NATO summit in London last week, the alliance has a full programme of work to adapt its policies and strategies to the changing circumstances of Europe. We shall keep in close touch with the NATO Secretary-General on the full range of issues set out in the declaration from the summit, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

55. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the NATO summit in Turnberry.

81. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the NATO summit at Turnberry.

Mr. Waldegrave: The North Atlantic Council ministerial meeting, held at Turnberry on 6-8 June, usefully prepared the ground for the important and successful NATO summit, held in London on 5-6 July, at which the allies set out the future direction of NATO in the 1990s. A copy of the Turnberry communiqué and the London declaration have been placed in the Library of the House.

Southern Africa

43. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid and development assistance Her Majesty's Government propose to give to those states which form the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference.

Mrs. Chalker: We have provided nearly £1,300 million gross bilateral aid to the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference member states since 1980, and continue to maintain substantial programmes in most of them.

Somalia

45. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of relations between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Somalia and on the hopes for an end to the internal conflict in Somalia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made clear to the Somali Government that respect for human rights and good government are the touchstones of our bilateral relations. We have been urging all parties to the conflict to negotiate, but the Somali National Movement continues to refuse to do so with the present Government.

Latin America

47. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution the United Kingdom is making to international efforts to achieve the consolidation of democracy in Latin America.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have given consistent and strong support to democratisation in Latin America in our bilateral dealings with the countries concerned and in conjunction with our EC partners and other members of the international community. Specific examples include:

- Contributions to United Nations peacekeeping efforts in the region including demobilisation of the Contras (some £3 million to date);
- A grant to Nicaragua announced on 2 June (£600,000);
- Restitution of our modest aid to Panama; maintenance of existing aid elsewhere in the region; additional assistance to the Colombian Government's efforts against drugs trafficking;
- Participation in the San Jose dialogue between the EC, central America and Panama (with Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela as co-operating countries), which includes as one of its prime objectives the establishment of pluralist democracies in the region. As a result of this dialogue, EC aid to the region has doubled since 1984. The United Kingdom contributes some 20 per cent;
- Political support for human rights organisations in the region, and for those promoting dialogue in Guatemala;
- Support for a Nicaraguan parliamentary delegation visiting the United Kingdom for know-how talks with the Inter-Parliamentary Union;
- Recent visits by Mr. Donald Limón, a British parliamentary expert to Chile, and by 10 senior Chilean parliamentarians to this country.

73. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of recent trends towards democracy in Latin America.

Mr. Sainsbury: We warmly welcome them. We particularly welcome the restoration of democracy in Chile, Nicaragua and Panama. We are encouraged that in El Salvador the third round of talks between the Government and the FMLN guerillas ended on a positive note, and that they are to be resumed on 20 July. We hope that the FMLN will soon agree to join the democratic process, and that Cuba will at last join the rest of Latin America in adopting pluralist democracy.

Security and Co-operation in Europe

48. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether sufficient progress is being made in the two-plus-four talks and in CFE negotiations to enable a conference on security and co-operation in Europe to take place in the current year.

Mr. Waldegrave: We and our NATO partners continue to regard it as important that the CFE negotiations should reach a satisfactory conclusion in order to lay the necessary basis for a CSCE summit to take place this year. It is also our aim to complete the two-plus-four talks by then. Progress is being made in both sets of talks. We were encouraged to note that the Warsaw pact summit declaration on 7 June committed Warsaw pact members to a successful termination of the CFE talks in time for the treaty to be signed at a CSCE summit late in 1990.

49. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have put forward any proposals to enhance the role of the CSCE in European affairs and in relation to the security of European states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The NATO summit meeting on 5 and 6 July agreed that the CSCE should become more prominent in Europe's future, and that a CSCE summit later this year should set new standards for the establishment and preservation of free societies. The NATO summit also made specific proposals on the institutionalisation of the CSCE, including in the security field establishing a CSCE centre for the prevention of conflict that would provide conciliation of disputes involving member states, together with measures to increase transparency and confidence-building. The United Kingdom played a leading role in the formulation of these proposals, in particular in relation to the proposed centre for the prevention of conflict. The full text is contained in the NATO summit declaration, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions took place at the recent CSCE conference on the human dimension in Copenhagen about the conditions under which the next conference is to take place in Moscow in September 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The annex to the concluding document of the Copenhagen CDH meeting reiterates the practices of openness and access which should be respected at forthcoming conferences on the human dimension. We have made clear to the Soviet Union on a number of occasions the human rights conditions which we consider must be fulfilled if the United Kingdom is to attend the Moscow meeting. We continue to monitor the situation.

57. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the Council of Europe providing the framework for the structured consideration of CSCE matters.

Mr. Maude: The United Kingdom and other CSCE member states recognise the important expertise of the Council of Europe in the field of human rights and fundamental freedoms and will be considering further ways and means to enable the Council to make a contribution to the human dimension of the CSCE.

Council of Europe

52. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will be seeking a revised and enlarged role for the Council of Europe in a new European framework; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We believe that the Council of Europe has an increasingly important and valuable role to play in the development of democracy in Europe. With other member states we shall be examining the role of the Council in the architecture of the new Europe.

EC Policies

56. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further proposals he intends to place before his European Community partners for the development of Community policies.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave him on 9 May and 13 June. We shall continue to play a constructive role in Community discussions.

Nelson Mandela

61. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has yet had discussions with Mr. Nelson Mandela.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I had friendly and positive discussions with Mr. Mandela on 3 July about how best to take forward the process of ending apartheid in South Africa by negotiation.

European Political Union

62. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will be submitting proposals to the conference on European political union, initiated at the Dublin European conference; and if he will publish a White Paper setting out the views of Her Majesty's Government on this issue.

Mr. Maude: We have already made a number of suggestions for institutional reform. These will be pursued in the preparations for and at the intergovernmental conference. We have no plans at present for a White Paper.

EC Summit, Dublin

66. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Community summit in Dublin.

70. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Community summit in Dublin.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Gentleman and the hon. Lady to the statement my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made to the House on 28 June.

Korea

67. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage the peaceful reunification of Korea.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have consistently supported efforts to achieve the peaceful reunification of Korea. But our view is that this can be achieved only through direct contacts between North and South Korea. We welcome the resumption of contacts on 3 July at Panmunjom.

Chemical Weapons

68. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made through the chemical weapons convention in achieving a comprehensive and verifiable global ban on the production, possession and use of chemical weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: Some progress has been made recently on technical issues in the negotiations in Geneva for a comprehensive, effectively verifiable, global ban on chemical weapons, but some key issues remain to be resolved, particularly verification. I will be visiting Geneva tomorrow to present a report on the United Kingdom's extensive series of trial inspections over the last two years at a number of Government-owned establishments. The practical lessons and conclusions drawn will, I am sure, be a valuable input to the negotiations.

77. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any information relating to geological specimens purporting to confirm the use of chemical weapons in Angola; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: A number of soil and vegetation samples purported to be from Angola have been examined by Government experts. The samples have not been found to contain any traces which would indicate the use of chemical weapons.

Bulgaria

69. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the United Kingdom is giving to help Bulgaria implement its democratic reforms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made no firm commitment yet of bilateral help to Bulgaria. The elections of 10 and 17 June mark a considerable step towards democracy. But, in view of residual doubts about some aspects of those elections, we shall still need to assess the policies of the new Government, and their commitment to political and economic reform, before we can extend aid.

United States Secretary of State

71. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the United States Secretary of State; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs saw the United States Secretary of State at the G24 meeting in Brussels on 4 July and at the subsequent NATO and Houston summits. They discussed a wide range of subjects.

Seychelles

75. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to pay an official visit to the Seychelles; and if he will make a statement on relations with that country.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to do so. We have normal relations with the Seychelles' Government and an aid programme directed towards the needs of the Seychelles' people. As elsewhere in Africa, we have made it clear we support freedom of expression and genuine political participation.

Rights of the Child

78. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet set the timetable for ratification of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 9 May.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet set a timetable for the ratification of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom signed the United Nations convention on the rights of the child on 19 April 1990. We intend to ratify the convention as soon as possible.

El Salvador

79. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet the Foreign Minister of El Salvador to discuss the activities of death squads in that country.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no present plans to meet the Foreign Minister of El Salvador. The subject of human rights is invariably on the agenda when we meet Ministers from that country. Most recently I raised it with Presidency Minister Altschul on 12 June.

French Foreign Minister

80. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the French Foreign Minister to discuss developments in the European Community.

Mr. Maude: Apart from contacts in the margins of other international meetings, the last such meeting took place at the European Council in Dublin on 25-26 June.

Poland

83. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to further improve relations with Poland.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have close and friendly relations with Poland. High-level contacts are increasingly frequent. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited Poland from 30 April —2 May and many more visits are planned this year.

We will continue to give substantial help to ease Poland's transition to a market-based democracy, including through the know-how fund.

Vietnamese Boat People

84. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has made in the intergovernmental discussions concerning the resettlement of Vietnamese boat people currently held in Hong Kong detention camps.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 24 May 1990 to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague).

The next meeting of the full steering committee is expected to take place on 16-17 July in Geneva.

Western Sahara

85. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European Community partners to obtain a joint approach to the western Sahara dispute.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Twelve have issued a statement supporting the United Nations Secretary-General's referendum proposals and welcoming their acceptance in principle by both parties to the dispute.

Aid Policy

87. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy to use aid as a lever to promote democracy, human rights and free market economies.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's speech to the Overseas Development Institute on 6 June 1990.

Economic and social progress depends to a large degree on effective and honest government, political pluralism, observance of the rules of law and sound market-based economic policies.

The adoption or otherwise of such policies and practices is an important factor in deciding upon the level and form of aid we are prepared to provide to particular developing countries.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when Mr. Nazir Ahmed Qureshi, ref. TH/10238/89, is to be issued with a visa by the post in Islamabad; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when Mrs. Azra Bibi, ref. GV/G100/8597, is to be issued with a visa by the post in Islamabad to join her husband in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with the guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred these questions to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive replies from the unit as soon as possible.

Nuclear Arms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty he has received recently from the Mexican Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

EC Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which extra-European territories European Communities Foreign Affairs Council decisions apply.

Mr. Maude: Responsibility for the Community's relations with third countries rests with the Foreign Affairs Council. Decisions of the Council applying to the territory of the Community apply to French overseas Departments, Martinique, French Guyana, Guadeloup and Reunion, and according to the precise proposal before the Council and the provisions of the EEC treaty can also apply to the dependent territories listed in part IV of the EEC treaty.

Brazil

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any discussions with the Brazilian Government concerning the relationship between the military and non-governmental organisations working in the Amazon.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on alleged threats made by the Brazilian superior war college to non-governmental organisations working with the indigenous peoples in the Amazon.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no information other than that referred to in press reports.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he proposes to implement and enforce his latest regulations relating to the handling of bovine brains in slaughterhouses.

Mr. Maclean: The Bovine Offal (Prohibition) Regulations 1989 require that specified bovine offal—which includes brains—should be excluded from food for human consumption. The practice in some plants of removing brains before recovering head meat intended for human consumption was raised with my Department, and, after taking advice from the Tyrrell committee, I have issued guidance to local authorities that head meat should be recovered from the intact skull before the brain is removed so that the requirements of the regulations can be met.

I am confident that these guidelines are sufficient to achieve their purpose. Nevertheless, it will be necessary for the Department shortly to be consulting on changes to slaughterhouse legislation to take account of future EC requirements and other technical amendments and I shall consider whether to include in those consultations proposals to give the guidelines legislative force.

Animal Feed

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps to require animal feed compounders henceforth to include only crop protein in cattle, sheep, pig and poultry rations.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to do so.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what research his Department is conducting into a possible link between BSE in cattle and maedi visna in sheep;

(2) whether any research of which he is aware has established any links between BSE in cattle and maedi visna in sheep.

Mr. Maclean: Maedi visna is a disease of sheep caused by a well characterised virus unrelated to the unconventional agents which cause BSE and the other transmissible spongiform encephalopathies. Research into a link between the two diseases would therefore not be appropriate.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Ward: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that milk produced by animals treated with BST can be identified by the consumer.

Mr. Maclean: This matter will be covered by the Food Advisory Committee's current review of food labelling.

Swine Swill Farms

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many swine swill farms are licensed in Norfolk.

Mr. Maclean: Eleven such farms in Norfolk are licensed under the Diseases of Animals (Waste Food) Order 1973.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of agricultural land has been designated as environmentally sensitive in England; what percentage of land in the environmentally sensitive areas is farmed under this scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Some 3·4 per cent. of agricultural land in England has been designated as an environmentally sensitive area. Of the eligible land in each ESA which I targeted in the schemes some 92 per cent. is now being farmed under ESA agreement demonstrating the high level of interest among farmers in participation in this voluntary scheme.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Top-rate Tax

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers paid top rate tax in 1989-90; and how much revenue his Department derived from taxing this band.

Mr. Lilley: The latest estimate is that about 1·6 million married couples and single people were liable to tax at the higher rate in respect of 1989-90 incomes. Their income tax liability in excess of the basic rate was about £3·9 billion. This figure represents the additional tax liability resulting from the difference between the higher rate and the basic rate of tax.

Allowing for independent taxation, it is estimated that in 1990-91 about 1·7 million individuals will be liable to pay tax at the higher rate, counting husbands and wives separately, and that their income tax liability in excess of the basic rate will be £4·4 billion.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average rates bill as a proportion of earnings for a one-earner family with two children on 75 per cent. average earnings in 1989-90; and what he estimates the proportion of income going to the poll tax will be for the same family in 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 5 July, Official Report, column 699-708.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Broadcasting

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the current sound recording and amplification systems used both in the Chamber and for outside broadcasts were installed; and whether he has any plans to modernise them.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I understand that the present sound system in the Chamber, including both the microphones and the amplifiers in the Benches, were originally installed in 1951, although significant modifications were made in 1970-71.

As regards any possible further modification or modernisation of the system, I refer my hon. Friend to the first report of the Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House (HC 265-I), which was published on Wednesday 11 July. The report contains a section addressing directly the point raised by my hon. Friend.

House of Commons Passes

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the average length of time for a House of Commons pass to be approved for an hon. Member's secretary; what efforts are being made to reduce this time; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I understand that the average length of time taken for the processing of all Members' staff applications for Palace of Westminster photo-identity passes is five working days.

The Pass Office gives precedence for processing applications for Members' staff over all other applications. The figure quoted refers to applications from United Kingdom nationals who have lived in this country for the past five years. In cases where the required clearances involve foreign nationals, or where the individual concerned has lived or worked overseas in the preceding five years, further delays are usually unavoidable.

HEALTH

Child Abuse

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those county councils which provide homes for children in care who have been sexually or physically abused separately from children who are in care for other reasons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities do not generally provide community homes for children who have been physically or sexually abused separately from children in their care for other reasons. It is for the authority to ensure that each child for whom it is responsible is appropriately placed, whether in one of its own children's homes or elsewhere.

Eye Tests

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of eye tests carried out in each region of England and Wales in 1989 and in 1987.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics on the number of NHS sight tests paid for in each region in England and Wales for the financial year 1989-90 will be available shortly. The table gives the numbers of NHS sight tests paid for in each regional health authority for the periods April to September 1987 and April to September 1989. These figures are not directly comparable, as the figures since April 1989 exclude sight tests paid for privately.

NHS Reform

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many booklets, "The Health Service—The NHS Reforms and You", are to be distributed; and to whom;

(2) what the quoted cost of £2·75 million for the booklet, "The Health Service—The NHS Reforms and You", covers;

(3) when the final proof was cleared for the booklet, "The Health Service—The NHS Reforms and You";

(4) whether the booklet, "The Health Service—The NHS Reforms and You", is to be distributed throughout the United Kingdom;

(5) when the final text for the booklet, "The Health Service—The NHS Reforms and You", was approved.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 23 million copies of the booklet "The Health Service—The NHS Reforms and You", were printed. After distributing one copy to each household in England, the remaining 1·5 million copies will be used to supply requests from multiple occupancy households, advisors and other ad hoc requests.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be publishing their own information.

Versions of the booklet in nine ethnic minority languages are planned and will be available on request.

The final proof of the booklet was approved when it was clear that there was no reasonable prospect of changes to the Bill being considered by Parliament which affected the content of the booklet. Authorisation for the distribution of the booklet was not given until the Bill received Royal Assent. The text was approved, subject to any parliamentary changes, on 7 June.

The £2·7 million cost of the booklet includes the production, distribution and ethnic language versions.

Local Authorities (Default)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when was the latest occasion on which he or his predecessors made an order under section 36 of the National Assistance Act 1948 declaring a local authority to be in default.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As far as I am aware, the default powers in section 36 of the National Assistance Act 1948 have never been formally invoked.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which family practitioner committees were unable to pay their general practitioners in full under the new contract for the quarter April to June;

(2) what action he is intending to take to ensure all family practitioner committees pay their general practitioners in full and on time.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is the aim of every family practitioner committee to make due payments in full and on time, and there is no reason why this should not have been the case at the end of June quarter. Family practitioner committees have discretion to make advance payments when necessary. Some committees failed to achieve this aim at the end of June quarter, but this should have been rectified subsequently. We are making further inquiries about the exact position and I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Hostel Residents

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the annual care costs of those hostel residents, currently funded by the Department of Social Security, whose costs will be met by local authorities following the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no connection between the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act and the changes in funding arrangements for hostels.

NHS Costs

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are being made to ensure that all national health service costs, including central administrative costs, are included when comparing provider contracts between voluntary sector bids and community service bids.

Mr. Dorrell: National health service providers will be expected to price their services on the basis of their full costs, including overheads and costs of capital.

Family Planning

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take urgent steps to ensure that all health authorities establish family planning services for under-25s less formal and easier to obtain than those for mature people.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The day-to-day management of family planning services is a matter for individual health authorities since they can best judge local circumstances and priorities. The Government continue to regard family planning as an important preventive service. Guidance issued by the Department of Health makes it clear that health authorities should ensure that full use is made of family planning services and that a proper balance is struck between services provided by specialist clinics and those provided by GPs, bearing in mind in particular:

i. the need to give choice to encourage full take-up;
ii. the need for separate, less formal arrangements for young people;
iii. clinics' wider health role—for instance, in cervical cancer smear testing.

This guidance was recently reaffirmed in a letter EL(90)MB115, a copy of which is available in the Library, to regional general managers by the director of operations and planning on the national health service management executive.

A number of health authorities provide services for young people through Brook advisory centres which receive central funding towards their headquarters administrative costs.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to ensure that arrangements about family planning services by district health authorities are made after adequate previous consultations with residents in those districts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The level of local family planning provision, as with most national health service services, is a matter for individual health authorities to determine in the light of local needs and priorities and other competing demands on resources. The director of operations and planning on the NHS management executive recently reminded regional general managers, by EL(90)MB115, a copy of which is available in the Library, of current central guidance on family planning provision. That letter asked English health authorities, in making provision for delivery of co-ordinated clinic and GP family planning services, to ensure that they have given full weight to the advice of their director of public health in regard to the needs and views of people who already use or may want to use NHS family planning services.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are being made for the voluntary sector to bid for service provider contracts in the area of family planning.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for district health authorities (DHAs) to decide upon the pattern of services their residents need and to arrange contracts for the delivery from the most appropriate provider, which might be one of the authorities' own units, a unit managed by another district health authority, a national health service trust, or a voluntary body.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to take action to prevent local authorities from transferring their care homes to not-for-profit trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. As we said in the White Paper "Caring for People" we shall expect local authorities to make use, whenever possible, of services from voluntary, "not-for-profit" and private providers in so far as this represents a cost-effective care choice.

TRANSPORT

Car Insurance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals exist to ensure that cover provided by United Kingdom car insurance automatically incorporates cover for travel in the EC.

Mr. Atkins: All United Kingdom motor insurance policies already incorporate third party cover for travel in the EC.

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the sources of investment currently allocated to British Rail for the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 1007) set out plans for British Rail investment and financing over this financial year (1990-91) and the next two years. In 1990-91, BR plans fixed asset investment of £1,052 million, the highest real level for 25 years. This will be financed mainly from the sale of surplus assets, grant from central and local Government and borrowing (mostly from the National Loans Fund). The external finance limit, which covers central Government grant and borrowing, was set in the White Paper at £646 million.

Learner Drivers

Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any conclusions have been reached about publishing an official syllabus for learner drivers and riders.

Mr. Atkins: The Department consulted last autumn on this proposal and the suggestion was widely welcomed. I have therefore decided that the Driving Standards Agency should produce a book containing the syllabus plus related information such as how to apply for a driving or motor cycling test. It is intended that the book will go on sale towards the end of this year.

Euroroute Designations

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the Government to become a signatory to the agreement on Euroroute designations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: As part of a wider consultation exercise on traffic signs commenced in September 1988, this Department sought views on a proposal for E-route signs. Reactions were limited and ambivalent. In the absence of clear evidence of benefit to road users and in view of the potential for confusion from a second road numbering system, the Secretary of State decided against ratification of the relevant international agreement.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he offered any advice to British Rail about the employment of Transmark as a consultant for an evaluation of the alternative channel tunnel rail links; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has regarding the evaluation of alternative fast rail links from the North Downs to King's Cross via Stratford in connection with the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement;

(3) pursuant to his statement of 14 June, Official Report, column 483, what criteria are to be used by the consultants appointed to assess the different schemes relating to the channel tunnel rail link; and if he will make a statement;

(4) pursuant to his statement of 14 June, Official Report, column 483, what information he has regarding the role to be played by local authorities in the evaluation of the different channel tunnel rail link proposals;

(5) pursuant to his statement of 14 June, Official Report, column 483, if the consultants' reports on their evaluation of the schemes relating to the channel tunnel rail link will be made public; and if he will make a statement;

(6) pursuant to his statement of 14 June, Official Report, column 482, who British Rail has commissioned to carry out the evaluation of alternative routes in connection with the channel tunnel rail link; and what is the timetable for the study;

(7) pursuant to his statement of 14 June, Official Report, column 483, what are the terms of reference for British Rail's evaluation of alternative routes via Stratford in connection with the channel tunnel rail link;

(8) pursuant to his statement of 14 June, Official Report, column 482, if he will take steps to ensure that British Rail consults all interested parties in connection with the current evaluation of alternative channel tunnel rail links.

Mr. Freeman: It is the responsibility of British Rail to evaluate alternative options and to bring forward proposals. I am confident that Sir Bob Reid will ensure that this exercise will be properly carried out.

A1-M1 Route

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has of the increased volume of traffic flow resulting from the upgrading of the A1-M1 route to motorway standard.

Mr. Atkins: The existing A1 trunk road traffic is expected to use the upgraded road. We also estimate that there would be a small transfer of traffic from the M1 to the upgraded A1. General growth in traffic is estimated in the national road traffic forecast 1989.

British Rail (Emergency Liaison System)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the decision was taken to alter the existing emergency liaison system between West Yorkshire fire service and British Rail; what consultation took place; how long the consultation period was; and whether the railway inspectorate has approved the new system.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail tells me that a modification to its area manager organisation in West Yorkshire took place in January 1990, resulting in a division of responsibilities between its Leeds and Doncaster offices. BR did not consult either the West Yorkshire fire service or the railway inspectorate before carrying out this internal reorganisation. I understand that BR notified the WYFS of the new arrangements in March, and senior officials have visited WYFS to deal with any problems which may have arisen. BR will be ensuring that emergency services are consulted about communications before other reorganisations take place.

Compulsory Purchase Orders

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's usual practice in the making and publication of compulsory purchase orders and exchange land certificates; and what deviations from this practice were made in the case of (a) the M3 motorway, Bar End-Bassett section compulsory purchase order (No. CSE) 198 and (b) an application for a certificate in respect of public open space at Shawford Down.

Mr. Atkins: Compulsory purchase orders in relation to trunk roads and motorways are usually made and published in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Highways Act 1980 and of the Acquisition of Land Act 1981. The M3 motorway (Bar End—Bassett section) compulsory purchase order was published in draft and in respect of the Compton-Bassett section has been made, in accordance with the relevant provisions of those Acts. The remaining part of the compulsory purchase order relating to the Bar End-Compton section has not yet been made.

Responsibility for the issue and publication of exchange land certificates in relation to the compulsory purchase of land forming part of a common, open space or fuel or field garden allotments, rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment in accordance with the Acquisition of Land Act 1981. The Department of Transport's application for a certificate in respect of public open space at Shawford Down was made in accordance with the relevant provisions of that Act.

Accidents, A36

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Salisbury of 9 July, Official Report, column 88, about accidents on the A36, how many people were killed or injured in each of the three categories listed and for each year given.

Mr. Atkins: The number of people killed or injured over the last five years are as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
(a) fatal injuries	2	2	2	1	5
(b) serious injuries	20	12	19	14	32
(c) slight injuries	125	84	79	76	116
	147	98	100	91	153

Learner Drivers

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has now taken a decision on the regulations governing those who accompany learner drivers.

Mr. Atkins: I have today laid in the House regulations that require accompanying drivers to be at least 21 years old and to have held a full licence for three years.

In order to ensure that existing and future provisional licence holders are aware fully of the new requirements, they will come into force on 1 October 1990. I urge strongly all provisional licence holders to ensure that those who accompany them meet these requirements now, and not to wait until 1 October.

Night Flights (Gatwick)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has now concluded his review of the quota for night flights at Gatwick and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: When the current restrictions on night flying at Heathrow and Gatwick were announced in Februrary 1988, an undertaking was given that if, after two years (that is, after the summer season 1989), it was apparent that disturbance from night flights at Gatwick was getting worse, the quotas would be revised accordingly.

Detailed monitoring of the night noise climate was carried out by the directorate of operational research and analysis at the Civil Aviation Authority. It found that the area within the night noise contours at Gatwick had become smaller during the period since the introduction of the new night restricitons, and that the quietest category of aircraft (referred to as night noise category C-NN/C) had proved, as expected, to be quieter on average than aircraft categorised as NN/B. This confirms that the overall night noise climate can be improve by switching to operations by the quieter, NN/C, types of aircraft.

Two conclusions may be drawn from the monitoring work. The first is that it would not be appropriate to reconsider the night quotas at Gatwick at this stage, a view that has been accepted by the Gatwick airport consultative committee. The second conclusion is that the newer, quieter models of aircraft do reduce the amount of disturbance from aircraft noise. Those benefits should continue to accrue as the older, noisier jets are increasingly replaced. We are encouraging that process through the agreement in Europe that chapter 2 aircraft will no longer be allowed to be added to national registers from November this year, and by the proposed agreement to phase out their operation completely by the early years of the next century.

The message for airlines from this work is that we will want to encourage as rapid a transition as possible to the use of quieter aircraft at night. I propose to pay particular attention to this when the night restrictions are reviewed.

The Gatwick airport consultative committee drew attention to three important points when commenting on the monitoring work. It noted the large number of aircraft movements that have been permitted above the quota under the dispensation arrangements, and this is an issue that will need to be considered when the night restrictions are reviewed.

The committee also drew attention to the fact that an integrated noise and track keeping system is not yet in operation at Gatwick. My Department is working closely with BAA plc with the aim of having such a system in operation by 1992. I attach great importance to securing the installation of this system as early as possible.

The committee also suggested that it might be helpful to carry out a survey of disturbance by aircraft noise at night among local people. It seems right to me that we should try to understand as well as we can how aircraft noise affects people's sleep. For that reason, my Department will be carrying out research into this topic over the next 18 months to two years. The findings should be available in time to contribute to the review of the night restrictions.

This research will be relevant to the formulation of new night restrictions at each of the three BAA London airports, and will be devised to cover them all. I believe it is important that those living near these airports should understand what is being done and have an opportunity to contribute to the oversight of the research. I therefore intend to invite the consultative committees of the airports concerned to nominate a representative to sit on a steering committee for this research. I would equally invite the airports to nominate a representative. I will also be inviting Manchester airport, the third largest in the United Kingdom, to participate.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the (a) total budget and (b) architectural budget for the east London river crossing.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The latest estimate of the total cost of the scheme, updated to mid-1989 prices, is £300 million. That estimate includes the services of architectural and landscape consultants. Estimates for the architectural elements of the scheme are not identified separately.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will put the architectural contract for the east London river crossing out to competition.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 11 July 1990]: No. A review of alternative designs for the Thames bridge has been undertaken, and the Department's consultants concluded that only a box girder bridge met the criteria for the site. The Secretary of State accepted their conclusion, and draft orders for a box girder bridge were published in January 1990. The proposed design of the bridge has been presented to the current public inquiries into the proposed design changes for the east London river crossing scheme. These inquiries opened on 3 July 1989 and will afford the opportunity for representations to be made on the Department's proposals.

PRIME MINISTER

European Court of Justice

Q17. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will invite the European Council to review the operation of the European Court of Justice in light of the legal actions initiated by Spanish fishermen and German lottery ticket salesmen against the operation of British laws in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. So far as the ruling of the European Court of Justice on interim relief is concerned, the Government's views have been made clear to the House on a number of occasions. In the case of the German lottery ticket salesmen, I understand that no proceedings have been instituted in any court.

Police (Wales)

Q124. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the increase in police manpower in Clwyd and Wales since June 1987.

The Prime Minister: Since June 1987 the North Wales police, which includes Clwyd, has had 35 extra police posts approved by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary. In the same period a total of 125 extra police posts have been approved for forces in Wales.

Consultants (Negligence)

Q176. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to change or modify the procedures by which patients obtain suitable redress of grievance or compensation against hospital consultants following negligence on the part of consultants in the hospital service.

The Prime Minister: There are no plans to change or modify current procedures. The basis for seeking compensation for injuries where medical negligence is alleged should continue to be through litigation in the courts.

Clean-up Scheme (Mr. Richard Branson)

Q223. Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister what is Mr. Richard Branson's current involvement in the environmental clean-up scheme which she initiated; what progress has been made with the scheme; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: UK 2000 was set up in 1986 under the chairmanship of Richard Branson to bring together voluntary organisations, the private sector and Government to generate quality environmental improvement schemes and to raise business awareness of the environment. Mr. Branson is now the president of UK 2000. Through its valuable work, the voluntary sector is in a stronger position to take forward work on environmental improvement. So, in response to a request from UK 2000, the funding was streamlined on 1 April and Government grants are now paid direct to the six national voluntary organisations which are partners in the initiative. Grant has risen to over £1·9 million for 1990-91.

Engagements

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 July.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 July.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I returned from a meeting of the economic summit in Houston, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment is made of the energy efficiency of equipment and light bulbs procured for use at No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: Energy efficiency is not a significant factor in determining the selection of computer equipment for use in 10 Downing street. Other office machinery is normally obtained through Her Majesty's Stationery Office and includes the manufacturers' assessment of power consumption. On light bulbs, the aim is to use the most cost-effective and energy-efficient form appropriate to the circumstances.

Expenditure

Mr. Battle: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her oral reply of 3 July, Official Report, column 875, to the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock) on expenditure by families on the national health service, if she will provide the figure on a comparable basis for expenditure by families on the Trident programme in the current financial year.

The Prime Minister: In this financial year, one of the peak spending years on Trident procurement, the expenditure per family on a comparable basis is assessed to be less than £1·40 per week.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister how it is proposed to introduce a parliamentary dimension based on the Council of Europe into the CSCE process under the proposals contained in the concluding statement of the recent NATO summit; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The NATO summit recommended an "Assembly of Europe" to include representatives of all CSCE member states. The details of this proposal, together with all other proposals for new CSCE institutions, will be negotiated during the preparatory committee in the run-up to the CSCE summit in November.

Science Policy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will outline her responsibilities in relation to the co-ordination of science policy.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 July 1990]: Collective ministerial consideration of science and technology priorities takes place under my leadership and I provide co-ordination in appropriate cases.

WALES

Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses are available for rent in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector in each district authority area in Wales; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: The numbers of vacant local authority dwellings available for letting are given for 1987 to 1990 in the table. Similar information is not available in respect of housing association or private sector dwellings. For the corresponding figures for years 1979 to 1986, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 22 July 1987.

[1] Revised.
[2] Provisional.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds he has allocated for 1990-91, and what allocations have been earmarked for future years, towards new housing and refurbishment of existing houses, by county and for Wales as a whole.

Mr. Grist: For 1990-91, my right hon. Friend announced housing capital distribution for individual local authorities on 29 November 1989. The distribution is not hypothecated to individual housing services, and it is for local authorities themselves to formulate their spending plans within the total resources available to them. Additional resources will however be made available, if necessary this financial year, to meet all expenditure by Welsh local authorities on mandatory home renovation grants.

My right hon. Friend also announced at that time an allocation to Housing for Wales to support housing association activity in 1990-91. The actual distribution of these resources is a matter entirely for Housing for Wales.

For future years, my right hon. Friend has set out in the Welsh Office commentary "Public Expenditure in Wales, 1990-91 to 1992-93", planned provision for local authority housing and Housing for Wales. This is subject to review in the current PES round.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued for the procedures for the appointment of chief executives of the non-departmental public bodies in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: No formal guidance has been issued. The appointment procedures for chief executives in the bodies for which I have responsibility vary in accordance with the body's constitution.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last convened a meeting of the chief executives of the non-departmental public bodies in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The last meeting was on 13 February 1989. This year's meeting is to be held on 14 November 1990.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the public expenditure budget of each of the non-departmental public bodies in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is contained in the Welsh Office commentary, a copy of which had been placed in the Library of the House.

National Curriculum

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will call a conference of local education authorities in Wales to discuss the impact of the national curriculum upon educational practice in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to do so. A national curriculum implementation working group was established last year under Welsh Office chairmanship. The group includes representatives from each local education authority and meets on a regular basis to discuss practical issues arising from implementation of the national curriculum in Wales.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local education authorities he has met in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 10 July 1990.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit (a) Clwyd, (b) Gwynedd, (c) Powys, (d) Gwent, (e) Mid Glamorgan, (f) South Glamorgan, (g) West Glamorgan and (h) Dyfed local authorities.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend expects to visit all local education authorities in Wales in due course.

Teacher Morale

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet teachers' unions in Wales to discuss the morale of teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We are always prepared to consider requests from teachers' unions for meetings to discuss educational issues in Wales.

Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy for the improvement of the fabric of schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 9 May 1990.

Councils and Health Authorities (Costs)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, for the financial years 1985-86 to 1989-90, the level of inflation in costs falling on (a) district councils, (b) county councils and (c) health authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 9 July 1990.

Rivers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the rivers in Wales whose classification according to the National Water Council grading system changed between 1987 and 1988 together with details of the change in each case.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 11 July 1990.

Rain Samples (Acidity)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the reasons for the reduction in the number of samples taken each year to measure the acidity of rain in Wales between 1982 and 1988 as shown in table 3.21 of "Environmental Digest for Wales" No. 4 1988-89.

Mr. Grist: The number of samples used to provide the data on the acidity of rainfall in table 3.21 of the "Environmental Deigest for Wales" was decided by the local authorities that provided the information.

A national monitoring programme is now carried out by the Warren Spring laboratory and the results of this survey are given in table 3.22 of that publication. It is intended that this series only will be published for future years.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. David Hunt: There are 321 Welsh Office staff at principal grade or equivalent and above. Ten are graduates of Oxford, 15 of Cambridge and 212 of other universities.

Health Authorities (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing, for each health authority in Wales, the capital expenditure for each year since 1960 that is taken into account in compiling the equalisation of capital stock element within the capital expenditure allocation formula which was used for the current financial year.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 4 July 1990]: The information requested is set out in the table:

[1]Provisional and prospective outturn expenditure figures at the time the formula update was calculated in 1985-86.
Note: All figures at 1985-86 prices.

It should be noted, however, that the equalisation component of the capital formula takes account of capital expenditure since 1948. The figures in the table therefore do not represent all the capital expenditure that was taken into account when calculating the capital formula shares that were used for the current financial year.

It should also be noted that the capital formula shares used in this year's allocations to authorities were determined in 1985-86 when the original capital formula was first updated. This reflects a decision taken prior to the introduction of the present capital allocation arrangements in 1984-85—on the recommendation of the working party which devised the new arrangements with the endorsement of health authority chairmen—that the initial capital formula shares should be "frozen" for a period of five years in the interests of stability in capital programme planning. Authorities thus have five years' notice of prospective changes in their shares of discretionary capital provision as a result of the annual capital formula updates which have been calculated each year since 1984-85 and can revise their capital programmes accordingly.

Finally, it should be noted that these capital allocation arrangements will need to be revised as a consequence of the "Working for Patients" reforms. Authorities will be consulted on proposals for new arrangements in the near future.

Road Safety, Comber

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of road safety precautions at High street, Comber; whether he will consider the provision of no waiting cones in the vicinity of the First Comber Presbyterian church; why he has rejected double yellow lines on this section of the High street; what is the present programme for the Comber bypass; and if he will make a statement about traffic conditions in Comber.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Roads service proposes to introduce double yellow lines along both sides of High street, Comber in the vicinity of the First Comber Presbyterian church. Enforcement of these restrictions and the 30 mph speed limit is by the RUC.

The second stage of the Comber bypass is scheduled to start in 1992-93. It will help alleviate the current traffic congestion in Comber.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Bowen Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Commonwealth Development Corporation to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Chalker: I understand that, under procedures agree by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 29 October to 2 November 1990.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has anything to add to the reply his Parliamentary Under-Secretary made to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras in the debate of 25 June, Official Report, column 68 about the appointment of advisers on privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: My hon. Friend has written to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras making clear that in every case the appointment of advisers on privatisation followed a competitive process unless there were substantial and compelling reasons for departing from that norm.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. Wakeham: I regret the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Trees

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy in respect of the Scottish hardwood charter—Trees for 2000.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We support the Scottish hardwood charter in principle. I have written to the promoter of the charter giving support on the basis of our commitment to the concept of sustainable use of natural resources, but cautioning against the replacement of natural rain forests with plantations.

Health Boards (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what circumstances a health board may omit competitive tendering when undertaking contracts with the private sector.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Boards may decide not to proceed to competitive tendering where only one contractor is identified with the ability to provide the required service.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board for the last three years those contracts with the private sector which have not gone out to competitive tender.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Duvets, Hospitals

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to assure himself, and what information is available to him, that the replacement of blankets and sheets with duvets in hospitals would not increase the risk of infectious diseases.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The choice of bedding used in hospitals is a matter primarily for health boards. It is for the boards to satisfy themselves that the material is suitable to be cleaned or laundered to prevent the risk of any infection. Ayrshire and Arran health board has been using duvets for some time and has subjected them to regular microbiological testing over a five-year period. To date, these tests have shown that the duvets are clear of infection.

Roads, Greenock

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost and period of construction of the Baker street bypass in Greenock; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The question of the construction of a bypass at Baker street, Greenock is a matter for Strathclyde regional council as local roads authority. My Department has no information regarding its possible cost or period of construction.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost of the construction of the proposed road roundabouts in Greenock (a) at the entrance to the James Watt dock, (b) at the eastern end of Cartsburn and (c) at the western end of Charing Cross; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: These proposed works will be funded by the Scottish Development Agency at an estimated cost of £1 million and will provide access to a 39-acre site at Cartsburn which forms part of the Inverclyde enterprise zone.

Toxic Waste Sites

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on cases of toxic waste sites being in close proximity to underground water supplies.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My Department has no information on cases of toxic waste sites being in close proximity to underground water supplies. The quality of groundwater is safeguarded by the statutory requirement for any proposal to use land for the disposal of controlled waste to be referred to the river purification authority for the area concerned.

NHS Reform

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make it his policy that information circulated to citizens concerning the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act should include information and advice on problems that may arise in the course of its implementation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A booklet called "The NHS Reforms and You" will be distributed shortly to every household in Scotland, describing the changes in the NHS in Scotland following the introduction of the new contract for family doctors and the National Health Service and Community Care Act which received Royal Assent on 29 June. It contains a three-page section giving information about help which is available to citizens, and how to make complaints about the treatment provided by the NHS.

Elderly Citizens (Bus Passes)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local authorities (a) issue free bus passes, (b) issue some form of assisted bus passes and (c) do not provide free or assisted travel for their elderly citizens.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that all regional and islands authorities in Scotland offer concessionary travel to the elderly, although in the case of Orkney islands council the concessions relate to inter-island ferry services only. My information is that Lothian and Fife regional councils and Shetland islands council provide free travel for the elderly.

Residential Homes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken to ensure that private nursing homes and residential care homes include medical requisites and all necessary services in their fees.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The responsibility for ensuring that nursing homes and residential care homes provide the required level of services rests with the registration authorities, health boards and local authorities respectively. The level of fee is a private matter between the individual home and its clients.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether elderly people in private residential care are entitled to receive free national health service prescriptions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All people over retirement age are entitled to free NHS prescriptions regardless of their residential arrangements.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals to initiate an inquiry into the level of fees charged by private nursing homes and residential care homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The level of fees charged is a private matter between the individual home and its clients.

Single European Market

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of the completion of the single European market on economic growth and employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am chairing the single market committee of the Scottish Economic Council which is examining the impact of the single market on Scotland, and which has commissioned and published a number of reports. Further research into its possible effects are currently being undertaken.

Fire Risk Areas

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many A category fire risk areas there are in each fire brigade area; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally, but at 1 January 1990 the number of stations serving predominantly category A fire risk areas was as follows:

Fire brigade area	Number
Central	2
Dumfries and Galloway	—
Fife	—
Grampian	2
Highlands and Islands	1
Lothian and Borders	3
Strathclyde	8
Tayside	2

Following the issue of a report in 1985 containing guidance on the standards of fire cover, all fire brigades in Scotland have reviewed the categorisation of fire risks in their area.

GP Budgets

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioners will be equipped with the necessary software to enable them to be responsible for their budgets from 1 April 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Discussions with the computer companies are currently taking place. The details of these discussions are commercially sensitive, but the general objective is to ensure that the necessary software will be available to all the GPs wishing to take part in the practice funding scheme.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimated cost of developing and supplying the computer software systems for doctors eligible and electing to run their own budgets.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Development and supplying of the software package for practice funding is a matter for the GP computer suppliers. Without details of their development costs it is not possible to estimate the cost of supply.

Hospital Care (Costs)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the latest information he has on the cost of operations and hospital care in each hospital in Scotland; and when he expects all hospitals to publish a price list for all operations and treatments available for patients.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The range of information available on the costs of hospital services is set out in the annual publication "Scottish Health Service Costs", produced by the Common Services Agency of the NHS in Scotland. Copies are held in the Library. I expect increasingly detailed information on hospital prices to be developed as part of the system of NHS contracts which is being introduced next year.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department does not hold currently a comprehensive database of such information. The collation of information from individual records would be disproportionately costly.

Nurses

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many state registered nurses are currently in their final year of study in national health service hospitals in Scotland; what percentage of that figure is expected to obtain immediate full-time employment within Scottish national health service hospitals on completion of their training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As at 31 March 1990—the latest date for which figures are available—2,838 student nurses in Scotland were in their final year of study for first-level registration. Information on how many of them might be expected to obtain immediate full-time employment within the national health service is not held centrally.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of state registered nurses (a) qualified in Scotland and (b) obtained full-time employment within national health service hospitals in Scotland during 1987-88 and 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not held centrally.

Carstairs Hospital

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the planned capital expenditure at Carstairs state hospital for the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Approval has been given for the construction of a new kitchen at the state hospital at a cost currently estimated at £1·54 million. The building work on this is expected to take about two years to complete. In addition, the Government have agreed to the construction of two new 25-bed single storey wards at the hospital. The cost of these is presently estimated at £3·06 million with estimated completion in 1993.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints have been recorded by patients alleging violence by nursing staff; how many complaints have been recorded by nursing staff alleging violence by patients; and how many nursing staff have left Carstairs state hospital in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

	Complaints of violence		Number of nursing staff leaving
Year	By patients	By staff
1979	1	42	14·0
1980	2	26	19·5
1981	1	52	25·0
1982	1	41	17·0
1983	1	47	16·0
1984	3	54	11·0
1985	5	51	17·0
1986	5	71	15·0
1987	1	122	20·0
1988	2	68	32·0
1989	7	83	35·0

The figures given for complaints by staff cover all incidents involving injury or possible injury. Not all proceed to a formal complaint. The increase since 1987 in part reflects a change in recording procedure.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of patients in Carstairs state hospital; and what percentage of patients are released each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As at 11 July 1990 there were 227 patients in the state hospital. The numbers discharged each year varies depending on the clinical condition of individual patients. During 1989 approximately 30 per cent. of the patients were discharged, as follows:

	Percentage of total patients as at 1 January 1989
Transferred to NHS hospital	13
Returned to penal establishment	11
Complete discharge	1·5
Conditional discharge	1·5
Leave of absence	3

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many nursing staff employed at Carstairs state hospital are directly involved in patient care.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are at present 306 nursing staff at the state hospital, of whom 304 are directly involved in patient care; the remaining two are nurse tutors.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the numbers of mentally ill patients confined to Carstairs state hospital by the Scottish courts each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible to provide separate figures for mentally ill as distinct from mentally handicapped patients. The following figures relate to all admissions from the courts:

Year	Number of patients
1979	14
1980	17
1981	14
1982	13
1983	21
1984	17
1985	16
1986	19
1987	22
1988	24
1989	29

Crimes, Lanarkshire

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of reported crimes in (a) Larkhall, (b) Stonehouse, (c) Lanark, (d) Carluke, (e) Forth, (f) Biggar, (g) Lesmahagow, (h) Douglas, (i) Coalburn, (j) Kirkmuirhill and Blackwood, (k) Ashgill and Netherburn, (l) Law village, (m) Symington, near Biggar, (n) Crawford, (o) Kirkfieldbank, (p) Crossford, (q) Leadhills and (r) Glespin each year since 1979 and give details of the conviction rate in percentage terms to the crimes reported.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost to each local authority of sending reminder letters to late or non-payers of the community charge; and if he will express the cost per community charge payer to each authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Although local authorities make returns to my Department of the administrative cost of collecting the community charge, the returns do not show separately the cost of sending reminder letters.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those authorities with less than 95 per cent. collection of the community charge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The collection of community charges is the responsibility of individual local authorities and the information requested is not held centrally. However, the majority of authorities have based their budgets for 1990-91 on an assumed collection rate of at least 95 per cent.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the cost per person for the collection of the community charge in each local authority area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On the basis of local authorities' budget estimates, the cost per charge payer of collecting the community charge by levying authority is as follows:

	£ per charge payer
Regional Council
Borders	12·14
Central	18·86
Dumfries and Galloway	19·64
Fife	12·95
Grampian	12·56
Highland	14·83
Lothian	15·99
Strathclyde	12·69
Tayside	12·82
Islands Council
Orkney	8·03
Shetland	28·94
Western Isles	11·66

These figures include the cost of the registration work but exclude the cost of operating the rebate and transitional relief schemes.

Prisoners (HIV)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inmates in each Scottish prison are HIV positive; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 31 March 1990, the latest date for which complete records are available, the following number of prisoners were confirmed as being HIV positive.

	Number
Aberdeen	1
Barlinnie	2
Cornton Vale	1
Dungavel	2
Edinburgh	21
Friarton	1
Glenochil	3
Greenock	0
Low Moss	0
Noranside	0
Penninghame	0
Perth	14
Peterhead	1
Shotts	4

In addition, three young offenders on that date were confirmed as being HIV positive.

The grand total of 53 for 31 March 1990 compares with figures of 61 for 30 June 1989, 64 for 30 September 1989 and 40 for 31 December 1989. Before then figures were not regularly collected.

The number of prisoners in Scottish prisons at any one time who are confirmed as being HIV positive naturally fluctuates, but normally it is between about 40 and 70. This trend has not altered over the past three years.

Prison Officers

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish Prison Officers Union; and what matters were discussed.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend last met representatives of the Scottish Prison Officers Association on 16 October 1989 at the state hospital, Carstairs.

The dissolution of the central Whitley council at Carstairs from 1 October 1989 was discussed, together with the transfer of the finance department from the state hospital to Lanarkshire health board.

School Meals

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many school children received free school meals in (a) Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland during 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Lang: The information requested, taken from annual school meals census returns, is as follows:

Number of pupils receiving free meals

	Glasgow	Strathclyde	Scotland
1986	34,059	84,659	136,627
1987	34,671	87,362	143,194
1988	35,337	87,147	145,219
1989	27,053	63,905	105,232

Prisoners (AIDS)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inmates in each Scottish prison have AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The one Scottish inmate who has AIDS is located in Perth prison. The care and treatment of prison inmates with AIDS is the responsibility of the prison medical officer who will consult outside specialists as appropriate. Where any treatment required is unavailable within the prison the inmate will be temporarily transferred to an outside facility.

Police Manpower

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of police manshifts, annually, in attending courts to give evidence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Female Prisoners (Strip Searches)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Scottish prison establishments in 1989; if he will give the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; whether any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and if he will indicate the reasons for the search, namely, making a remand appearance at court, attending trial, inter-prison visit or other reasons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics on strip searches carried out on female prisoners are kept only at Her Majesty's institution Cornton Vale. During 1989, 2,206 strip searches were carried out. The reasons for these searches are given in the table:

On admission	Routine room search	Special room search	After open Visit search	Total
1,218	384	158	446	2,206

The other information requested could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of inmates at each Scottish prison and young offenders institution for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given in the table.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Security Payments

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to increase social security payments to levels equivalent to those paid by the countries in the northern zone of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are fundamental differences between the social security schemes of the EC countries so that rates for individuals may be higher or lower than in the United Kingdom—for example in earnings-related schemes low earners receive low benefits and high earners receive high benefits, while additions for dependants are not normally payable. There are no proposals for the alignment of these schemes—indeed alignment would mean increasing some benefits but also reducing or abolishing others, for example, family credit.

War Pensions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his reply of 20 March, Official Report, column 593, what factors account for the further delay in resolving Mr. Davies's claim for a war pension.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the consultant's report received on 18 May 1990 was inconclusive. A further consultant's examination is necessary, and it is hoped that this can be arranged as soon as possible. If a war pension is awarded it will commence from the date of claim.

Local Office Closures

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number and location of Department of Social Security offices to close in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland under his networking arrangements; when these closures will take place; and if he will present the full details of these changes in the Official Report.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no plans to close any local social security offices in Strathclyde or more generally Scotland. Details about the networking review to which the hon. Member refers were given in a reply to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Sir C. Smith) on 11 July.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of Department of Social Security offices to close in (a) Merseyside and (b) north-west England under his networking arrangement; when these closures will occur; and if he will present the full details of the changes in the Official Report.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no plans to close any social security offices in Merseyside or more generally the north-west of England. Details about the networking review to which the hon. Member refers were given in a reply to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Sir C. Smith) on 11 July. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will also be writing to the hon. Member shortly in response to his recent letter on this subject.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he will calculate the housing benefit entitlement of claimants who enter care homes after April 1991.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have consulted the local authority associations on this subject and are considering their views. An announcement will be made in due course.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish for each standard region the numbers (a) making applications for poll tax rebates and (b) being awarded rebates.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information about the total number of claims for community charge benefit is being collected by local authorities for the whole of the financial year 1990-91. It is expected that the details will be available for publication around the middle of 1991. Information about the community charge benefit case load at 31 May 1990 will be available in the autumn.

Maintenance Payments

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the scheme to deduct maintenance at source will be implemented; and what steps he intends to take to ensure that single parents receive prompt payment of the full amount of maintenance owed.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 10 July 1990]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are concerned that so few lone-parent families receive regular payments of maintenance and are taking a number of steps to improve the position.

The Home Office has recently announced proposals to improve enforcement of maintenance orders in England and Wales by increasing the courts' powers to prescribe the method of payment. Under these proposals an attachment of earnings order could be made at the same time as a court makes an order for maintenance without waiting for the absent parent to default.

The procedure to collect maintenance by attachment of earnings orders will be as it is now. Courts will also be able to order maintenance payments to be made by, for example, standing order, direct to the maintenance creditor. This method would be appropriate for the self-employed absent parent. The Department of Social Security has already taken steps to improve the effectiveness of its action under the present system. Measures in the Social Security Bill include power for the Secretary of State to enforce a claimant's private maintenance order if it falls into default while she is receiving income support.

We are proceeding with urgency on the wide-ranging review of the maintenance system examining where changes need to be made in the longer term.

EMPLOYMENT

Maternity Leave

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will bring forward proposals to change the rules governing the right to return to work after statutory maternity leave, to make them less complex.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

Publicity

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the guidelines used by his Department concerning publicity and advertising for departmental policy and programmes.

Mr. Nicholls: The Department uses the guidelines concerning publicity and advertising issued by the Cabinet Office. Copies are available in the Library of the House of Commons.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. Eggar: There are 125 graduates of Oxford and Cambridge, and there are 843 graduates of other universities.

Female Employees

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to give incentives to companies to increase their numbers of full-time female employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government have no plans to introduce such legislation.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce measures to improve the pay of British female employees relative to that in other European Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No, pay is for employers and employees to determine through negotiation and any measures directly to raise women's pay without any corresponding increase in output would add to employer's costs, and reduce competitiveness and the number of women employed.

Pay comparisons with other European Community countries are of no real value given the very different economic and industrial situations in other member states.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to impose further penalties on any company which deliberately deflates the salaries paid to female employees with superior qualifications to those of their male counterparts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The Equal Pay Act 1970 provides a full and effective legislative framework for combatting unjustifiable sex discrimination in pay.

Job Clubs

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many job clubs had been established by his Department up to the end of the last financial year; and how many more, or less, it is anticipated will be in operation by the end of the current financial year;

(2) what was the total funding for job clubs for each of the years of their operation; and what is anticipated for the next three years, in real terms;

(3) how many people it is estimated use the job clubs in any one year.

Mr. Nicholls: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Small Businesses

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for 1989 the number of value added tax registrations and deregistrations upon which the net figure for the weekly increase in small businesses established was calculated in his answer to the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin), Official Report, 5 June, column 458.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1989, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise processed approximately 262,000 registrations and 177,000 deregistrations. Although these are not fully comparable with the estimates published by my Department, they provided an early indication that the net rate of increase in 1989 was at least 1,500 a week.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Law Centres

60. Mr. French: To ask the Attorney-General what is the total number of law centres in the United Kingdom; and how many have been established within the last 12 months.

The Attorney-General: There is no central Government register of law centres; nor is information held centrally on how many have been established within the last 12 months. However, there are 61 members of the Law Centres Federation.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has received the Director of Public Prosecution's report on the Crown prosecution service for the year 1989-90; and when the report will be laid before Parliament.

The Attorney-General: I have received the annual report from the Director of Public Prosecutions today, and have placed a copy in the Libraries of both Houses.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

The Attorney-General: In the legal secretariat to the Law Officers, four civil servants at grade 7 or its equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford or Cambridge, and six are graduates of other universities. In the Serious Fraud Office, five are graduates of Oxford or Cambridge and 13 are graduates of other universities. In the Treasury Solicitor's Department and the Crown prosecution service, this information is not separately recorded and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Korea

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government are proposing to recognise the Democratic People's Republic of Korea; and if they will be taking steps through the United Nations to improve relations between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no plans to recognise North Korea as a state. We actively support all steps towards peace on the Korean peninsula, including those pursued through the United Nations, but we believe that progress can be achieved only through direct contacts between North and South Korea. We welcome the resumption of contacts on 3 July.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government have any plans to establish diplomatic relations with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions with the Government of Sri Lanka have been held in respect of (a) the reported use of napalm in northern Sri Lanka and (b) the lack of access accorded to relief agencies in northern Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. We have seen no evidence to support press reports alleging the use of napalm. We are in regular contact with relief agencies in Sri Lanka but have received no specific complaints about obstruction of their activities.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. Sainsbury: Out of a total of 1,219, 489 officers in the relevant ranks in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (diplomatic and aid wings) are graduates of Oxford or Cambridge. Graduates of other universities total 346.

Cyprus

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy to the recently submitted application by the Government of the Republic of Cyprus to join the European Community.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Cyprus's application to join the European Community.

Mr. Maude: The handling of the Cyprus application may be discussed at the 16 July General Affairs Council. In considering the application, the Council will need to take into account the unresolved inter-communal dispute. In any event, we share the consensus in the Community that there should be no decisions on enlargement until at least 1993.

Malta

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Malta's application to join the European Community.

Mr. Maude: Malta intends to submit an EC membership application on 16 July. We expect the Council to refer the application to the European Commission for its opinion in the normal way. We share the consensus in the Community that there should be no decisions on enlargement until at least 1993.

My right hon. Friend and I shall be meeting the Maltese Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Professor de Marco, later today.

Agricultural Support

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the information on which he based his statement at the Group of Seven conference in Houston, Texas, that the European Economic Community supports its agriculture to a lesser extent than the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary told the press in Houston that the European Community gives less support to its agriculture than previously, because of changes made to the CAP. These include controls introduced in 1988, for example stabiliser mechanisms, which automatically cut prices when Community production exceeds preset limits.

CIVIL SERVICE

Agencies (Management Consultants)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what moneys have been spent by the Government on management consultants since the inauguration of the "next steps" programme.

Mr. Luce: The information requested by the hon. Member is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Total expenditure on management consultants by my own Department for work relating to the "next steps" programme since its launch in February 1988 up to 30 June 1990 was £90,100.

ENVIRONMENT

London Residuary Body

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what arrangements were instituted for the transfer of 35 Brownhill road from the London residuary body to the London borough of Lewisham; what consideration was paid with respect to this property; and what clawback conditions and restrictive covenants were included;

(2) what arrangements were instituted for the transfer of 35-43 Bondway from the London residuary body to the London borough of Lambeth; what consideration was paid with respect to each of these properties; and what clawback conditions and restrictive covenants were included;

(3) what arrangements were instituted for the transfer of (a) Russell Chambers, (b) 142 Charing Cross road, (c) St. Vincent's (d) 100 Shaftesbury avenue, (e) 35 Wellington street, (f) Hungerford house, Victoria embankment and (g) Torquay house, 217-221 Harrow road, from the London residuary body to the London borough of Westminster; what consideration was paid with respect to each of these properties; and what clawback conditions and restrictive covenants were included;

(4) what arrangements were instituted for the transfer of 116 Ladbroke grove from the London residuary body to the royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea; what consideration was paid with respect to this property; and what clawback conditions and restrictive covenants were included;

(5) what arrangements were instituted for the transfer of 76-82 Salusbury road from the London residuary body to the London borough of Brent; what consideration was paid with respect to each of these properties; and what clawback conditions and restrictive covenants were included;

(6) what arrangements were instituted for the transfer of (a) 311 Plumstead high street, (b) 16 Askew crescent and (c) 22 Stuart crescent from the London residuary body to the London borough of Greenwich; what consideration was paid with respect to each of these properties; and what clawback conditions and restrictive covenants were included;

(7) what arrangements were instituted for the transfer of 745 Barking road from the London residuary body to the London borough of Newham; what consideration was paid with respect to this property; and what clawback conditions and restrictive covenants were included;

(8) what arrangements were instituted for the transfer of 3 Allington road and 2 Stanhope road from the London residuary body to the London borough of Barnet; what consideration was paid with respect to each of these properties; and what clawback conditions and restrictive covenants were included.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements were instituted for the transfer of 38 Mount Pleasant and Wesley house from the London residuary body to the London borough of Camden; what consideration was paid with respect to each of these properties; and what clawback conditions and restrictive covenants were included.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None for 38 Mount Pleasant. Wesley house was sold by the London residuary body to the London borough of Camden for £1·8 million without clawback conditions or restrictive covenants.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements were instituted for the transfer of The Beormund, 177 Abbey street and Tress House, 3 Stamford street, from the London residuary body to the London borough of Southwark; what consideration was paid with respect to each of these properties; and what clawback conditions and restrictive covenants were included.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None for Tress house, 3 Stamford street. The Beormund, 177 Abbey street, was sold by the London residuary body to the London borough of Southwark for £225,000 subject to an existing lease to the Beormund centre without clawback conditions or restrictive covenants.

Community Charge Rebates

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which categories of mature students are not eligible for community charge rebates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Students who undertake a full-time course of education are liable to pay the community charge at the reduced rate of 20 per cent. and are not therefore eligible for community charge benefit. The age of an individual is not addressed in the definition of a full-time student as defined in the Personal Community Charge (Students) Regulations 1989.

Building Regulations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has had from the National Association of Fire Officers to his Department's proposed changes to part B of the Building Regulations 1985.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The National Association of Fire Officers considers that the proposals in the Department's consultation paper would lead to a reduction in standards for means of escape in case of fire, and the detailed points that it has made in this connection will be carefully considered. It has also expressed concern about the proposals for relaxations in the requirements relating to the use of fire-resisting and non-combustible materials and for increases in the permissible size of compartments, and suggests that the use of sprinkler systems is not a satisfactory alternative. The association has welcomed the proposals relating to access and facilities for the fire service, and for the provision of smoke alarms in domestic premises.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the representations received on his Department's proposed changes to certain sections of part B of the Building Regulations 1985 concerning fire.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A consultation paper setting out proposals for amendments to part B, "Safety in Fire", of the Building Regulations 1985 was issued on 19 March, and comments were invited by 30 June. There has been a considerable number of responses, and these will now be considered in detail by the Building Regulations Advisory Committee, and by the Department's fire advisory panel. While it will not be practicable to send an individual reply to each person who has responded, officials are meeting a number of those concerned to discuss their views. I hope that final decisions on these and other proposals for amendments to the regulations can be taken in the first half of next year.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses there have been to the Department's proposed changes to part B of the Building Regulations 1985, relating to reduction of fire resistance periods, increased compartment sizes, and relaxation of non-combustibility requirements; and if he would indicate the proportion in favour of these proposals, and against.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department has so far received 169 responses to the consultation paper setting out proposals for amendments to part B, "Safety in Fire," of the Building Regulations 1985. The number of responses on the particular aspects referred to have been:

	Number
Reductions in fire resistance periods
In favour	16
Against	76

	Number
No view expressed	77
Increases in permitted compartment sizes.
In favour	25
Against	50
No view expressed	94
Relaxation of non combustibility requirements
In favour	22
Against	42
No view expressed	105

Rochester-upon-Medway Council

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give details of the financial and other proposals made to him by Rochester-upon-Medway city council concerning the transfer of its housing stock; and what decisions or advice he has given.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The consent given by the Secretary of State to Rochester-upon-Medway city council to dispose of its housing was conditional on the disposal taking place on or before 30 June, and the city council has not made an application for a renewal of that consent.

Without prejudice to any decision which he may be called upon to make on such an application, the Secretary of State has indicated that, exceptionally, he may in principle be prepared to countenance a deferred payment of part of the purchase price by the city council, if the council wishes to pursue that option. However, I understand that the city council has not yet decided how or whether to proceed.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. Chris Patten: In my Department, of the total of 1,217 staff in the ranks in question, 761 have degrees. Of the degrees obtained by these staff, 252 were awarded by Oxford and Cambridge, and 931 by other universities or higher education bodies. Some staff in the ranks in question have more than one degree.

Falconers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many licences have been issued by his Department for falconers to set (1) sparrowhawks on to (a) blackbirds and (b) other birds; and (2) other birds of prey on to (a) blackbirds and (b) other birds.

Mr. Trippier: In 1989, 60 licences were issued to falconers to fly birds of prey at specified quarry species as follows:

	Number
Sparrowhawk at blackbirds	25
Sparrowhawk at other species	1
Other birds of prey at blackbirds	1
Other birds of prey at other species	33

RECHAR

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that revenue implications for local authorities which arise from expenditure under the RECHAR programme will not result in eligible local authorities being subjected to community charge capping.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 10 July 1990]: I am not willing to speculate on how any scheme of charge capping might operate were my right hon. Friend to consider it necessary to use the powers available to him in future years.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy that letters and papers referred to in parliamentary replies shall be provided directly to the hon. Member asking the question and placed in the Library on or before the afternoon on which the answer falls due.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 10 July 1990]: It is already my policy that, wherever possible, enclosures referred to in replies are provided directly to the Member (and placed in the Library) on the same day as the question is answered.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

GCSE (English Literature)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will call for a report from the School Examinations and Assessment Council on the standard of marking of GCSE English literature, external school, by the Midland examining group in 1989 and 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Officials are investigating the matter, and I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Grant-maintained Schools

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money is allocated to grant-maintained schools in their annual maintenance grants as arising from their share of their former local education authority budget provision for inspection and advisory services.

Mrs. Rumbold: Annual maintenance grant is calculated to include a per-pupil proportion of the planned spending on such services by each grant-mantained school's former maintaining local education authority. The amount of money allocated will therefore vary between schools in different authorities.

For example, in 1989-90 the full-year amount attributable to such services in Lincolnshire, the authority formerly responsible for maintaining three of the first 18 grant-maintained schools, was £9·36 per pupil; and in Barnet, where there are two grant-maintained schools, the amount was £12·21 per pupil.

School Inspections

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) grant-maintained schools, (b) independent schools and (c) local education authority controlled schools in England have been visited by Her Majesty's inspectorate since September 1989.

Mrs. Rumbold: I give below the figures for the number of institutions in each category visited between 1 September and the end of the autumn term 1989. This is the latest period for which the information is available:

	Number
Grant-maintained schools	31
Independent schools	185
Local authority maintained schools	2,434

Adult Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to be in a position to make a decision about the future of REPLAN; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend hopes to make a decision on the future of REPLAN in the autumn. Proposals for a new programme from the further education unit and from the National Institute of Adult Continuing Education are being considered.

Education Reform Act

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on his review of the charging regulations issued under the Education Reform Act.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is at present collecting evidence, through a sample survey of schools and from other sources, of the pattern of out-of-school activities since 1989 and the reasons for any changes. Results will be available later this year. We shall consider, in the light of all the evidence, whether there is a case for further advice to schools or other action.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

School Closures

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table listing the number of proposals for school closure or reorganisation made to him, following objection or call-in, since May 1987, with a table showing the numbers where the time taken between first submission or notification to him and decision by him has been (a) up to three months, (b) three to six months, (c) six to 12 months, (d) 12 to 18 months and (e) over 18 months, and the numbers where a decision is outstanding.

Mr. MacGregor: The answer can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will update the table in the answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn, Official Report, 29 June 1989, columns 535-36 and 26 March, column 33, to give the latest information available for 1990, and his estimate of the total numbers of places likely to be taken out of use as a result of approved proposals during the course of 1990.

Mr. MacGregor: The information on school closures is in the following updated table. It is not possible to estimate the number of places likely to be taken out of use as a result of approved proposals during the course of 1990.

Calendar Year	No. of proposals decided	No. of places to be taken out of use by proposals in col. 2	No. of proposals in col. 2 approved	No. of surplus places to be taken out of use as a result of approved proposals

Science Budget

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the effect on expenditure covered by the science budget as a result of actual inflation in 1990-91 as against that allowed for in the science budget announced on 15 November 1989.

Mr. Jackson: The value of the science budget announced on 15 November 1989 represented at that time a 4·8 per cent. increase in real terms; this has been reduced to a real terms increase of 3·3 per cent. according to the latest published GDP deflator.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice the Secretary of State has received from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils this year with respect to the funding requirements of the science base; and when it will be published.

Mr. MacGregor: The ABRC, which was reconstituted and given new terms of reference in April, submitted its advice on this year's public expenditure survey on 22 May. I intend to treat the advice on a confidential basis, in common with the corresponding advice from the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council. I recognise that the board may wish to make its views on some matters, including priorities for United Kingdom science, more widely known, and I will be considering with the board's chairman the appropriate form of an ABRC publication for this purpose.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the year in which the data were collected on which was based the survey of academic research equipment in the United Kingdom commissioned by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils which was published in November 1989; and what plans the Advisory Board for the Research Councils has to update the survey.

Mr. Jackson: The data were collected in 1988. The Advisory Board for the Research Councils was reconstituted in April, and the new board has yet to consider what policy studies should be undertaken.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made by his Department in establishing an index to take into account inflation for scientific equipment rather than that indicated by the retail prices index.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend is at present considering whether it is feasible to construct an index of recurrent scientific costs. If he concludes that such an index can be produced he will then consider the feasibility of an index of scientific equipment costs.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much per head the Government are spending on equipment for scientific research in higher education institutions; and what information he has on the comparable sums spent in the United States of America, West Germany, Japan, France and Italy.

Mr. Jackson: The allocation of block grant to individual higher education institutions is the responsibility of the funding councils, with funding for specific research projects provided by the research councils. Allocations for research equipment are not separately identified. The Department does not hold the requested international comparisons.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will update the information given in answer to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey), Official Report, 12 March, column 25, on surplus school places.

Mr. MacGregor: The premises-related costs at current prices of retaining a surplus primary and secondary place are now estimated to be £150 and £240 a year respectively. There are also opportunity costs arising from inefficient retention of buildings and land.

The latest estimate is that, in January 1989, there were approximately 830,000 surplus primary school places and 950,000 surplus secondary school places in England.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table in respect of surplus school places giving the targets for every year shown in each public expenditure White Paper, or elsewhere, from and including 1985, and the number taken out of use in each year from and including 1985, with an estimate for 1990, broken down by the number taken out as (a) a result of approved proposals and (b) by other means, to be specified.

Mr. MacGregor: The available information is in the following table. It is not possible to distinguish which surplus places were taken out of use in a given year as a result of approved proposals and which were removed by other means. Nor is it possible to estimate how many will be removed in 1990.

Cost places 000s

1986-87	167	106

Richmond College

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library copies of all correspondence from and to the Middle States Association in respect of the proposed MBA course at Richmond college, or from third parties relating thereto.

Mr. MacGregor: Subject to the agreement of the two sides concerned, I will send a copy of the relevant letter to the hon. Member.

The hon. Member's concern about this correspondence arises, I believe, from a misunderstanding of the significance of designation of this MBA as an award recognised for the purpose of the relevant section of the Education Reform Act 1988. That purpose is to end the trade in "bogus" United Kingdom degrees. Richmond college's MBA is an American degree. It has been designated because the college, which is based solely in this country, is a United Kingdom institution. Its MBA could thus be taken to be a United Kingdom degree: it could therefore innocently fall foul of the unrecognised degree legislation, and run the risk of prosecution under Section 214(1)) of the Education Reform Act 1988. The college could not seek accreditation of the MBA through the Council for National Academic Awards or a United Kingdom university, which would have given it protection by making it a United Kingdom degree, because it would then have lost its accreditation from the American Commission of Higher Education of Middle States Schools and Colleges.

City Technology College

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, in determining the capital costs of a city technology college under the terms of paragraph 7 of the model funding agreement, he will take into account only such costs of a type specified in that paragraph which are those to be incurred by the parties to that agreement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes.

Teachers (Vetting)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that the same vetting procedure applies to United Kingdom and non-United Kingdom applicants for teaching posts after 1992.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend gave to him on Tuesday 10 July at columns 160-61.

Recruitment of teachers including vetting their suitability is a matter for LEAs and school governors as employers. Since 1984, arrangements have existed for local authorities to check against police records for any criminal convictions, but the information available does not extend to convictions incurred outside the United Kingdom. This facility, however, is not intended to replace effective recruitment procedures including taking up references with previous employers. LEAs have for many years successfully recruited and employed teachers from outside the United Kingdom, but I shall consider whether there is any practicable way to strengthen the procedures relating to overseas teachers.

Secondary Education (Management)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action has been taken by him to implement each of the recommendations of the Audit Commission contained in pages 2 to 4 of the summary of its report, "Towards Better Management in Secondary Education,"—May 1986, and its August 1988 report.

Mr. MacGregor: A range of Government initiatives has addressed the issues raised in the Audit Commission's 1986 report. Local management of schools is enabling school governors to determine staffing profiles, and to deploy available resources, in line with each school's needs and priorities. The national curriculum and its associated assessment procedures will provide a better basis for measuring pupil and school performance. Since the abolition of the Burnham committee in 1987, teachers' pay and conditions have been determined on the basis of recommendations from the Interim Advisory Committee; I am currently considering what permanent arrangements should replace the IAC. On surplus school places, which are also the subject of the August 1988 Audit Commission paper, the Government continue to encourage LEAs to take effective action to remove them.

School Premises

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the dates for and progress towards the implementation of the 1981 school premises regulations.

Mr. MacGregor: The Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 applied to new school buildings with effect from 1 August 1981. The regulations provide a transition period for existing schools in respect of specific requirements which represent a marked changed from those in the 1972 regulations and require work to be undertaken. The date when the full regulations will apply to all schools is 1 September 1991. Under section 10 (2) of the Education Act 1944, as amended, the responsibility for meeting the requirements of the regulations rests with local education authorities and school governors.

Country Sports

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the use in schools of "Finding Out About Country Sports" published by Hobsons publishers for the Countryside Foundation.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about the publication "Finding Out About Country Sports". The representations claim that the publication is biased in favour of hunting. The Government are very much opposed to indoctrination of any kind in schools. Local education authorities, school governing bodies and head teachers are under a statutory duty to secure that where controversial issues are brought to the attention of pupils, they are presented in a balanced manner. (Section 45 of the 1986 Education (No. 2) Act). Anyone who has evidence that the use of this publication in a particular school does not conform with section 45 may make a complaint to the local education authority by which the school is maintained.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Terrorism

11. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider removing the right to parole for any individual convicted of a crime related to terrorist activity.

Mr. Waddington: Our proposals for reform to the parole system are set out in the White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public" and are intended to ensure that the time served by all prisoners is much more closely related to the sentence passed.

As we made clear in the White Paper the proposed criteria for parole and the associated risk assessment which will give greater weight to violent crimes will make it likely that most offenders convicted of terrorist offences will not be released on parole.

Sunday Trading

12. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning amendment of the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Mellor: Since answering a similar question from my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 14 June, 223 written representations broadly in favour of Sunday trading and 38 against have been received.

40. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to find a compromise solution to the problem of the trading hours of small local shops, following recent decisions on Sunday trading by the European Court and courts in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: We continue to encourage the interested parties to try to reach agreement on a way forward which is likely to command parliamentary support.

Special Constables

14. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to improve the training of special constables.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are already reviewing the training needs of special constables with the intention of producing a national training package. This will include training in basic policing skills and knowledge, such as powers of arrest, classification of offences, stop and search powers, traffic law and community involvement, with management training for those in supervisory roles.

Religious Movements

17. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the funding of groups monitoring new religious movements.

Mr. John Patten: We are at present considering the case for further Government funding in this area when the start-up grant for INFORM runs out later this year.

Domestic Employees (Work Permits)

18. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases foreign domestics have been found to be employed without a work permit in the last period of 12 months for which statistics are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Work permits are not issued for domestic work, but as a concession outside the immigration rules a domestic servant may be allowed to come to the United Kingdom as part of the household of an employer for whom he or she has worked abroad. The statistics about people found to be here in breach of their conditions of stay do not identify domestics as a separate category.

National Identity Card

21. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans for legislation to introduce a national identity card.

Mr. John Patten: No. When the introduction of a compulsory system of identity cards was proposed last year by my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell), the Government's response was that the advantages of such a system would be insufficient to justify the costs, both financially and in terms of the possible adverse effect on relations between the police and the public. We remain unpersuaded that a compulsory system of identity cards should be introduced. The arguments relating to a voluntary system are somewhat different. The possibility of the Government introducing a voluntary card is kept under review.

Newspapers

23. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has received concerning the findings of the Calcutt committee.

Mr. Mellor: I have received four written representations, and two requests for meetings, on aspects of the Calcutt recommendations.

Deaths (Police Procedures)

26. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedure is followed by the police in cases when persons are found dead in circumstances where there are no other persons present to notify their next of kin.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to his written questions last week.

Rehabilitation

27. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many schemes he funds for the rehabilitation of ex-offenders.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office gives grants to some 412 schemes dealing with the resettlement of ex-offenders.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and what was discussed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the Commissioner at a social function on 21 June when they discussed a number of matters.

Children (Legal Education)

30. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives he is considering to encourage parents to develop a knowledge of the law in their children.

Mr. John Patten: The proposals in the White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public" for involving parents when their children offend will promote a better understanding of the effect of the criminal law and the criminal justice process and make parents aware of their responsibilities.

Young Offenders

31. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any experimental work is going on into alternative prison regimes for young offenders.

Mr. Mellor: Young offender institutions seek to help offenders sentenced to custody to prepare for their return to the community by providing a programme of activities, including education, training and work, designed to develop personal responsibility and self-discipline and to assist offenders to obtain suitable employment after release. There are also many examples of constructive and innovative work to help inmates to confront their offending behaviour. Since the enactment of the relevant provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, the number of sentenced male young offenders in custody has fallen by 24 per cent.

Prison Population

33. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current ratio of prisoners to prison officers; and what it was in 1979.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 December 1979 there were 13,974 prison officers in post. The daily average of prisoners in 1979 was 42,220, giving an officer to inmate ratio of 1:3·02. On 1 June 1990 the number of inmates (including those in police cells) was 3,088 higher at 45,308 and the number of officers 6,612 higher at 20,586 giving an officer to inmate ratio of 1:2·01.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the size of the prison population at the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor: On Wednesday 11 July 1990 there were 44,611 prisoners held in prison service establishments in England and Wales. In addition, a further 882 were held in police cells.

Video Evidence

34. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make a statement on the report of the advisory group on video evidence.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 20 June at column 570.

European Council of Ministers

35. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the last three meetings he attended of the Council of Ministers; what subjects were discussed; and which Ministers were in attendance.

56. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the last three meetings he attended of the Council of Ministers; what subjects were discussed; and which Ministers were in attendance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the question from the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh).

Vehicle Watch Scheme

36. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to support the vehicle watch scheme.

Mr. John Patten: I am aware that a pilot vehicle watch scheme is currently in operation in Southend, and that similar schemes are in existence in a number of areas around the country. These are imaginative schemes and I look forward to hearing of the results they achieve. I have asked my officials to make arrangements for the crime prevention centre to disseminate information about the existing schemes to all police forces, and have referred the issue to Crime Concern.

Under-age Drinking

37. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on the problem of under-age drinking.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Eight letters specifically on the subject of under-age drinking have been received to date in 1990.

39. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the numbers of sentenced and remand prisoners currently being held in Winson Green prison, Birmingham.

Mr. Mellor: On Friday 6 July there were 565 sentenced prisoners and 418 remand prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Birmingham.

Hampshire Constabulary

43. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give further consideration to the need to increase the establishment of the Hampshire constabulary.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Hampshire police authority has applied for approval for 69 extra police officers in 1991-92. My right hon. and learned Friend will consider this, with the advice of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary, in the coming months together with applications from the other police authorities. The aim is to announce decisions before the end of the year.

Missing Persons Register

44. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to establish a national computerised missing persons register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to a question from the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. Kevin Taylor

45. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will order an independent inquiry into the prosecution of Mr. Kevin Taylor.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Lockerbie Bomb

46. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department with whom he has discussed the Lockerbie bombing in the last six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The investigation into the Lockerbie attack is the responsibility of the Dumfries and Galloway police, overseen by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate; but I have discussed the wider implications of this attack from time to time with ministerial colleagues and with representatives of other Governments.

Crime Prevention

49. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Government's crime prevention measures.

Mr. John Patten: The Government's crime prevention measures are kept under constant review through the Home Office's research and development programme, and the results of particular evaluation exercises are regularly published and placed in the Library. In addition, all major elements of the crime prevention advertising campaign are subjected to market research for both development and monitoring purposes. Implementation of the recent inter-departmental circular "Crime Prevention—the success of the partnership approach" is being monitored by an independent working group of the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention.

Race Relations

50. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for race relations of the development of strongly separated ethnic cultural traditions in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: The United Kingdom has long accommodated many diverse cultural traditions. Our guiding aim is that people of all races should participate fully in the mainstream of British society. Modern Britain has plenty of room for cultural and religious diversity, but there cannot be room for separation or segregation.

Isle of Man

51. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to visit the Isle of Man to discuss human rights.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to visit the Isle of Man for this specific purpose. The island is fully aware of its obligations and these are brought to its attention if necessary. On the outstanding matter of amending Manx law to conform with European Court judgments concerning homosexuality, a Select Committee of the House of Keys was seen by a Minister of State at the Home Office on 11 June.

55. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken or intends to take in respect of financial scandals on the Isle of Man; and if he will make a statement.

Maintenance Orders

52. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to bring forward his legislative proposals to give the courts new powers to enforce maintenance orders; and if he will make a statement.

Drug Trafficking

54. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the present extent of information exchange between the United Kingdom and other members of the European Community in order to combat most effectively trafficking in illegal drugs.

Mr. Mellor: Officers of the police and Customs services regularly exchange information about individual cases with their counterparts in other Community countries. In addition, the national drugs intelligence unit exchanges such information with other national units where these exist. These exchanges have proved highly effective and we should like to build on them. We therefore welcome the endorsement by the Dublin European Council of the United Kingdom proposal to speed up work on the establishment of a European central drugs intelligence unit.

These are regular exchanges about operational aspects of the fight against illicit drug trafficking within the framework of the Trevi and Customs mutual legal assistance groups. More generally, the recently formed European committee to combat drugs and the Council of Europe's Pompidou group have shown themselves to be useful fora for sharing national information about the problem and for the development of new measures designed to strengthen European co-operation against such trafficking.

Crime (Clear-up Rate)

57. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the clear-up rate for notifiable criminal offences committed in the north-west of England during the last 12 months for which figures are available and in the previous 12 months.

Mr. John Patten: Information on clear-up rates by police force area is published in table 10 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 10/90, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Magistrates Courts (Fines)

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the amount of fines imposed in magistrates courts in England and Wales in each of the years 1987, 1988 and 1989;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the amount of unpaid fines imposed in magistrates courts in England and Wales for each of the years 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. John Patten: In 1987 the amount of fines imposed in magistrates courts in England and Wales was £108·7 million. In 1988 the figure rose to £120·9 million. Data for 1989 will not be available until the autumn.

Information is not collected centrally on the amount of unpaid fines imposed in magistrates courts.

Wormhoudt Massacre

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding facilities provided by the Metropolitan police for the West German prosecuting authorities to take witness statements from survivors of the Wormhoudt massacre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Facilities were provided by the Metropolitan police for the West German prosecutor to interview survivors of the Wormhoudt massacre on 5 October 1989.

Further statements were taken at the prosecutor's request in May this year and forwarded to him through diplomatic channels on 20 June.

Immigration

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Norwegians have visited the United Kingdom through Scotland's ports and airports since the latest immigration rules were introduced.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest statement of changes in immigration rules (HC 251) has effect from 1 May 1990. The available information relates to May when 1,740 Norwegian visitors were admitted to the United Kingdom at Scottish ports of entry.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will outline the immigration rules which apply to Norwegian girls who are betrothed to Scots living and working in Scotland;

(2) if he will give details of the immigration rules which apply to Norwegians who wish to enter the United Kingdom through Scotland's ports and airports.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The current immigration rules are set out in the statement of changes in immigration rules (HC 251) which was laid before Parliament on 23 March 1990. A copy is in the Library. Paragraphs 47 and 48 of the rules relate to the admission of fiancés and fiancées.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Norwegians have been refused entry into the United Kingdom by immigration officials at Scotland's airports and ports since the latest immigration rules were introduced;

(2) how many Norwegians have had their passports held by immigration officials and been instructed to return to Norway at (a) Edinburgh airport and (b) Dyce airport under the latest immigration rules.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest statement of changes in immigration rules (HC 251) took effect on 1 May 1990. Since that date the number of Norwegians refused entry and removed to Norway at (a) Edinburgh airport is nil and (b) Aberdeen airport is four. The number for Scotland's other ports and airports during the same period is nil.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Norwegians were refused entry into the United Kingdom at Scotland's ports and airports in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is available only from 1985 and is as follows:

Prison Service

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 9 July, on what criteria Nottingham was eliminated from the shortlist of potential locations for the headquarters of the prison service.

Mr. Mellor: Following an assessment by consultants Nottingham was one of the six cities which were identified as meriting further consideration for the location of prison service headquarters, subject to the availability of suitable sites. Until a firm decision is taken to proceed at a specific location all options remain open, but work is currently focused on Birmingham, Coventry and Derby which contain the most promising of the available sites. The relocation of a large number of Inland Revenue staff to a particularly favourable site in the centre of Nottingham over the next two to three years and the lack of a comparable site for the prison service are the two main reasons why Nottingham is not currently one of the front-runners.

Tote

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the findings of the Lloyd's report on the privatisation of the Tote.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The report by Lloyd's Merchant bank will not be published because it was made in confidence and contains commercially and managerially sensitive information. The report is still under consideration and the Government's conclusions will be made known in due course.

Homicide

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons convicted of (a) murder and (b) other acts of homicide since the ending of capital punishment have committed a further act of homicide subsequent to their release from imprisonment.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The total number of persons convicted of murder or manslaughter, including those who committed their second offence before release from prison or hospital, is published annually in table 4.10 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library.

The information requested is: (a) 6; (b) 22.

15. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has discussed the Guildford and Woolwich or Maguire cases with (a) the Lord Chief Justice or (b) the Master of the Rolls.

19. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has discussed the Guildford and Woolwich or the Maguire cases with (a) the Lord Chief Justice or (b) the Master of the Rolls.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Hughes).

16. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider establishing a public inquiry into the conviction of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: Important aspects of this case are now being investigated by the Devon and Cornwall police. It is not possible at this stage to say when the Devon and Cornwall constabulary will be able to report on the results of its inquiries, but I know that the police are fully aware of the need to complete those inquiries as quickly and as thoroughly as possible. My right hon. and learned Friend will decide, in the light of the outcome of those inquiries, whether any further action is called for on his part.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the original notes of the police interviews with the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings have been recovered; and if they have been made available to the Devon and Cornwall police inquiry.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that officers from the Devon and Cornwall constabulary obtained police pocketbooks and original notes of interviews during their inquiries into certain aspects of this case in 1987.

48. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the nine Surrey police officers who were in Birmingham at the time of the pub bombings have been identified.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

38. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received seeking a public inquiry into the conviction of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: Since the beginning of this year, my right hon. and learned Friend has received approximately 1,100 representations about the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six, some of which have included calls for a public inquiry into the case.

32. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to (a) recover the original notes and (b) identify the authors of Criminal Records Office file 10368/74.

42. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to (a) review the original notes and (b) identify the authors of Criminal Records Office file number 10368/74.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on Friday 6 July, column 748.

28. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received to date this year about the Birmingham Six; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. John Patten: Since the beginning of this year, my right hon. and learned Friend has received approximately 1,100 representations about the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six. When my right hon. and learned Friend has received a report of the outcome of inquiries being conducted into certain aspects of this case by the Devon and Cornwall constabulary, he will consider whether further action is called for.

24. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations have been received from members of the prison service regarding the safety of the convictions of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

25. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations have been received from members of the prison service regarding the safety of the convictions of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: We are not aware of having received any representations about this case from members of the prison service. If any member of the prison service wishes to make representations about the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six, my right hon. and learned Friend will of course give them the most careful consideration.

22. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the inquiry by the Devon and Cornwall police into the Birmingham pub bombings case to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider establishing a public inquiry into the conviction of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier to the hon. Members for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery), for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) and for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall).

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions for cruelty to animals on farms have been taken out by the state veterinary service in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Maclean: Records relating to prosecutions by the Department for breaches of animal welfare legislation on the farm are available only from 1983. They are:

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the research projects undertaken during the last two years in collaboration with the Game Conservancy, indicating, in each case, the amounts paid by his Department and the percentage of each project's total cost this represented.

Mr. Curry: Over the last two years my Department has provided funding for three research projects which are being carried out by the Game Conservancy. Under the co-operative awards in science and engineering (CASE) scheme it has also funded five studentships in collaboration with the Game Conservancy at two universities. The detailed information is as follows:

Badger Tuberculosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the relationship between badgers and bovine tuberculosis in other member states of the EEC; and what proposals he has to restrict the import of tuberculosis-positive animals post 1992.

Mr. Maclean: A report on badgers and bovine tuberculosis in Ireland was published by the eradication of animal disease board in February 1989, and a copy is available in the Library of the House. As for post-1992 import arrangements, we shall seek to ensure that the Community rules which are expected to be in place by then contain the same safeguards against the introduction of bovine tuberculosis as currently apply.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of all cattle known to have contracted BSE have been (a) Friesian cattle, (b) Holstein cattle and (c) Jersey cattle.

Mr. Maclean: Up to 6 July 1990, the information for pure-bred cattle is as follows:

(a) 79·0 per cent.
(b) 1·9 per cent.
(c) 0·8 per cent.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of cattle known to have contracted BSE have been (a) cattle from dairy herds and (b) cattle from beef herds.

Mr. Maclean: Up to 6 July 1990, the information is as follows:

(a) 94·1 per cent.
(b) 5·9 per cent.

Geographic Information

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has made any changes in its information-gathering and data base programme following the recommendations of the 1987 report on the handling of geographic information by the committee chaired by Lord Chorley.

Mr. Curry: The Department is investigating and developing the use of digital mapping and geographic information technology with the aim of improving the handling of spatial information. Developments to date include the computerisation of environmental data for environmentally sensitive areas and support for the United Kingdom digital marine atlas programme.

Surplus Beef and Butter

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to change the arrangements for the distribution of surplus beef and butter in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 28 June, Official Report, column 339. I have no plans to change the arrangements for the current year announced on that date.

Spongiform Encephalopathies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the original terms of reference of the Tyrrell committee on research into spongiform encephalopathies; and whether they have been altered in any respect.

Mr. Gummer: The terms of reference of the consultative committee on research into spongiform encephalopathies were to advise the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health on research on transmissible spongiform encephalopathies. On 3 April this year I announced to the House, Official Report, column 542, that the committee was being reconstituted, under the continued chairmanship of Dr. David Tyrrell, as the spongiform encephalopathy advisory committee. Its terms of reference are to advise the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health on matters relating to spongiform encephalopathies.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action the Government are taking on the Tyrell committee report on research into spongiform encephalopathies.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the reply, 9 January, Official Report, c. 572]: I have today received the spongiform encephalopathy advisory (Tyrrell) committee's paper on the control of BSE in cattle. This paper discusses the scientific background to the opinion which the committee offered on 17 May to the effect that there is no scientific evidence currently available to support official advice against the use for breeding of the offspring of cows suffering from BSE and that some possible consequences might even be unhelpful.

Copies of the document have been placed in the Vote Office and the House Libraries and the paper will be available from my Ministry's press office.

Head Meat

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions there are on the use of head meat of cattle in meat products, including sausages and meat pies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984 allow head muscle meat to be used in the manufacture of meat products. As with all foodstuffs the general provisions of the Food Act 1984 and the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 also apply.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. Curry: The number of civil servants in this Department of the rank of principal (grade 7) or equivalent and above who are graduates of Oxford or Cambridge is 131. At the same levels 791 officers are graduates of other universities.

Food Safety Act

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what funds he will earmark for local authorities in England to implement the Food Safety Act in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have made it clear from the time that the Food Safety Bill was published that an extra £30 million a year will be provided through the revenue support grant for food law enforcement in Great Britain from 1991-92. This overall amount was calculated following consultation with local authority associations. The England share, calculated according to the usual formula, will be approximately £25 million.

Beef

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to improve stability in the beef market.

Mr. Curry: The European Community beef regime contains provision for special safety net intervention arrangements which apply when the market is particularly depressed. These measures are now in operation and the European Commission has so far agreed to buy into intervention over 11,000 tonnes of steer beef at a purchase cost of some £25 million in the United Kingdom. This, coupled with the recent extension of intervention coverage in Great Britain by the addition of sub-class 03 steer beef, is helping to sustain the market.

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to extend intervention in the beef market to include 03 graded beef.

Mr. Curry: At our request, at the beef management committee on 15 June 1990 a proposal was adopted adding steer beef sub-class 03 to intervention coverage in Great Britain. As a result this grade of beef is now eligible for intervention.

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to extend intervention buying in the beef market to include maiden heifer beef.

Mr. Curry: There is no provision in the Community regime to purchase heifer beef into intervention in any circumstances.

Sheep Variable Premium

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has reached a decision on the future of the sheep variable premium scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The reformed EC sheepmeat regime agreed last year by EC Agriculture Ministers makes provision for the phasing-out of the sheep variable premium scheme by the end of the 1992 marketing year at the latest. In the negotiations we secured the right to end the scheme before that date, or accelerate the rate of phasing-out if we wished.

My right hon. Friends and I have now reviewed the timetable for phasing out the variable premium, taking account of the views of interested parties. We have concluded that the sheep variable premium scheme should continue to operate during the 1991 marketing year, with payments made at 55 per cent. of the full rate. We shall review the arrangements to apply for the 1992 marketing year early in 1991.

I am also pleased to announce that following the commitment we obtained in the price fixing this year, EC Agriculture Ministers have recently agreed the seasonal scale of prices for the variable premium scheme. The scale will retain the same form in 1991 as in previous years. It was one of our outstanding objectives from this year's price-fixing package to reach an agreement on the scale on satisfactory terms and sufficiently early to enable producers to work towards a smooth phase-out of the sheep variable premium scheme. We have achieved that objective. This, together with the decision on the variable premium arrangements for 1991, will enable producers to plan ahead for the coming marketing year.

DEFENCE

Swimming Pool, Rowner

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the swimming pool at Rowner, Gosport, which is currently leased from his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Rowner swimming pool in Gosport is part of a privately funded naval recreation centre. I understand that it is due to close in March 1991.

Wormhoudt Massacre

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on facilities provided by his Department for the West German prosecuting authorities to study the closed British file on the Wormhoudt massacre; and if he has yet been informed what use is to be made of the information.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As the hon. Member is aware, the public prosecutor from Lubeck has visited this country and examined all the relevant material in our records: I have not heard what use he may wish to make of information gained from them.

Service Personnel, Northern Ireland

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total expenditure on deploying British service personnel in Northern Ireland for each year between 1969 and 1989; and what this expenditure was as a percentage of the total defence budget during the same period.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not possible to make a precise estimate of the total expenditure on maintaining forces in Northern Ireland as no detailed records are maintained for this particular purpose. However, since financial year 1981-82 we have undertaken an annual costing of the resources required to fulfil those tasks which relate directly to the emergency. The information is as follows:

Financial Year	Extra costs at outturn prices	Extra costs as percentage of the Defence Budget
	£ million
1981-82	149	1·2
1982-83	143	1·0
1983-84	141	0·9
1984-85	121	0·7
1985-86	135	0·8
1986-87	144	0·8
1987-88	168	0·9
1988-89	225	1·1
1989-90	201	1·0

The manpower numbers in the table are for 1 January, except for 1969, 1970 and 1971 which are as at 1 July. Recruitment to the UDR was authorised to commence on 1 January 1970.

Scottish Regiments

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Scottish regiments have been disbanded or amalgamated with others in the past 25 years; if he has any proposals to disband or amalgamate any existing Scottish regiments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Two regular Scottish cavalry and infantry regiments have been disbanded or amalgamated since 1965: the last regular battalion of the Cameronians (Scottish Rifles) was disbanded in 1968; and the Royal Scots Greys were amalgamated with the 3rd Carabiniers (Prince of Wales Dragoon Guards)—a Welsh regiment—to form the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers and Greys) in 1971.

I cannot comment on the future of any particular regiments at this stage. Work on options for change is continuing.

Local Government Finance

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to providing further financial assistance to service personnel to pay the community charge beyond the arrangements that have already been made.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no plans to alter the present arrangements for assistance to personnel in service accommodation who face high community charges. Service personnel will, however, benefit from any changes which apply to other members of the population in similar circumstances.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to exempting service personnel from the community charge.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It was decided at a very early stage that service personnel would in general be liable for the community charge in the same way as other members of the community.

Moray Firth

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether a maritime exclusion zone has been declared in or near the Moray firth in the last month.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Menwith Hill

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the allocation of expenditure for Menwith Hill development in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Menwith Hill is operated by the United States Department of Defense. I am unable to comment on its expenditure plans for the site.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. Alan Clark: Of the 4,073 civil servants holding the rank of principal—(grade 7) and above, 509 are graduates of Oxford or Cambridge and 2,348 are graduates of other universities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Chambers of Commerce

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what studies he has conducted on the roles and influence of chambers of commerce in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other countries of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State does, however, take a close interest in the activities of chambers of commerce in this country. In particular, he has been kept informed by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce over recent months of its plans to strengthen the existing chambers movement in the United Kingdom and to place its operations on a sounder, more coherent footing. He and I welcome the positive moves by the chambers to improve and extend the services they provide their members. We are sure that they can do and are doing much valuable work.

Investment

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to improve the input of large institutional investors into limited companies.

Mr. Redwood: I assume that the question refers to the influence which large shareholders can have over company management. It is for them to use as they see fit, and my right hon. Friend welcomes the current public debate on ways in which shareholders can generally make constructive use of their influence, particularly in giving weight to longer-term performance.

European Trade

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet his European counterparts to discuss Britain's trade with the rest of Europe.

Mr. Redwood: Ministers meet their European counterparts on a regular basis to discuss a range of issues of common interest.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on his policy towards the renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement in the context of the textile industry.

Mr. Redwood: Negotiations concerning the MFA are being handled by the EC. The United Kingdom Government have set out in several debates the EC's preferred method of phasing out the multi-fibre arrangement over a transitional period and the need in parallel to strengthen GATT rules and disciplines. The negotiating group on textiles and clothing (in which the Commission speaks on behalf of the Community) is charged with reaching a draft framework agreement by the end of this month.

Iraq

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table of United Kingdom trade and overseas aid figures with Iraq for the years 1983 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Redwood: Visible United Kingdom exports to and imports from Iraq for the years 1983 to 1989 inclusive were as follows:

£ million

	Exports	Imports[1]

1985	445	293

1989	450	93

The United Kingdom does not give overseas aid to Iraq.

LINK Scheme

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the original budget for the LINK scheme; how much has so far been spent; how much higher education institutions were expected to generate from industrial contracts; and what their performance has been against such targets.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The orginal target for the LINK scheme was £420 million, with half the funding to be provided by industry and half by Government. To date 24 programme areas of research have been approved, committing a total expenditure from Government of £160 million, provided that industry comes forward with a matching £160 million for individual projects. Most of the 65 research projects currently under way have become active only within the last 12 months. Industrial grants are paid in arrears, after costs have been incurred, and claims might not be submitted for up to 12 months after the work has been done. Consequently, the actual expenditure to the end of March this year is only around £7 million, but this is expected to increase significantly during the current financial year.

Higher education institutions are involved in about 60 of the 65 active projects. The total value of these projects is over £37 million, and it is estimated that higher education institutions will get about half the total Government funding for these projects.

The LINK scheme was set up to encourage collaborative research between industry and the whole of the science base. While no specific targets were formulated for how much higher education institutions were expected to generate from industrial contracts, HEIs have secured the major share of support for science base partners in projects under LINK.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. Forth: So far as is readily ascertainable, 201 and 701 respectively. The latter figure includes both other universities and institutions.

Engineering and the National Economy

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to engineering and the national economy to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 16 to 20 July.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council on 28 June.

Mr. Forth: The main item for discussion was a proposed Council directive under article 100A of the treaty of Rome, aimed at establishing full mutual recognition between member states of type approval procedures for telecommunications terminal equipment.

The Council reached political agreement by qualified majority, on the basis of a compromise text promoted by the Irish presidency, to a common position on this directive. This was after difficult negotiations over the linked issues of the scope of the directive and procedures for determining requirements as to the interworking of equipment.

The Government supported this outcome as striking an acceptable balance between the regulation which is necessary to protect the public telecommunications network and further significant liberalisation of the Community market in telecommunications terminal equipment.

Other significant items discussed included the preliminary consideration given to the role of the Community in assisting the development of telecommunications in eastern Europe and to the work in progress within the Community in preparation for a Green Paper on developments in the postal sector.

Unlisted Securities

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to be able to publish proposals for changes in the law governing offers of unlisted securities.

Mr. Redwood: A consultative document is being published today outlining proposals for implementing part V of the Financial Services Act 1986 and European Community directive 89/298 concerning the prospectus to be published when transferable securities are offered to the public. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

The proposals are designed to reshape and simplify the arrangements for the issue of securities, while ensuring that investors continue to be sufficiently protected against deceptive, misleading and unscrupulous practices. The proposals will bring about a significant degree of deregulation by narrowing the range of offers which require the publication of a full prospectus. They will require prospectuses and other documents offering securities to be pertinent, and will enable companies based in the United Kingdom to secure mutual recognition of prospectuses, to be vetted by the International Stock Exchange, as well as of listing particulars. Where prospectuses are not required, approval of the offer documents by a person authorised under the Financial Services Act, subject to the rules of the SIB, will be needed. My aim is to simplify the arrangements, and then to ensure that they are rigorously enforced.

Cosmetics

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to compel manufacturers of cosmetics to list the ingredients contained in their skin care products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The European Commission will shortly be publishing proposals to amend the cosmetics directive and we understand that these will require full ingredient labelling of cosmetics. I shall consider these proposals when they are published.

Dunsdale Securities

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply of 26 June to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins), Official Report, column 129, on what dates the application and monitoring returns submitted by Dunsdale Securities were verified by an auditor.

Mr. Redwood: Auditors' reports accompanying licence applications were submitted to the Department on 28 July 1983, 6 August 1984, 30 July 1986 and 3 August 1987. Annual monitoring returns, giving information on the handling of clients' money and investments during the previous licence period, were verified by an auditor on 23 March 1984, 3 October 1984, 20 May 1985, 26 March 1986, 17 March 1987 and 20 April 1988.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are being taken to ascertain how much of the investors' money apparently missing from the assets of Dunsdale Securities disappeared during the period that his Department was the supervisory regulatory body.

Mr. Redwood: The investigations being carried out by the Serious Fraud Office cover the whole period during which Dunsdale carried on business.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry at what date his Department or any self-regulatory organisation had the first warning about possible problems at Dunsdale Securities.

Mr. Redwood: My Department was first aware of problems at Dunsdale Securities on 6 June this year. I understand that FIMBRA was alerted on the afternoon of 5 June.

Self-regulatory Organisations

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the regulatory authorities as to whether previous convictions should be looked into by all self-regulatory organisations and recognised professional bodies.

Mr. Redwood: Appropriate arrangements exist for checking whether people seeking authorisation to carry on investment business have been convicted of any offence.

Auditors Panel

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to promote the development of a panel of auditors approved by the Securities and Investments Board or individual self-regulatory organisations.

Mr. Redwood: That is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board and the self-regulatory organisations. All auditors are subject to professional standards and their own regulatory requirements.

COCOM

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment has been made of the need to change the COCOM regulations;

(2) what changes have occurred in the COCOM regulations in the last 12 months.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 2 July 1990]: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Meriennydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 6 July, column 755.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received regarding increased charges for export insurance by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 July 1990]: I have received a number of representations about possible increases to ECGD's premium rates for project insurance from exporters and other interested parties. Despite the fact that I have made no proposals, due consideration will be given to these in formulating future policy.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the provision against loss in (i) the short-term, (ii) the medium-term and (iii) the long-term business of the Export Credits Guarantee Department and of the main export credit insurers in (a) the United States of America, (b) Japan, (c) West Germany, (d) France and (e) Italy, as shown in the 1988-89 financial year.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 6 July 1990]: ECGD's loss provisions are shown in its 1988-89 trading account (Cmnd 153). For reasons of commercial confidentiality these do not distinguish between categories of business. Comparable figures in respect of the other countries are not available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

PE Teachers

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide details of the number of places for those seeking to train as physical education teachers following the major planning exercise announced in December 1989; and whether he has any plans to increase the number of places further.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend announced aggregate intake numbers for initial teacher training for the three-year period 1991-92 to 1993-94 in April this year. Aggregate intake numbers have been increased for physical education for the triennium and have been set at 750 for each year. There are no plans further to increase the number of places available.

School Meals

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the school meals census for autumn 1989 to be published.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information on school meal arrangements is now collected with the annual schools census each January. Information for January 1989 was published in "Statistics of Education Schools 1989", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Research

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision is made to cover the overheads of academic research projects funded by the research councils; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of these provisions in covering real overhead costs.

Mr. Jackson: Under the dual support system, the overhead costs of projects funded by the research councils at universities are met from the universities' general funds.

It is for the Universities Funding Council to advise Government on the adequacy of the public funding it receives and distributes to the universities in the form of block grants in support of research and teaching.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to recruit and train more staff for the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Most of the 60 extra staff requested by the chairman of the board and recommended by the Home Affairs Select Committee in January (Second Report: Session 1989-90—HC92) are in post and have completed their basic training. The rest are expected to be in post by the end of July.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when working conditions and staff accommodation in the offices of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board are to be reviewed and modernised.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the office in Glasgow, where most of the board's staff are based, is already decorated and furnished to a good standard. The board's London offices, which are modern and suit the board's needs, are to be redecorated shortly.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from organisations concerning the figures used to assess new allocations of staff to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: We have received no outside representations, but officials have discussed with the Home Office trade union side concerns about the level of output expected now that the board has been given more staff.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to allocate a larger percentage of the staff of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to London.

Mr. John Patten: The relocation of posts from London to Glasgow was based on our assessment that the board could work more economically and efficiently if as much of its administrative work was transferred to Glasgow as could practically and conveniently be done there. This remains our approach, which is why the 60 new staff have been recruited predominantly in Glasgow. The board, which is responsible for managing its own operations, keeps check of the balance of staff and work between the two offices.

Rape

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the trend in the number of reported rape cases in the last 10 years;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of rapes each year which are not reported.

Mr. John Patten: The numbers of offences of rape recorded by the police in England and Wales in the years 1979 to 1988 are published in table 2.9 of the "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1988" (Cm 847); the figure for 1989 is published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 10/90.

Information on reporting and recording of sexual offences is published in table A.2 of "The 1988 British Crime Survey" (Home Office research study 111) and on rape in Table 2 of "Concerns about rape" (Home Office research study 106). Copies of all these publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to protect the rights of the victim in rape cases in order to achieve a decrease in the number of unreported rape cases.

Mr. John Patten: We have already strengthened and extended the law against public identification of complainants in rape cases; and we have changed the rules of court to stop routine disclosure of the addresses of witnesses on their statements. We are considering with the Law Society what more can be done to prevent misuse of certain witness statements which must be given to the defendant.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the minimum sentence for rape at present; and whether there are any plans to change this.

Mr. John Patten: The maximum penalty for rape is life imprisonment. The Court of Appeal has given detailed guidance on sentencing for rape, which indicates that a sentence of five years imprisonment should be the starting point for an adult found guilty of rape, without any aggravating or mitigating features. We have no plans to introduce a minimum penalty.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Industrial Deaths

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General if, following the referral of the death of Paul Elvin at Euston station in 1988 to the Crown prosecution service, he will make a statement about his intentions with regard to other cases of industrial death where there is an alleged element of criminal negligence.

The Attorney-General: It is the responsibility of the investigating authority to determine whether the alleged element of criminal negligence is so serious that the Crown Prosecution Service should be invited to consider the eveidence. In the case of Paul Elvin no new inquiry was began but, exceptionally, I asked the Director of Public Prosecutions himself to consider the evidence that was prepared for the purposes of a prosecution by the Health and Safety Executive under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act.

TRANSPORT

Northolt Airport

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to change current usage of Northolt airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: RAF Northolt is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. The airfield is also used by business aircraft, and the 1985 airports policy White Paper identified Northolt as having an important role to play in helping to meet demand for business aviation facilities in the London area. In line with that, we are seeking to establish a civil aviation enclave at Northolt, to serve the needs of the business aviation user more effectively.

Marine Surveyors

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report a summary of the results of the seven prosecutions initiated by his Department's marine surveyors, referred to in his reply to the hon. Member for Harborough on 26 April, Official Report, column 264.

Mr. McLoughlin: The results of the seven prosecutions referred to in my reply to the hon. Member for Harborough on 26 April, Official Report, column 264, were as follows:

(i) failure to supply master with a dangerous goods declaration for explosives, contravention of Classification and Labelling of Explosives Regulations 1983: shipper fined £1,000, owners fined £250, £150 and £100 on three counts;

(ii) failure to carry a valid load line certificates: owner fined £25;

(iii) defective lifeboats, and officers certificate lacking suitable dangerous cargo endorsements: master fined £7,500, with £3,000 costs;

(iv) defects identified by port state control inspection: case dropped;

(v) failure to comply with MS (Radio) (Fishing Vessel) Rules 1974: case dropped;

(vi) prosecution of master and owners under the Deck Officer Regulations and Load Line Act 1967: case still under consideration;

(vii) prosecution of master and owners for carrying more than 12 pasengers without a passenger certificate: case still under consideration.

United Kingdom Shipping

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of Transport, pursuant to his replies of 18 April, Official Report, columns 914-15, what factors account for the reduction in the British fleet and in employment in the United Kingdom shipping industry being greater than the world average.

Mr. McLoughlin: The oversupply of ships on a world scale reduced the financial returns available from shipping, and British operators withdrew from the unprofitable sectors more rapidly than some of their foreign counterparts. Some other British operators have seen commercial advantage in flagging out to other registers. Changes in trading patterns have also had a particular effect on the British shipping industry, firstly because the availability of North sea oil reduced the need for imports from further afield, and secondly because a drop in oil prices resulted in a reduction in exploration related shipping activity from 1984-85.

The joint working party with the General Council of British Shipping announced by my right hon. Friend on 24 May at column 288 is including in its work an assessment of the competitive position of the British shipping industry and factors which may currently deter owners from placing their ships on the British register.

United Kingdom Shipping

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 18 April, Official Report, columns 914-15, if he will take steps to reduce the cost disadvantages facing United Kingdom shipping operators.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend announced, on 24 May, Official Report, column 288, the setting up of a joint working party with the General Council of British Shipping to take a wide look at the circumstances in which the British shipping industry operates, including the main obstacles to the use of the British flag.

When the working party has reported we will consider what action, if any, should be taken.

Runways, Heathrow

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to authorise mixed mode runway use at Heathrow airport; and whether he has commissioned any research or computer modelling on this matter.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have no plans to do so, but this is one of a number of issues that my officials are discussing with the CAA.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Per Capita Income

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the average per capita income of the low-income countries, excluding China and India, has been for each of the last 10 years; and what are the corresponding figures for the industrialised market economy countries.

Mrs. Chalker: The average gnp per capita for the years 1979-88 of (1) the countries classified by OECD as low-income countries (excluding China and India) and (2) the 17 members of the OECD's development assistance committee was:

Year	Low income countries (excluding China and India) GNP per capita US dollars	Development Assistance Committee member countries GNP per capita US dollars

The low-income group has included different countries during the 10 years, both because of changes in individual countries' economic performance and because of revaluations in the per capita GNP threshhold for classification as a low-income country.

ENVIRONMENT

World Heritage Sites

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to the designation as World Heritage sites of (a) the Cairngorms area, and (b) other areas.

Mr. Trippier: It is in the first instance for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland to consider whether application should be made for World Heritage listing for the Cairngorms area.

The Lake District has been nominated for inclusion on the list this year and will be considered by the World Heritage Committee in December. Other possible future nominations are currently being reviewed by a group of experts chaired by English Heritage.

National Rivers Authority

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the authorised staff establishment of the National Rivers Authority headquarters (a) at its formation, (b) currently and (c) projected.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government's view was originally that, at least for an initial period, the National Rivers Authority head office should not exceed 60 staff. Following further consideration we agreed that a study by consultants should be commissioned to review the optimum size of the head office, and that meanwhile an additional 21 staff could be recruited to meet particularly urgent needs. The authority is in the process of filling these additional posts, and the study is under way.

Commissioners for Local Administration

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he gives any guidance to commissioners for local adminstration about holding meetings at the request of a local authority, pursuant to a report into its activities.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. Commissioners for Local Administration (local ombudsman) are entirely independent of Government in their handling of individual case.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what services are provided on behalf of the Government by local authorties at Heathrow airport.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No local authority acts as agent for the Government in providing services at Heathrow airport; such functions as they discharge there are their own responsibility.

Housing Associations

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will review the procedure for registering housing associations and particularly those that are friendly societies and have links with the development industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The registration of housing associations is the statutory responsibility of the Housing Corporation. Under the statute, the corporation has power to register only those associations, including those which are friendly societies, which do not trade for profit.

Construction Agreements

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list all construction agreements and contracts entered into by his Department in the years 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Chope: No. In the period referred to, my department placed in excess of 50,000 contracts for building and construction work.

Textile Finishers

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the problems arising in textile finishers' effluent from the presence of pentacholorophenol or its salts in imported grey fabric which is processed in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that his pollution inspectorate applies the same regulations on textile finishers' effluent as in other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has asked me to reply.

The EC Dangerous Substances Directive 86/280/EEC has, since 1 January 1988, required all surface waters to meet a quality standard in respect of pentachlorophenol (PCP) of 2 microgrammes per litre. The Commission will require uniform compliance with the directive across the Community.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, on behalf of the Secretary of State, is currently reviewing a number of trade effluent consents granted to companies where PCP may be present in their effluent. In reviewing these discharges, the Department is obliged to consider the representations of both the discharger and the statutory sewage undertaker as well as having regard to the need to ensure that the quality standard is met in the eventual receiving water before reaching his decision.

However, many existing waters already contain traces of PCP and this constrains further discharges, in some cases ruling out any further discharges from existing or proposed processes. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will therefore ensure that, as required by article 3 of the directive, the best technical means available are applied to the treatment of any discharge. For both existing and new discharges there are a number of practical measures and options available to enable the required discharge condition and therefore the quality standard in the relevant receiving water to be achieved.

Local Authorities (Accountability)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to introduce any proposals to allow local councils to be more accountable to the local people other than by local elections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer, 9 July 1990]. One of the principal aims of the changes in local government finance introduced in April was to increase local accountability.

PRIME MINISTER

Child Care

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Departments made allocations for child care facilities in their 1989-90 public expenditure bids; and what proportion of each Department's bid this constituted.

The Prime Minister: Information on the extent to which departments made public expenditure provision in 1989-90 for child care facilities for their staff is not held centrally.

There are already four nurseries in operation in Departments and agencies with a further three planned to open later this year.

Parliamentary Committees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list those occasions since 1979 on which a Minister has refused to give evidence to departmental or other parliamentary committees.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally.

Advisers

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Prime Minister how many of her advisers paid from public funds who are not career civil servants were appointed following employment in the public relations field immediately before their employment in her office.

The Prime Minister: None.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Birmingham Six

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last discussed the question of the Birmingham Six with the Irish Government.

Mr. Cope: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and is not within the ambit of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, but the matter was referred to during a meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 30 November 1989.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Documents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of and how many documents in 1989 he estimates were (a) passed on to the Public Record Office intact, (b) passed on to the Public Record Office in censored form, (c) retained by his Department in full, (d) retained by his Department in part, (e) destroyed, (f) otherwise disposed of and (g) otherwise unaccounted for.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 2 July 1990]. A total of 11,149 documents, in the form of individual files, was passed to the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI) in 1989 by Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office. The censoring of files is not permitted and they must be transferred in their entirety since it is not permitted to retain files in part. Files not passed to PRONI are retained by the Departments and filed judged by PRONI not to merit permanent preservation are destroyed. While our procedures provide that all records are accounted for, the percentage of documents retained or destroyed could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many plastic bullets were fired in Northern Ireland in 1989; in what circumstances and in what location the bullets were fired; and how many persons were injured as a result.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: A total of 937 plastic baton rounds were fired in 1989. I shall write to the hon. Member giving the detail requested and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Sexual Offences

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as to what inquiries have been made into the suicides of two men in late 1989 following their arrest on charges related to their homosexual activities.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 6 July 1990]: The Chief Constable has advised me that in July 1989 two men committed suicide following police investigations into their involvement in offences of gross indecency. Inquiries were made by the police into the circumstances of these deaths and full reports were made to the appropriate coroner who at the inquest into each death concluded that death was by drowning.

CIVIL SERVICE

Government Forms

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list those recommendations of the review report on the forms Government send to business which have now been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Departments have been encouraged to implement those recommendations of the review which apply to them and a full report on achievements will be included in the next progress report on forms to the Prime Minister in autumn 1991. More generally, since 1982, 171,309 forms have been reviewed of which 36,004 have been scrapped and 57,785 redesigned. This has resulted in savings of approximately £15 million.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Energy Bills (VAT)

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the expected yield from the imposition of value added tax on (a) gas and (b) electricity bills where supplies are made to domestic premises for business purposes.

Mr. Ryder: The revenue yield will be negligible. This is because many businesses operating from domestic premises will continue to receive zero-rated supplies under arrangements designed to simplify the administration of taxing fuel and power. VAT-registered businesses which are charged tax will be able to reclaim it under the input tax credit mechanism.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The Treasury has 130 graduates of Oxford or Cambridge and 103 from other universities or polytechnics.

Inland Revenue (Relocation)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with reference to the decision to relocate 1,800 Inland Revenue jobs from London and the south-east in 1992, what information he has regarding the projected number of vacancies in the network in London and the south-east at the time of the main move; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 July 1990]: It was announced on 24 July, at column 542, and 22 November 1989 at columns 1-2, that the work of 1,600 PAYE staff in London and the south-east would be moved gradually to other parts of the United Kingdom over the period November 1989 to mid-1992.

The programme was undertaken, in part, to tackle the effects of staff turnover rather than the level of vacancies, which in 1989 was low.

THE ARTS

Theatres, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister of the Arts whether he intends to meet the Merseyside Arts Association and the Arts Council to discuss the future funding of professional theatre in Liverpool.

Mr. Luce: This is a matter for the Arts Council and Merseyside Arts.

Regional Arts Associations

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the percentage by which grants from the Arts Council to the regional arts associations have increased since 1979.

Mr. Luce: Between 1979-80 and 1990-91 the Arts Council's grant to the regional arts associations increased from £6,362,017 to £33,146,000. This represents a cash increase of 521 per cent. and a real terms increase of 244 per cent.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about his proposals to enlarge the role of the regional arts associations.

Mr. Luce: My announcement on 13 March was welcomed by the House, the Arts Council and the regional arts associations. I have also received a number of other messages of support.

"Percent for Art" Schemes

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what sums the Arts Council has invested in "Percent for Art" schemes in each of the last three years; and how much is budgeted for each of the next three years;

(2) what sums the Arts Council has invested in the infrastructure necessary to develop "Percent for Art" schemes.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The Arts Council does not invest directly in individual "Percent for Art" schemes but encourages developers through education and example. It estimates that it has spent some £32,000 in this way since 1988. The success of its campaigning has created an increased demand for expertise and the council is now considering how best to meet this demand. It is already committed to spending £30,000 over the next three years to support the creation of new posts in four local authorities aimed at introducing the "Percent for Art" policy within the planning system. The council is meeting half the cost of these posts.

British Library

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the value of the land to be sold on the north side of the new British library site at St. Pancras.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The final value will depend on how much is surplus and the use to which the land can be put. A 5 acre area of land at the north end of the site was estimated in 1989 to be worth between £4·5 million and £6 million.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the estimated value of the Somers Town goods yard site at St. Pancras.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: It has not been necessary to obtain a valuation for the whole site.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the cost of site preparation of the land on the north side of the new British Library site at St. Pancras and its area in relation to the area to be occupied by the British Library.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The cost of removing the existing railway structures from the 2·7 acre strip at the northern end of the site totals £300,000. The remainder of the site, including the area to be occupied by the British library, comprises 9·8 acres.

EMPLOYMENT

Cobalt

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the extent to which employers are currently complying with the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations in relation to control of cobalt exposure and provision of medical facilities to employees exposed to cobalt in the manufacture and use of tungsten carbide, and on the extent to which conditions have improved since the last Health and Safety Executive internal report on the matter.

Mr. Nicholls: Data available within the Health and Safety cover a special project national exercise on cobalt exposure in the hard metal industry for the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1990; it is not possible without disproportionate cost to give data covering just the second year.

During the overall period, 122 premises were visited where cobalt was used; some more than once. By the end of the two-year period, HSE inspectors considered control to be satisfactory and in full compliance with the COSHH Regulations at 106 premises. For seven premises results of atmospheric monitoring are not yet available. At nine premises, exposure was judged to be inadequately controlled; enforcement action is continuing at these premises to ensure compliance with COSHH.

HSE does not have comprehensive information on the provision of medical facilities at these premises.

Asbestos

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the workplaces known to his Department with sprayed asbestos on the structural steelwork.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed claimants in each month since 9 October 1989 have (a) been issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claims referred to an adjudication officer for not actively seeking work and (c) had their claims (i) allowed and (ii) disallowed; where the claim has been disallowed, how many were (A) successful and (B) unsuccessful in claiming reduced income support; where an adjudication decision is pending, how many have been (1) successful and (2) unsuccessful in claiming reduced income support; how many have been referred to an adjudication officer for refusing employment; how many of those so referred had their benefit disqualified; and if he will provide the figures for Great Britain, each region and area adjudication sections in London.

Mr. Nicholls: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman regarding the number of claimants issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work. That part of the question asking for numbers of claimants who were successful unsuccessful in claiming reduced income support should be directed to the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of unemployed claimants in Great Britain, each region and the London employment service Areas, who were referred to an adjudication officer on grounds of voluntary unemployment, in the quarters ended December 1988, March 1989 and September 1989, categorised according to each reason for disqualification; and how many in each case have (a) been disqualified and (b) not been disqualified.

Mr. Nicholls: The Employment Service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

WALES

Computers (Schools)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the level of integration of computers on to the school timetable in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available. The level of integration of information technology across the curriculum varies with such factors as the age of pupils, the phase of education, and subjects timetabled as well as access to computer equipment, and is not statistically quantifiable.

Maternity Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Wales if he will list the hospitals in Wals which had consultant obstetric and/or general practitioner maternity beds in 1980, 1985 or the most recent year for which information is available and the numbers of beds of each type in each hospital in each year.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the table:

Cataract Treatment

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence collected and used by his Department underlay the decision to locate the specialist centre for the treatment of cataracts in Wales in Gwynedd health authority.

Mr. Grist: The ophthalmology treatment centre, while open to patients from the whole of Wales, is intended primarily to solve a particular waiting times problem in north Wales.

The decision to locate the treatment centre in Gwynedd was made on the basis of proposals received from health authorities and on the results of a special survey conducted in July 1989, which estimated that over 500 patients had been waiting more than four months for treatment for cataracts in Gwynedd and Clwyd at that date.

Financial Planning

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the financial years 1985-86 to 1989-90 the inflation figure his Department advised (a) district councils, (b) county councils and (c) health authorities in Wales to use in their advance planning and estimate making for each specific financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 9 July 1990.

Rivers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he intends to take to improve the classifications achieved by rivers in Wales in accordance with the National Water Council grading system.

Mr. Grist: We will be setting statutory water quality objectives for all rivers and estuaries in Wales in the light of the findings of the river quality survey presently being carried out by the National Rivers Authority and its subsequent advice.

Defence Installations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria he uses for considering appeals from the decisions of local planning authorities where the proposals concern defence installations.

Mr. Grist: Each case is considered on its merits, having regard to the development plan and all other material considerations. All factors are carefully weighted before reaching a decision.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is now in a position to announce his decision on the future structure of community health councils in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes. Over 200 responses were received to the consultation paper which outlined our proposals for the reduction in the number of community health councils (CHCs) in Wales and other issues.

I have now completed my consideration of those responses and whilst recognising that support is evident for certain of the proposals I have taken full cognisance of the fact that the majority of those who replied were not in favour of the reduction in the number of CHCs to one per district health authority (DHA). In most cases it was felt that many DHAs in Wales covered too large an area, or had too large a population, to be adequately serviced by a single CHC.

I have therefore decided to retain 22 CHCs in Wales, comprised as they are at present. Nevertheless, I still feel that there are considerable advantages in CHCs coming together at times when dealing with DHAs on district-wide issues and will be suggesting that councils consider setting up joint committee systems such as that which is employed in Mid Glamorgan. It is also my intention to pursue certain of the other measures which were outlined in the paper and which I consider will be of benefit to the way in which CHCs operate. These measures will include the transfer of responsibility for the employment of all CHC staff from DHAs to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority and consideration of improved staff training; greater involvement in consumer attitudes and quality of care issues generally; production of forward plans of action; and the possible involvement of CHCs in the DHA and practitioner committee annual review procedures.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regulations

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many regulations his Department has introduced in each of the last three years.

Mr. Redwood: The number of statutory instruments (including regulations, rules and orders) made by my Department in each of the last three years was as follows:

	Number
1987	82
1988	120
1989	138

Some of these replace older regulations, and others have been necessary to fulfil our obligations to implement EC directives in connection with the single market programme.

Hi-tech Industries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what new initiatives he plans to encourage the growth of markets for British hi-tech industries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department encourages growth in all markets by promoting enterprise and by creating a climate in which industry can flourish. There are no plans at present for any specific new initiatives.

Research

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much of the money allocated to the Link research funding programme has had to be returned to the Exchequer due to lack of demand.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No money allocated to the Link research programme has had to be returned to the Exchequer. Once funding is committed to a Link project it will be made available as necessary.

The actual spend on Link projects lags significantly behind commitment. This is due to the time involved in industry and science based institutes concluding formal agreements to collaborate, together with the fact that industrial grants are paid in arrears. This situation is made worse by industry frequently taking up to 12 months after the work has taken place to submit claims.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criticisms of the Link funding rules have been received by his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Comments on Link, including its funding rules, have been made by the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology, the Confederation of British Industry, the Engineering Council, and others. Their observations are currently being studied.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes are planned in the Link research funding rules.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None at present, although as with all such schemes, the rules are reviewed from time to time.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the money allocated to the Link research funding research programme has been (a) spent and (b) committed, to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 24 programmes have been approved under the Link scheme targeting priority areas of research. £160 million has been committed by government to finance the research in these programmes providing industry comes forward with a matching £160 million for individual projects. To date 65 individual collaborative research projects have been agreed and are under way with a total commitment from government and industry of £37 million. Due to the time taken to establish collaborative projects and the delay in industry submitting claims for work undertaken the spend for the financial year 1989-90 was only around £7 million but this is expected to increase significantly during the course of the current financial year.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what factors account for the low take-up of the money allocated to the Link research funding project.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Whilst 24 Link programmes have been announced, most of the 65 current research projects under way have only become active within the last 12 months. For example, on 6 April 1989 there were only 12 active research projects, whereas by 29 May 1990 the number has risen to 65. In addition, on 29 May 1990 a further 57 were through all stages of technical approval and were awaiting final financial clearance or the Department was waiting for the industrial partners to satisfactorily conclude crucial collaborative agreements. The time delay between the approval of research programmes targeting a particular area and the conclusion of collaborative agreements between individual science based institutes and industry to proceed on a particular project is reflected in the actual Link spend being significantly behind the commitment. This is exacerbated by the fact that industrial grants are paid in arrears, that is after costs have been incurred and particularly in the early days of a project, claims may not be submitted for up to 12 months after the work has taken place. As a result the actual spend to date has been low but is expected to increase significantly during the course of this financial year.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what proportion of projects funded under the European framework programme there is a United Kingdom academic partner and no United Kingdom industrial partner; and what are the reasons for this.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A fundamental objective of EC research and development collaboration is to encourage greater interaction between academic and industrial research in order to increase European competitiveness in world markets.

In general, United Kingdom industry has made considerable progress in participation in international collaboration and in winning funds from the EC research and development budget. With the greater emphasis in the 1990-94 framework programme on basic science, for example in biomedicine, health and the environment, United Kingdom universities and research establishments should be able to increase their already significant involvement in EC collaborative activities.

The split between United Kingdom industrial and academic involvement varies according to the content of individual research programmes and disproportionate effort would be required to extract this information on the 32 specific programmes under the 1987-91 framework programme.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the number of United Kingdom academics transferring their research ideas to the United Kingdom's competitors; and what factors account for this transfer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department makes no provision for the collection of information on the number of United Kingdom academics transferring their research ideas to the United Kingdom's competitors.

Dunsdale Securities

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what conclusions he has drawn about the quality of the flow of information between regulators and his Department in the light of the failure of Dunsdale Securities.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 July 1990]: Since the Securities and Investments Board and the self-regulating organisations took over responsibility for the regulation of investment businesses on 29 April 1988, there has been no requirement for them to keep the Department informed of their day-to-day dealings with particular firms. In cases where significant problems emerge, the regulators directly concerned of course keep my Department in close touch with developments, as has happened over Dunsdale Securities since 6 June 1990.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Deaf-Blind People

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how his Department is monitoring the extension of mobility allowance, on 9 April, to deaf-blind people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Apart from normal arrangements for monitoring mobility allowance claims, separate records are kept of the number of claims from people who are both deaf and blind, and of the outcome of these claims.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what instructions, guidance and training has been given to examining doctors, members of medical boards and members of medical appeal tribunals on how to apply new regulations introduced on 9 April extending mobility allowance to deaf-blind people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 19 April at columns 1012-13.

Autistic Children

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many autistic children have been granted mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available.

Pensioners

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the level of support for pensioners in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland, taking into account other benefits which are applicable to pensioners.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities (position at 1 January 1989)", a copy of which is in the Library. These tables set out the levels of benefit in the national currencies together with the sterling equivalent converted according to the OECD's purchasing power parity figure as explained in the introduction to the tables.

Income Support

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements have been made for an adjudication officer from his Department to assess whether an income support claimant should receive reduced income support under the hardship rules following a doubt over actively seeking work or availability on the basis of papers received from the employment service.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A hardship claim is automatically considered by an adjudication officer of the Department of Social Security when income support is suspended because of doubts as to whether a claimant is available for and actively seeking work. Such a claim is assessed on the individual's circumstances at the time, taking into account any other income and capital he has and any other relevant factors.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether an income support claimant appealing against a decision to suspend, disallow or disqualify on grounds of actively seeking work, refusal of employment or restricted availability, will have his or her case reviewed by his Department's or the Department of Employment's adjudication officers before submission to a social security appeals tribunal.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Any appeal received against an income support decision will lead to the case being re-examined by the income support adjudication officer before a submission is made to the social security appeals tribunal. However, a formal review will only be instigated if new information is provided which gives sufficient grounds for this course of action.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether income support claimants whose benefit has been suspended for two or more weeks as a result of actively seeking work or availability doubts who are in receipt of housing benefits are required to make a fresh claim for housing benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Where benefit is suspended and the local adjudication officer decides that hardship payments of income support are not appropriate, the claimant would be invited to make a fresh claim for housing benefit in order that entitlement can be determined in the light of the new circumstances.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has received any information on the operation of the rent officer arrangements within the housing benefit scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have today arranged for information on the operation of the rent officer procedures for housing benefit purposes to be made available in the Library. This information, which was produced by the Department of the Environment and covers England and Wales, is based on the period April 1989 (when the procedures were introduced) to December 1989 inclusive.

Youth Training

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether youth training is a training scheme approved by him for the purposes of section 20(1)(e) to (g) of the Social Security Act 1975.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 29 June 1990] My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has approved youth training, like its predecessor the youth training scheme, for the purposes of section 20(1)(e)-(g) of the Social Security Act 1975.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Assam Frontier Tea Ltd.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of India regarding the murder in Assam on 9 April of the chairman of the British-owned company, Assam Frontier Tea Ltd.

Mr. Sainsbury: We were saddened by the murder of Mr. Surendra Paul. British-owned tea companies have made their concerns about security in Assam known to us, and we have put these to the Indian Government. The Indian Government have confirmed publicly that they have asked the Assam authorities to take action.

Cyprus

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to the response by the Turkish Cypriot and Greek Cypriot communities to United Nations Security Council resolution 649 on the Cyprus problem; and whether he will urge both sides to resume intercommunal talks.

Mr. Maude: We will continue to give active support to the United Nations Secretary-General's efforts to promote a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem. We believe that the United Nations Security Council resolution 649 clearly maps out the way forward, and we maintain diplomatic contact with all parties in order to assist the United Nations' effort.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Newspapers

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make available a newspaper rack and daily newspapers for use of the staff and hon. Members on the Upper Committee Corridors.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As the hon. Member knows newspapers are already provided in a number of general areas such as the Members' Tea Room, the Members' Smoking Room and the Library where Members can collectively make use of them. I will arrange for the hon. Member's suggestion to be considered.

SCOTLAND

Shop Premises

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to increase inspection of shop premises; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The food Safety Act 1990, which received Royal Assent on 29 June provides the necessary framework to enable inspections to be undertaken by local authority (district and islands councils) enforcement officials. The authorities will be required to have regard to codes of recommended practice issued by the Secretary of State for the execution and enforcement of the Act and of regulations and orders made under it.

Present measures will be further augmented and formalised next year by the EC Council directive on the official control of foodstuffs. Member states will require to operate a formal programme of inspections at all stages of food production, manufacture, processing, storage, transport, distribution and trade.

Strathclyde Police Authority

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civilian employees are employed by Strathclyde police authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1990]: There were 1,941 civilians in post as at 1 April 1990 in Strathclyde police authority. This number includes nine and 63 civilians employed by the Scottish crime squad and the Scottish Criminal Record Office respectively.

Police Salaries

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the salaries of each police officer grade from constable to chief constable, giving details of incremental payments where applicable.

Police Manpower

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the number of police employed in each Scottish police authority and the ratio of officers per head of population within each authority;

(2) if he will list the manpower strength in each police authority with a breakdown of male and female officers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1990]: As at 31 March 1990 the figures were as follows:

Area	Male	Female	Total	Ratio of officers to population
Central	575	55	630	1:430
Dumfries and Galloway	319	29	348	1:425
Fife	688	67	755	1:457

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the number of police officers employed within the Hamilton division of Strathclyde police authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The total uniformed strength of Q division of Strathclyde police, within which Hamilton lies, is 413 officers. The number of officers on duty in particular areas at particular times varies according to the policing requirements.

Police Expenditure

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the total expenditure for each police authority in Scotland for each year since 1979, giving the ratio of expenditure per head of population.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The information is given in the table:

ENERGY

Electricity Supply

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what instructions he has given to the Non-Fossil Fuel Purchasing Agency on the authorisation of contracts signed by public electricity suppliers with non-fossil non-nuclear generators at above pool price.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has given no such instructions. The commercial terms offered by the public electricity suppliers to generators seeking to contract within the non-fossil fuel obligation are a matter for the suppliers.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from potential producers of non-fossil non-nuclear electricity regarding the maximum length of power supply contract and price of electricity to be produced from those sources.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations. However, the legislation permits a fair degree of flexibility which can be used to secure bankable contracts and the public electricity suppliers have been able to take account of this in their negotiations with renewables generators.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the European Commission regarding the length of contract and premium price above pool to be paid for electricity generating from renewable sources (a) before and (b) after 1 April 1998.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the "Note by the Department of Energy on the undertakings given by the Government in relation to the future of the fossil fuel levy", which has now been published as appendix 11 to volume 2 of the report by the Select Committee on Energy on "The cost of nuclear power".

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with (a) producers of renewable electricity and (b) the Non-Fossil Fuel Purchasing Agency regarding (i) intermittent renewables and (ii) continuous renewable electricity sources on the length of contracts and price to be paid by the public electricity suppliers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The commercial terms offered to projects seeking to contract within the non-fossil fuel obligation are a matter for the public electricity suppliers. The legislation provides them with the flexibilities they need in order to be able to offer bankable contracts, and I understand that they have taken account of those flexibilities where appropriate.

Energy Managers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a copy of the Secretary of State's letter of July 1986 recommending to Departments that they appoint energy managers on the basis of one per £1 million energy spend.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not customary to publish such inter-departmental correspondence. However, all Government Departments have now appointed energy managers.

DEFENCE

Trident

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to review the timetable for the Trident programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: It remains our intention to deploy the Trident system in the mid-1990s.

Disarmament

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department is making to conferences on disarmament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom has a substantial arms control agenda. The Ministry of Defence makes a major contribution to all the current arms control negotiations which have a direct effect on British interests, and has permanent representatives in Geneva at the conference on disarmament and in Vienna, at the CFE talks.

Tornado and Hawk

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his intention that British Aerospace will remain a major contractor for future developments of role and capability of the Tornado and that his Department will continue to pursue export opportunities for the Hawk.

Mr. Alan Clark: Responsibility for the selection of contractors for the Tornado programme rests with NAMMA, the contracting authority. However, British Aerospace has played a central role in the programme in the past and will, I trust, continue to do so.

We will continue to support the export prospects of the Hawk and the other products of the military and civil aircraft divisions of British Aerospace.

NATO Strategy

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department still sees a requirement for a mix of nuclear and conventional forces for NATO's strategy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes. As alliance heads of state and Government made clear in their declaration issued after the meeting of the North Atlantic Council in London last week to keep the peace, the alliance must maintain for the foreseeable future an appropriate mix of nuclear and conventional forces, based in Europe, and kept up to date where necessary.

Fetes

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel were involved on official duties at the fete organised by the West of Scotland Conservative and Unionist Association on 9 June; and if he will list them by rank.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Four Royal Navy personnel were involved: three lieutenants and one petty officer aircrewman.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many times in the last five years a naval helicopter has been used at fetes organised by the West of Scotland Conservative and Unionist Association; if he will list the events and times when they were used; and at what level the decision to allow the helicopter to be used was taken;

(2) how many times in the last five years a military helicopter has been used at fetes organised by political parties in the United Kingdom; and if he will list the events, the dates and the political parties involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Records are not maintained but the Department has no recollection of any instances of participation in such events other than that to which the hon. Gentleman has already referred.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines are followed in considering requests from political parties for the services of armed forces personnel and equipment at fetes organised by them to raise charitable funds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Queen's regulations prohibit service participation in events whose purpose is to further the interests of political organisations. There is, however, no prohibition of service participation in events the purpose of which is to raise funds for local charities, where this can be done at no additional cost to the defence budget. In the instance to which the hon. Gentleman has drawn attention, Royal Navy participation was both beneficial to helicopter training and designed to assist in fund raising for the Royal National Lifeboat Institution and the Erskine hospital. A total of £12,000 was raised for these charities.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much fuel was used at the fete organised by the West of Scotland Conservative and Unionist Association to fly the naval helicopter at the White House, Renfrewshire on 9 June; and how much it costs to run a helicopter of that type, including crew, for one day.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Approximately 10 gallons of fuel were used while the helicopter was at the fete. The full operating cost of a Sea King helicopter, including fuel, crew and wear and tear, is some £4,800 per flying hour. In this instance, however, the helicopter was carrying out a routine training mission that would have been undertaken even if the fete had not been held. No additional costs were therefore incurred.

Construction Agreements

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list all construction agreements and contracts entered into by his Department in the years 1987, 1988 and 1989, respectively.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. In the period referred to all construction agreements and contracts relating to defence requirements, with the exception of a very small number concerned with nuclear work, were entered into on the Ministry of Defence's behalf by the Department of the Environment.

Over-the-horizon Radar

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the distance between ROTHR installations in Virginia and in the Aleutians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The transmit and receive facilities of the ROTHR installation in Virginia (which is not currently operational) are separated by 71 nautical miles; and those of the installation in the Aleutians are separated by 23 nautical miles. This distance is well below the theoretical minimum in open country, and operation of the Aleutians system is effective only because there exists a high mountain range between the transmit and receive sites.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire is a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation project or a US/UK project.

Mr. Alan Clark: The proposed two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom is a joint US/UK project.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the environmental impact assessments being undertaken as part of the planning application for an over-the-horizon radar installation at St. David's airfield will be published in their entirety when completed; and how much time will be available for consultation before the national park planning committee considers the planning applications.

Mr. Alan Clark: Copies of the environmental impact assessment to be submitted to the Pembrokeshire coast national park authority in support of our formal notice of proposed development will be made generally available. In accordance with the procedures set out in Welsh Office circular 23/88, the authority will have 16 weeks in which to consider the proposals, in consultation with all interested parties.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what experiments he proposes to conduct in order to verify the survivability of the proposed over-the-horizon radar installation at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire against electromagnetic interference, nuclear, biological and chemical warfare.

Mr. Alan Clark: We will be studying the design of the system and the detailed specifications of its hardware in order to determine the feasibility of introducing measures that may be needed to improve its survivability.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the terms of reference of the environmental impact assessments being undertaken by W. S. Atkins and the Robens institute on behalf of the Ministry of Defence in connection with proposed over-the-horizon radar at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are no such specific terms of reference, but W. S. Atkins has been commissioned to prepare an environmental impact assessment in accordance with the guidelines set out in Welsh Office circular 23/88.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dairy Herd

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of the United Kindom's total dairy herd is comprised of (a) Friesian cattle and (b) Holstein cattle.

Mr. Maclean: Friesian and Holstein cattle together constitute 90 per cent. of the United Kingdom's total dairy herd. It is not possible to determine separate figures for each breed. Many dairy herds contain both breeds together with Friesian/Holstein crossbreeds.

Food Safety

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what resources he is making available to port health authorities in order to help them meet extra obligations imposed by the Food Safety Bill.

Mr. Gummer: We have agreed to provide an extra £30 million through the Revenue Support Grant to meet the costs falling to local authorities in Great Britain as a whole as a result of new food legislation. This sum was calculated following discussions with local authority associations including representatives of port health authorities.

The money will be distributed among port health authorities, along with other local authorities, in the usual way.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether quota entitlement will be transferred from any Scottish vessel found guilty of falsely declaring catches from area VII to that area's entitlement.

Mr. Gummer: Fisheries Departments will seek to apply appropriate penalties and compensation in the event of any successful prosecutions being brought for misreporting.

Written Answers to Questions

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

National Curriculum

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table listing every document relating to the national curriculum published by his Department, whether on its own behalf or for others, the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council, since May 1987, with date and title of publication, its length in pages, and the numbers of copies printed, in every case.

Mr. MacGregor: It will take some time to prepare this, given that other organisations are involved. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as I am in a position to do so, and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Single-sex Schools

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will indicate how many local authorities provide single-sex schooling at secondary level.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In January 1989, of the 97 local education authorities in England, 66 had maintained, single-sex secondary schools.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the trend in the number of parents choosing to send their children to single-sex secondary schools in the public sector.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to ensure that local authorities provide sufficient single-sex schooling at secondary level to meet all parental preferences.

Mr. Alan Howarth: There are no plans of this nature, since it is not Government practice to impose particular organisational patterns for schools upon local authorities. My right hon. Friend always takes account of parental preference when considering proposals for change.

Science

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action is being taken to encourage girls and women to study science subjects.

Mrs. Rumbold: The national curriculum introduced into schools last September will ensure that all pupils will study a balanced science course from early years right up to GCSE level. Girls will not be able to drop physics and chemistry at age 14.

Introducing structured scientific study in primary schools will have a positive effect on the traditionally narrow view many girls and women have of school science.

The Government are helping to sponsor the Engineering Council's "Women in Science and Engineering" project aimed at persuading girls and women of both the possibility and attractions of careers in science and engineering.

Ministerial Speeches

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much it has cost to send secondary head teachers copies of his recent speeches.

Mrs. Rumbold: The cost of printing and distributing to secondary schools copies of the Secretary of State's two most recent speeches was £10,430.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to reply to the letter sent on 11 June by the Reverend John L. Clegg of 77 Errwood road, Levenshulme, Manchester, to the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold).

Mr. Alan Howarth: A reply was sent to the Reverend Clegg on 10 July.

University Lecturers (Pay)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when his Department will ratify the pay settlement for university lecturers agreed between the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Association of University Teachers.

Mr. Jackson: A decision will be taken on this proposed settlement as soon as possible.

Schools (Local Management)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is now in a position to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Birkenhead dated 22 February about the local management of schools in Wirral.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. In my reply of 19 March to the hon. Member's letter of 22 February I promised to write again when the statutory approval of Wirral local education authority's scheme for the local management of schools had been completed; at present, we are in consultation with the authority over proposed modifications to its scheme submission.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Rover

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration he has given to the implications for any future advice which he will give to Government Departments of the ruling of the European Commission in respect of the British Aerospace purchase of Rover.

The Attorney-General: The legal implications of a decision of the European Commission are always carefully considered.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide a table of the number of appeals to the immigration appeal tribunal allowed and dismissed in 1989 and the first quarter of 1990.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is set out in the table:

	Allowed	Remitted for re-hearing before an Immigration Adjudicator	Dismissed
Appeals heard 1989	194	198	291
Appeals heard January-March 1990	62	80	102

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide a table showing the number of appeals to immigration adjudicators allowed and dismissed in 1989 and the first quarter of 1990, broken down according to the nationality of the appellant and the type of decision appealed against.

The Attorney-General: The information is not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate costs. The number of appeals to immigration adjudicators allowed and dismissed in 1989 and the first quarter of 1990 is given in the table.

	Allowed	Dismissed
Appeals heard by Immigration Adjudicators 1989	3,060	8,149
Appeals heard by Immigration Adjudicators January-March 1990	794	2,380

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General in what proportion of cases heard by social security commissioners in January to June, the claimant and the adjudication officer respectively were (a) represented by legally qualified persons, (b) represented by unqualified persons and (c) unrepresented.

The Attorney-General: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General why it has been decided not to make legal aid available for representation at social security commissioners' hearings.

The Attorney-General: As my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor explained in another place on Tuesday 10 July, additional resources to extend the scope of legal aid cannot be provided at present and it may be possible to provide legal aid for matters such as hearings before social security commissioners only if savings can be made from elsewhere in the legal aid scheme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Secondary Education

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy as to whether a representative of the board of governors of a grammar school which has not allocated a place to a student transferring from primary school should be available for questioning at any tribunal established to hear an appeal against the board's decision.

Dr. Mawhinney: The School Admissions (Appeal Tribunals) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1990 afford a representative of the board of governors of a school whose decision is under appeal to appear at an appeal hearing and to make oral representations. The regulations do not require the representative to be available for questioning.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many secondary and grammar schools in Northern Ireland have specified in their selection criteria for children transferring from primary schools a priority for children (a) with a brother or sister who attended that school, (b) with a parent who attended that school and (c) who were the first born to their parents.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

(a) 208
(b) 38
(c) 6

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether legal representation will be available to parents attending tribunals to appeal against the placement of their child in a secondary or grammar school.

Dr. Mawhinney: Legal representation will not be made available at appeals tribunals. It will be a matter for appeals tribunals, in conjunction with education and library boards, to decide if parents may be legally represented.

Illegal Dumping

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions prosecutions were taken to court by public health authorities in Northern Ireland for instances of apparent illicit dumping; and on how many occasions convictions were secured, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In Northern Ireland, each district council is responsible for enforcing the legislation on the disposal of waste in its area. Records of prosecutions are not held centrally.

The information is being sought from the various councils. I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Homelessness

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of (a) single people and (b) families who have presented themselves as homeless to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each district council area in each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive was given responsibility for dealing with the accommodation needs of all homeless people under the Housing (NI) Order 1988 which came into effect on 1 April 1989. The information requested is therefore available only from that date. I am advised by the chairman of the Housing Executive that the number of single people and families who have presented themselves as homeless during the year 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990 in each district council area is as follows:

District council	(a) Single people	(b) Families

Sunday Trading

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions prosecutions were taken to court by district councils in Northern Ireland for instances of apparent illegal Sunday trading, and on how many occasions convictions were secured, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Needham: This information is not available centrally.

Unfit Dwellings

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of unfit dwellings in Northern Ireland, by district council area, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Housing Executive carried out a full house condition survey in 1984. The information for that year is as follows:

Number of unfit dwellings

District	Number
Antrim	821
Ards	1,703
Armagh	1,515

Arthur Anderson and Company

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he is pursuing his action against Arthur Anderson and Company in the American courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Department of Economic Development is continuing to pursue its legal action against Arthur Anderson and Company, former auditors of De Lorean Motor Cars Ltd., in the United States Federal Court.

Chief Electoral Officer (Report)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the report of the chief electoral officer for Northern Ireland for 1989-90 will be published.

Mr. Brooke: The chief electoral officer's report was laid before the House today and is published as House of Commons paper No. 526. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

PRIME MINISTER

Court Decisions (European Treaties)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will take steps to ensure that her Ministers issue guidelines to the general public and enforcement authorities in cases where United Kingdom laws are suspended or substantially amended in practice by court decisions related to the European treaties; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Where a court holds that national law conflicts with Community law its order will tell the parties before it what they are to do or not to do. If any question of interpretation of the decision were to arise it would be for the courts to determine, not the Government.

"Sterling in Danger"

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will obtain a copy of Sir Alan Walters' book "Sterling in Danger" for her Office's library.

The Prime Minister: We are doing so.

Political Donations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what changes the Government have introduced since 1979 affecting the way companies may make political donations.

The Prime Minister: Companies legislation has since 1967 contained a requirement that a company's directors should disclose in their report, which forms part of the accounts, any gifts of money for political purposes if the amount exceeds a specified sum. The specified sum was increased from £50 to £200 in 1980.

Right Hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Prime Minister if, in the light of his remarks on Germany and Germans on 12 July, she will dismiss the right hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Ridley) from his office as Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend tendered his resignation on Saturday 14 July.

Nuclear Treaties (China)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her meeting with the Chinese ambassador on 3 July, she discussed the prospects of China joining (a) the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and (b) the partial nuclear test ban treaty before their forthcoming review conferences, respectively, in August and September and January 1991.

The Prime Minister: The discussion was confidential.

Rent-to-mortgage Schemes

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister, further to her oral reply to the hon. Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 12 July, if she will give details of the success of the Scottish and Welsh experiments with rent-to-mortgage schemes; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The trial rent-to-mortgage and flexi-ownership schemes in Scotland and Wales are making encouraging progress. The Scottish Homes rent-to-mortgage scheme, from its introduction in October 1989 until the end of June this year, has attracted more than 1,000 inquiries from eligible tenants, with 169 applications in process. Since its introduction in December 1989, the Welsh flexi-ownership scheme has attracted over 100 inquiries from the 800 tenants eligible to participate in the scheme with some 50 applications in process. The schemes are being monitored and any modifications which seem desirable will be introduced whenever appropriate. The evidence so far is that both schemes are enabling tenants who would not otherwise become owner-occupiers to do so.

Cabinet Ministers (Statements)

Mr. Bell: To ask the Prime Minister what directions are given to the Cabinet Office to review the statements of Cabinet Ministers prior to publication; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

ECGD

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has yet completed his review of the policy towards Export Credits Guarantee Department cover for exporters to India and Indonesia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I am not able to comment on ECGD's future policy towards cover for India and Indonesia as the review of the markets has not yet been completed.

Portfolio Management System

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the implementation of the portfolio management system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) on 19 June, at column 490.

CBI

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss matters relating to the European Economic Community.

Mr. Redwood: In the last year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has met senior representatives of the Confederation of British Industry on five occasions to discuss a range of issues including the European Community.

Dunsdale Securities

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will review the operations of the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association, in the light of the failure of Dunsdale Securities.

Mr. Redwood: The Securities and Investments Board is responsible for ensuring that the self-regulating organisations such as FIMBRA carry out their duties effectively.

Limited Companies (Boards)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what European Community proposals exist for two-tier boards for limited companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The draft fifth directive on company law contains proposals for the harmonisation of laws relating to the structure of the boards of public companies. It would enable national legislation to prescribe the use of a one-tier or a two-tier board system, or to provide for both. The proposal for a European company statute contains provisions that would enable a European company to choose between the two structures.

Auditors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to bring forward legislation to extend to company auditors duty of disclosure of confidential complaints and concerns to the regulatory authorities.

Mr. Redwood: I must ask the hon. Member to await the Government's response, which my right hon. Friend hopes to announce soon, to a recommendation on this topic made by the Select Committee on Trade and Industry in its report on company investigations.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is reviewing his powers to take action against auditors criticised in Companies Act inspectors' reports, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: No review is being undertaken. Under part II of the Companies Act 1989—the key provisions of which we expect to bring into force in early 1991—a recognised supervisory body must appear to the Secretary of State to have both adequate rules and practices designed to ensure that company auditors are fit and proper persons; and adequate arrangements and resources for the effective monitoring and enforcement of compliance with its rules.

Gaseous Fuels

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to make appointments of notified bodies under the terms of the European Community directive on the approximation of the laws of member states relating to appliances burning gaseous fuels.

Mr. Forth: I intend to make appointments of notified certification bodies under the gas appliance directive at the earliest possible date consistent with providing the appropriate legal safeguards for those seeking certification for their products. These are necessary given the mandatory nature of the certification requirements introduced by that directive.

Subsidiaries' Transactions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on identifying the price base of transactions between company subsidiaries.

Mr. Redwood: None that I know of.

Insurance Companies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all reports published following investigations under the Insurance Companies Acts; and how many unpublished investigations have been completed.

Mr. Redwood: It is not departmental policy to publish such reports.

EC Investment Services Directive

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he is holding in relation to the European Community investment services directive.

Mr. Redwood: I am publishing today a consultative document on the investment services directive which seeks views on this important single market measure. I have arranged for copies of the document to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

In the negotiations to date on the directive, the Department has sought the views of regulatory bodies, organisations representing the United Kingdom investment services industry and of consumer groups.

Office Searches (EC Inspectors)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers exist under European Economic Community related legislation for officials of the European Commission to enter and search the premises of United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 July 1990]: Article 213 of the EEC treaty permits the Commission to collect any information and carry out any checks required for the performance of its tasks within the limits laid down by the Council. In practice this provision is never used.

The following Community instruments covering matters within the Secretary of State's areas of responsibility grant the Commission powers to conduct investigations on the premises of United Kingdom companies for certain specified purposes:

- Council Regulation No. 17 (1962) implementing articles 85 and 86 of the Treaty.
- Council Regulation (EEC) No. 1017/68 applying rules of competition to transport by rail, road and inland waterway.
- Council Regulation (EEC) No. 4056/86 laying down detailed rules for the application of Articles 85 and 86 of the Treaty to maritime transport.
- Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3975/87 laying down the procedure for the application of the rules of competition of undertakings in the air transport sector.
- Council Regulation (EEC) 4253/88 concerning the co-ordination of the activities of the Structural Funds.
- Council Regulation (EEC) No. 4064/89 on the control of concentrations between undertakings. [Enters into effect on 21 September 1990].

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement setting out the powers which European Community inspectors have to enter business premises and to seize or study papers; and if he will publish a note of guidance on these to issue to British-based companies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 5 July 1990]: My reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren) today sets out EC legislation within the Secretary of State's responsibility which gives the Commission power to inspect business premises. Companies should consult their legal advisers on Community powers in individual cases.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement setting out the difference in the powers of United Kingdom-based company inspectors and European Community inspectors in relation to the entering of business premises and the seizure of documents.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 5 July 1990]: In the competition area, where we can give a reasonable comparison, the main difference is that under both United Kingdom and EC law authorities can require the production of documents and the giving of oral evidence, but only under EC law can authorities demand entry to premises.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who supervises office searches in the United Kingdom by European Community inspectors; and if any limits are in general placed on the extent of the papers and documents which may be seized or studied.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 5 July 1990]: Detailed working rules on office searches by European Community inspectors will be set by the Commission within the framework of the Community regulations which permit such searches. It is the practice for an official of the Office of Fair Trading to accompany Commission officials conducting investigations in the United Kingdom whenever possible.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the quotas covered by the multi-fibre arrangement and indicate the proportion of each quota used.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 14 March 1990, c. 306]: The Department of Trade and Industry is now able to provide a list of quotas covered by the multi-fibre arrangement together with relevant data on utilisation for 1988. This has been placed in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Canteens

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what basis prices in prison canteens are calculated; and what progress has been made in reducing differences between prices in different prisons.

Mr. Mellor: To reduce differences in prices of goods sold in different prison canteens, governors will be reminded in a circular instruction to be issued on 26 July that selling prices should be at the manufacturer's recommended retail price. Where such a price is not set the selling price should be that which members of the public normally pay in retail transactions.

Elderly Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what special rules or arrangements are made for prisoners over pensionable age.

Mr. Mellor: None formally, but prison staff naturally have regard to the age and physical condition of prisoners in their care.

Prison Clothing Supplies

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the scale holding of prisoners' pyjamas in each London prison.

Mr. Mellor: Pyjamas are an optional item, and the quantity held in any one establishment will vary depending on the number of prisoners wishing to wear them. Information on the total holding at each male London prison, including articles in use, could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Stocks currently held in store are as follows:

	pairs
HM Prison Brixton	1,000
HM Prison Pentonville	210
HM Prison Wandsworth	800
HM Prison Wormwood Scrubs	250

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British citizenship under section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981 have been (a) made, (b) granted and (c) refused in each quarter since January 1989; and how many of those granted have been on the grounds of service in the armed forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not readily available in the form requested. The total number of applications to date in each category, with equivalent figures up to July 1989 in brackets, is as follows:

	Servicemen		Others		Total

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance as (a) wives, (b) husbands, (c) fiancés and (d) fiancées in each British post in all countries apart from those of the Indian subcontinent were (a) granted and (b) refused in each quarter since January 1989; how many such applications in each category, at each post and in each quarter were refused (1) wholly and (2) partly because of the primary purpose rule; what was the refusal rate at each post; and what percentage of those refusals were (x) wholly and (y) partly on primary purpose grounds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only information requested which is available centrally is that on applications granted and refused in Hong Kong, and is given in the table.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total number of passengers detained overnight under Immigration Act powers during 1989, by nationality; and how many of these were under 18 years old;

(2) how many people, by nationality, were detained (a) overnight and (b) for a period of more than one month in (i) Harmondsworth detention centre, (ii) the Queen's building, Heathrow, (iii) the Beehive, Gatwick, and (iv) Her Majesty's prison, Haslar, during 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Most of the readily available information relates to the number of passengers whose detention spanned at least one night pending further examination of their application for admission to, or their removal from, the United Kingdom and is given in the tables. The remaining information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the (a) passengers in total and (b) persons treated as illegal entrants who were granted temporary admission in 1989 subsequently absconded; and how many subsequently (i) contacted the immigration authorities themselves or (ii) were traced.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information relates to the number of persons who absconded, either from detention or by failing to respond to the terms of temporary admission/release, and is as follows:

Absconders in 1989

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notices have been issued to each airline under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 in each quarter since January 1989; how much money has accrued as a result; and how many such notices have been contested by each airline.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not the practice to disclose information on the record of individual airlines under the Act. The total number of notices issued to carriers—airlines and sea operators—in each quarter since January 1989 was as follows:

Quarter Ending	Number of Notices
31 March 1989	1,345
30 June 1989	1,616
30 September 1989	2,208
31 December 1989	2,694
31 March 1990	1,912
TOTAL	9,775

A total of £2·476 million was received during this period and representations were made by carriers in 2,698 cases.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications from over-age reapplicants from the Indian subcontinent, by country, seeking to join a sponsor settled in the United Kingdom have been (a) made, (b) deferred, (c) refused and (d) granted since 1988; and how many such reapplicants in each category had undergone successful DNA tests.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only available information is that a total of 142 applications to join parents in the United Kingdom made by reapplicants who have established their relationship by means of DNA evidence, but who do not qualify for admission under the immigration rules, have now been decided under the terms of the concession announced by my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary on 14 June 1989 at columns 461-62. Entry clearance has been authorised in 38 of these cases.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many wives and dependent children applying for entry clearance in the Indian subcontinent in each quarter since January 1989 were refused (a) on first application and (b) on second or subsequent application.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Quarterly information up to the end of 1989 on the total numbers of wives and children in the Indian subcontinent refused entry clearance to the United Kingdom is published in table 24 of Cm 1124, "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, 1989", a copy of which is in the Library. In the first quarter of 1990, 240 wives and 360 children were initially refused entry clearance. Separate information on first-time applicants and reapplicants is not available centrally.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for settlement by wives and children in (i) Dhaka, (ii) Islamabad and (iii) Karachi were (a) received, (b) granted, (c) refused, (d) deferred at first interview, (e) lapsed and (f) outstanding and awaiting first interview for each quarter since the beginning of 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for registration under section 7(6)(a) of the British Nationality Act 1981 made after 31 December 1987 have been (a) received, (b) granted and (c) refused; and what criteria he uses to decide on the special circumstances of a case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the number of applications for registration under section 7 of the British Nationality Act 1981 made after 31 December 1987 which were received and granted is not available. Between January 1988 and June 1990, 454 applications made under section 7 of the Act are recorded as having been refused as late applications. During the passage of the 1981 Act it was made clear that the discretion to accept a late registration application would be used sparingly in cases of hardship where an applicant could show good reasons why he or she could not apply in time.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) adult registration, (b) registration of minors and (c) naturalisation were (i) received and (ii) granted by the nationality division, for each month from January 1989 to the nearest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The numbers of applications for citizenship received in caseworking groups are set out in table 1. The figures in the table do not include applications received but not yet recorded on the nationality division's computer, of which there were approximately 3,000 at the end of June 1990. The numbers of applications granted are set out in table 2.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) husbands, (b) wives and (c) dependent children have been refused (i) extension of stay and (ii) settlement in the United Kingdom on the grounds that he is not satisfied that they can be maintained and accommodated without recourse to public funds, in each quarter since January 1989 to the nearest available date.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) British nationals and (b) holders of certificates of identity from Hong Kong have been admitted to the United Kingdom in each quarter since January 1989 as (i) persons on independent means, (ii) self-employed persons, (iii) business people, (iv) visitors, (v) students, (vi) husbands and fiancés, (vii) wives and fiancées and (viii) other dependent relatives.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information for BDTCs and BN(O)s from Hong Kong is given in the table. Figures on admissions of holders of certificates of identity from Hong Kong are not available.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (i) the budgeted cost and (ii) the actual cost of processing nationality applications in the nationality division during 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The budgeted cost of processing applications for citizenship during 1989-90 was £7,922,000. Final outturn costs are not yet available but are expected to be in the region of £7·1 million.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will produce a table to show, for 1989 and the first quarter of 1990, the number of settlement applications at the post in Dhaka which were (a) received, (b) granted, (c) refused, (d) deferred at first interview, (e) lapsed, (f) outstanding and (g) outstanding and awaiting first interview.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table.

Correspondence

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne may expect a response to his communication of 26 April on behalf of Maria Giles of 74 Rosemellin, Camborne, Cornwall, on an issue involving experiments on animals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I replied to my hon. Friend on 21 May.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde sent to his Department on 25 June regarding the establishment of the Football Licensing Authority.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and noble Friend replied to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde on 12 July.

AIDS Videos

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the showing of his Department's two videos on AIDS to (a) prison officers and (b) prisoners; and if he will make a statement on progress towards his objectives.

Mr. Mellor: The staff training film "AIDS Inside" is shown to all new entrant prison officers as part of their initial training. Since the film was introduced in August 1987 governors have been set annual training targets designed to enable all other operational staff to receive a showing of the film. We have recently asked governors to report the progress made towards meeting that objective.

"AIDS Inside and Out", a film for prisoners, was introduced in March 1989. Governors were set a target of showing the film at least once to every willing prisoner expected to be in custody for four weeks or longer. They were asked to include a progress report in their annual report for 1990-91. The target will be reviewed in the light of their reports.

Football Licensing Authority

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 June, Official Report, column 360, what stage has now been reached in making appointments to the Football Licensing Authority; and when he expects the authority to be in place.

Mr. John Patten: Following the appointment of Mr. Norman Jacobs as chairman of the Football Licensing Authority, announced on 12 July, the other members and staff of the authority will now be appointed as soon as possible. It will nevertheless be some months before the authority is fully operational.

Trafalgar Square (Incident)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of providing the answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, Official Report, 13 June, columns 191-94.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The reply given to the hon. Member on 13 June contained information which was readily available from police records. No estimate of the cost of the reply was therefore made.

Football Supporters Association

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet officials of the Football Supporters Association.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans at present.

Forensic Science

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to recruit extra staff to replace the 24 police liaison officers in the forensic science laboratories, who are being shed as a result of the current forensic science service reorganisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Police liaison officer attachments to the FSS will be phased out by April 1991 as part of the Government's programme of civilianisation of non-operational posts. Replacement is planned over this year and next.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated effect on (a) the existing backlog of case work and (b) in-house work in the forensic science service, of scientists being taken off existing work to participate in project work and implementation teams, for the current reorganisation of the service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am pleased to say that the staff of the forensic science service have been fully involved in all the work and changes necessary to introduce direct charging and become an executive agency in April 1991. This has been to the benefit of in-house work. The number of cases waiting to be examined has grown recently for a number of reasons including this one. We expect this position to be remedied with the changes now in place.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used by the Police Complaints Authority to determine which complaint cases will be supervised.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These are set out in section 89(2) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

WALES

NHS Trusts

4. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met with the chairman of the Mid Glamorgan health authority to discuss the formation of hospital trusts.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has not discussed the formation of hospital trusts with the chairman of Mid Glamorgan health authority.

Inward Investment

14. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many inward investment projects have been received in Wales over the last five years for which figures are available; and what has been the total worth of such investment.

Mr. David Hunt: During the five years to 31 March, Wales secured a total of 488 inward investment projects —a rate of almost two every week. The companies involved estimated the capital investment at some £2·5 billion. Since March a further 32 projects have been secured with an estimated capital investment of £263 million.

Housing

15. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to meet district council leaders in Wales to discuss housing provision.

Mr. Grist: The Department regularly meets all housing authorities in Wales to discuss a wide range of issues.

19. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of owner-occupation in Wales.

Mr. Grist: It is estimated that at December 1989, a total of 71 per cent. of the housing stock in Wales was owner-occupied.

Welsh Language

16. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of consultations on the introduction of a new Welsh Language Act.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend awaits the formal outcome of the consultation exercise, which the Welsh Language Board has been conducting on its legislative proposals. The board is now considering the results of this. It will present its conclusion to my right hon. Friend in due course.

28. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the need for a new Welsh Language Act; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office has received a number of representations from individuals and organisations about Welsh language legislation. This issue is currently being considered by the Welsh Language Board. My right hon. Friend will consider very carefully any specific proposals it puts to him.

Eye Tests

17. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what contact he has had with members of the West Glamorgan family practitioner committee about the effect of charges on eye tests.

Mr. Grist: Our officials discussed this matter at the annual review of West Glamorgan family practitioner committee in December 1989. More recently, the Department has received some papers on this subject via the family practitioner committee.

Environmental Policy

20. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the priorities of his Department in environmental policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Our priorities are to prevent undue risks to human life and health, to protect the natural environment and to improve public amenity, particularly in those areas with the worst environments.

Mid-Glamorgan Training and Enterprise Council

21. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to meet the board of the Mid-Glamorgan training and enterprise council to discuss the new budget for 1990-91.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The budget of the Mid-Glamorgan TEC for the current year has just been agreed. I am pleased to say that contracts for both the Mid-Glamorgan and West Wales TECs will be signed tomorrow. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I will be meeting all the TEC chairmen in Wales very shortly.

Rail Services

22. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about train services in the Principality and the need for further investment.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I receive many representations about rail services and rail investment in Wales.

Brymbo Steelworks

23. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further plans he has to maintain steelworking jobs at the Brymbo steelworks.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Development Agency, with full support from me, is continuing to explore all possible options for the future of the works.

Roads

24. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of road developments in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Significant progress has been made since 1979, with 152 miles of motorway and trunk roads completed. Nine schemes, totalling 21 miles, are currently under construction, and a further five schemes, totalling 19 miles, are planned to start in the current financial year.

Welsh Assembly

25. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received in favour of setting up an assembly in Cardiff.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Beef

26. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the current state of the beef industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The December 1989 sample census figures showed that the Welsh beef breeding herd had increased by 6 per cent. compared with December 1988. Specialist beef producers have also benefited from last year's 42 per cent. increase in the rate of suckler cow premium which was worth some £8 million to producers in Wales in the 1989-90 scheme year; and hill livestock compensatory allowance payments on cattle in 1989 amounted to more than £8 million.

Following the devaluation of the green pound agreed at the 1990 price fixing, support prices have increased by 8·5 per cent. with the rate of beef special premium increasing from £29·19 to £31·80 a head from 14 May 1990.

Although the market is currently depressed, with numbers and prices down, the safety net measures for intervention together with the lifting of bans on our exports should help to sustain the market.

Less-favoured Areas

27. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the less-favoured area status farms in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Farmers in our less-favoured areas benefit directly from a number of special measures including the hill livestock compensatory allowances. I remain confident that less-favoured areas farmers will meet the challenges that face them in the future.

A470, Cardiff

29. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given to (a) eliminating unnecessary junctions on the A470 in Cardiff, North or (b) other measures to improve the flow of traffic on this trunk road.

Sir Wyn Roberts: These are matters for South Glamorgan county council to consider as the responsible highway authority for the A470 to the south of the Coryton interchange. Measures to improve traffic flows on the A470 trunk road north of Coryton are being considered as part of the south Wales traffic study scheduled to be completed later this year.

Water Quality

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the causes of the increase in those sewage works serving a population band of 1,000 to 5,000 and failing to meet the Welsh water authority quality standards in 1988-89; and what action his Department has taken to reverse this trend.

Mr. Grist: The prospectus for the water share offers attributed the difficulties experienced in recent years mainly to undercapacity, inadequate maintenance, outmoded equipment or breakdowns. A new regulatory body, the National Rivers Authority, has now been established and an investment programme, totalling £395 million in the next five years alone, to improve the quality of Dwr Cymru's sewerage services, including its sewage treatment works, has been approved.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Development Board for Rural Wales to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 10 to 14 December 1990.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all members of non-departmental public bodies in Wales who are members of (a) two such bodies and (b) more than two such bodies.

Health Authority Meetings

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy that public access to the meetings of health authorities in Wales and their committees and sub-committees should be required to be on the same basis as that required of local authorities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: No. District health authorities conduct their meetings in as open a manner as is reasonable. They will continue to be subject to the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to announce the results of his consultation on the future of community health councils in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 13 July 1990 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

NHS Funds

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether any additional funds are to be made available to the NHS in Wales over and above those set out in the public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Grist: Additional funds were announced in the supplementary estimates presented to the House in June in respect of pay awards recommended in the reports of the review bodies. Future needs will be considered as part of the public expenditure survey in the normal way.

School Closures

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools in Wales of fewer than 50 pupils closed in (a) 1975, (b) 1980, (c) 1985 and (d) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department does not maintain records of school closures by size of school.

Renewal Areas Scheme

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the actions taken by his Department to promote the renewal areas scheme in respect of older housing in Wales.

Mr. Grist: In addition to supplying very detailed guidance circulars, our officials have met representatives from all Welsh authorities to promote renewal area schemes.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money his Department is making available (a) in the present financial year and (b) in the 1991-92 financial year towards the renewal areas scheme for older housing in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Credit approvals of £1 million are being held by the Department to meet local authorities' proposals for renewal areas. This is in addition to £26 million provided for area-based renovation projects such as enveloping and group repair schemes. No decision has yet been made about resources for 1991-92.

Enveloping Schemes

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was provided by his Department in each of the last 10 years on enveloping schemes (a) in Cardiff and (b) in Wales; and how much is being made available in the current year and in the 1991-92 financial year.

Mr. Grist: Since 1984-85 capital allocations totalling £75·7 million have been made available to local authorities in Wales for enveloping projects. Cardiff has been allocated over £9 million. Subsidy payments by the Department for the last two available years have been:

	Cardiff £	All-Wales £
1987-88	467,124	2,733,822
1988-89	583,420	4,131,189

The amounts paid in earlier years are not readily available; the amount for 1989-90 is not yet available. For the current financial year credit approvals of £26 million are available for area-based renovation projects. No decisions have yet been made about resources for 1991-92.

Tourism

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals to enable the Wales tourist board to market overseas the attractions of tourism in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The overseas marketing of Wales as a tourist destination is one of the responsibilities of the British Tourist Authority. However, the Wales tourist board, with the agreement of the BTA, can undertake overseas promotion of Wales on behalf of the authority.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total revenue from overseas tourism in Wales in 1989 and in the previous three years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Wales tourist board estimates that revenue from overseas tourism in Wales in 1989 on the basis of the returns for the first three quarters of the year will be around £100 million. Figures for the three previous years are as follows:

	£ million
1986	102
1987	119
1988	98

Source International Passenger Survey

The implementation of the recommendations of last year's tourist review of the British Tourist Authority, undertaken by the Secretary of State for Employment, is intended to improve the marketing of Britain as a whole, and should thus be of direct benefit to Wales. The Secretary of State and I shall be monitoring the effectiveness of these changes as they relate to the promotion of Wales.

HEALTH

Environmental Health and Food Safety Division

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the environmental health and food safety division of his Department was established.

Mr. Dorrell: The division was set up on 1 January 1990 following a reorganisation involving a number of existing divisions.

Maternity Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by national health service region the hospitals in England which had consultant obstetric and/or general practitioner maternity beds in 1980, 1985 or the most recent year for which information is available and the numbers of beds of each type in each hospital and each region in each year.

Mr. Dorrell: This information cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Residential Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women are in residential care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The estimated total number of women in local authority and registered private and voluntary residential care homes at 31 March 1988 was 190,000.

Housing

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's strategy for ensuring housing is available for those people covered by community care legislation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The housing aspects of the care in the community proposals are the subject of discussions between the Department of Health and the Department of the Environment, in consultation with the local authority associations.

Housing (Women)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women patients who are in need of housing are discharged annually from psychiatric hospitals; and how many are allocated housing by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations in England and Wales.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not held centrally by the Department.

Abortions

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of abortions carried out on resident women from zero to 12 weeks, 12 to 24 weeks and over 24 weeks for each of the years 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989 by regional health authority in England.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is shown in the tables.

Social Work

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy with regard to generic social work within local authority social service departments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for local authorities to decide which approaches to social work best meet the needs of the people they serve. While a generic approach to social work was generally adopted following the Seebohm report of 1968, we recognise that social workers who develop specialist skills equally have an important role to play.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what analysis is made by his Department of the ability of individual local authorities to undertake their statutory social work functions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department's social services inspectorate keeps the Department informed about the provision of personal social services by individual local authorities.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider introducing legislation to specify a maximum permitted number of beds in residential or nursing homes.

Mr. Dorrell: No. We see no need to specify in legislation the maximum number of beds in such homes. It is for local social services authorities and health authorities to specify the maximum number of people for which individual homes may cater, in the light of such factors as the premises, staffing levels and the quality of care which can be provided for residents.

Trees Park Village, Darlington

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department received any representations regarding the eligibility of Trees Park Village in Darlington for registration under the Registered Homes Act.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received no such representations. Registration of homes under the Registered Homes Act 1984 is a matter for the local registration authority.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a detailed breakdown of the specific elements included in his Department's estimate of community care costs proposed for inclusion in the revenue support grant for 1991-92.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's provisional assessment of what local authorities need to spend on personal social services in 1991-92 will be announced in the autumn. There is no intention to identify specific elements within that overall assessment, as it is for local authorities to determine their own spending priorities.

Bedford (Population)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the population of Bedford (a) north of the Great Ouse and (b) south of that river, including Kempston.

Mr. Dorrell: Annual population estimates are prepared by OPCS for the areas administered by local authorities and by health authorities, but not for smaller areas. The estimated resident population of the North Bedfordshire county district (including Bedford) at mid-1988 was 136,800 (compared with 133,400 at mid-1981). The numbers of usual residents of the continuously built-up urban areas of Bedford/Kempston and Bedford enumerated in the 1981 census were 91,086 and 75,632 respectively.

Project 2000

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is Her Majesty's Government's current policy in respect of the implementation of Project 2000; in how many schools of nursing it will be introduced during 1990-91; how many schools will remain thereafter without the Project 2000 system; and what are the constraints on bringing all nurse training within Project 2000 within a specified time scale.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 5 June at column 595.

General Practices

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to health authorities about the extent to which established cross-boundary flows of patients should be reflected in the contractual arrangements which will apply to non-budget holding general practices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: "Contracts for Health Services: Operating Principles" and "Contracts for Health Services: Operating Contracts", copies of which are available in the Library, give guidance to health authorities on all major contract issues. District health authorities will be expected to let contracts which secure the referral patterns their local general practitioners prefer whether they be inside or outside their district's boundary, unless there are compelling reasons for not doing so.

Wheelchairs (Tourists)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will set up a scheme to provide short-term wheelchair loans to aid elderly tourists while visiting tourist areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The provision of wheelchairs on short-term loan is a matter for local authority social service departments. I am advised that there are a number of such schemes in existence. The hon. Member may like to consult the local authority concerned.

Family Health Services Authorities

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce the names of the chairmen of the new family health services authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have placed in the Library a list of the appointments made with effect from 17 September 1990, the date on which the new authorities come into being.

Good quality primary health care is fundamental to the success of our health service. We attach great importance to the enhanced work and wider responsibilities of the newly constituted family health services authorities. The chairman's role is a challenging one in implementing the national health service changes for the general benefit of patients.

Health Service Commissioner (Report)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the annual report of the health service commissioner for 1989-90.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The health service commissioner has, as in previous years, made a report on the performance of his functions in England, Scotland and Wales.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I presented the report to the House on Wednesday 11 July. It was published on Thursday 12 July (House of Commons paper No. HC 538) and copies are available from the Vote Office.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the operating cost of the blood transfusion service for each year since 1979 by regional transfusion service;

(2) if operating costs of the blood transfusion service currently include an element for (a) capital costs and (b) research.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The revenue costs of operating the national blood transfusion service since 1979 are shown in the table.

In addition to identifiable revenue expenditure the national blood transfusion service will incur expenditure on both capital items and research, but this is not separately identified in the accounts of health authorities.

Figures are derived from the annual accounts of regional and district health authorities.

The figures in individual columns may not always add up to the totals shown because of rounding.

GPs (Prescribing)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines his Department has issued in the past 10 years in respect of (a) over-prescribing and (b) under-prescribing by general practitioners; and if he will place in the Library a copy of all such guidelines currently in force.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 5 July 1990]: The Department spends around £2·2 million each year in providing free of charge to all national health service doctors a variety of professional publications which contain information about drugs and advice on prescribing. These include "British National Formulary", "Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin" and "Prescribers' Journal". In addition, from April 1990, family practitioner committees have taken over from the Department's regional medical service responsibility for giving advice to practices on prescribing.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rights of the Child

30. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to extend the effectiveness of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom signed the convention on the rights of the child on 19 April and intends to ratify it as soon as possible.

Soviet Union

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning Her Majesty's Government's policy towards economic assistance to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: We believe that it is in the interest of all concerned that the process of economic reform in the Soviet Union should continue and be successful. We are strongly committed to helping this process by providing the Russians with the skills and expertise needed to take advantage of their country's enormous potential.

We welcome the decisions of the Dublin European Council and the G7 in Houston to commission an analysis of the Soviet Union's economic problems and of ways in which the west might help. This should provide the essential basis on which to take decisions about possible future assistance.

UNESCO

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what ways and means are being employed by Her Majesty's Government to keep the situtation at the United Nations Educational, Science and Cultural Organisation under review over the next 12 months; what are the terms of reference for the United Kingdom's observer at the United Nations Educational, Science and Cultural Organisation; and if he will make it his policy to report to the House, on a regular basis, the results of this monitoring and the progress made by the United Nations Educational, Science and Cultural Organisation, leading to the further consideration in 1991 of a return by the United Kingdom to membership of the United Nations Educational, Science and Cultural Organisation.

Mr. Sainsbury: The British observer delegation to UNESCO at the British embassy in Paris closely monitors developments at UNESCO. The observer delegation also serves as a channel of communication for those activities of UNESCO in which we still participate. We keep our policy to UNESCO constantly under review in the light of any progress towards reform but do not believe that a specific timetable would be appropriate.

Professional Qualifications

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made and what issues remain unresolved concerning the acceptance between the United Kingdom and other nations of the European Community of each other's professional qualifications in each other's countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The higher education diplomas directive was adopted in December 1988 for implementation by 4 January 1991. In August 1989 the Commission proposed a further directive for a second general system for the recognition of professional education and training which is intended to complement the first. This proposal remains under discussion.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the types of applications which entry clearance officers abroad are instructed must be referred to the Home Department; and if he will publish these instructions.

Mr. Sainsbury: Entry clearance officers—ECOs—are required to refer the following categories of application to the Home Office:

(i) applications for asylum;
(ii) applicants who do not qualify for entry under the Immigration Rules, but whose applications reveal special circumstances;
(iii) applicants wishing to establish themselves in business in the United Kingdom;
(iv) applications from children coming for adoption;
(v) applications from certain nationals and individuals.

It is not our policy to publish instructions to ECOs.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the maximum, minimum and average periods between the receipt of a first application for settlement at the post in Dhaka and the decision on whether or not to grant entry clearance.

Mr. Sainsbury: In Dhaka, as elsewhere, decisions on whether to grant entry clearance may in some cases be made immediately after interview; in others the applicant may be asked to submit documentary evidence, following which the ECO may have to make further inquiries, either locally or in the United Kingdom. As each case is sui generis, it is not possible to give the average time taken to reach a decision.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are in force for dealing with entry clearance applications from Iranian citizens (a) in Iran and (b) outside Iran; and what delays can be expected by people applying for (i) settlement, (ii) visits and (iii) studies.

Mr. Sainsbury: Iranian nationals must apply for entry clearance at one of our visa-issuing posts outside Iran. There are no separate queuing arrangements for settlement, visits or studies in these posts.

Delays experienced by applicants in any of these categories vary from a few days for some posts in Europe to several months for certain posts in the Gulf and near east which attract large numbers of entry clearance applications from Iranian citizens.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for naturalisation as British dependent territories citizens on the basis of a connection with Hong Kong have been (a) received, (b) granted and (c) refused, for each year since 1988 and to the nearest available date.

Mr. Maude: According to Hong Kong Government statistics, the number of applications for naturalisation as British dependent territories citizens, Hong Kong were:

	1988	1989	[1] 1990
No. of applications received	1,016	3,098	3,491
No. of applications approved	1,074	1,098	579
No. of applications rejected	60	73	41

[1] Up to end of June

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British dependent territories citizens from Hong Kong have (a) applied for and (b) been granted the status of British national (overseas).

Mr. Maude: From 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1990, a total of 137,142 applications from Hong Kong British dependent territory citizens for the British national (overseas) passport were received, of which 131,628 were granted. The remaining applications are still being processed.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the present waiting times to first interview for all categories of applicant in each country and at each post in the Indian subcontinent.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 26 June, Official Report, column 137.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long a person applying for entry clearance on 31 March, or the latest convenient date, at each post in the Indian subcontinent could expect to wait, in each queue, for (a) first interview, (b) referral of the case to the Home Department and the requested information being received by the post, (c) decision after first interview and (d) the explanatory statement prepared by the post in the case of appeal against any refusal to be dispatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: (a) I would refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 26 June; (b) and (c) this information is not available. Processing times vary according to the circumstances of individual cases. (d) Average dispatch times of explanatory statements from receipt of an appeal are, at 6 July:

	Settlement	Non-settlement
New Delhi	16 weeks	12 weeks
Madras	12 weeks	4 weeks
Bombay	12 weeks	8 weeks
Islamabad	6 weeks	4 weeks
Calcutta	same day	same day

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long a person applying for entry clearance for settlement at the British post in (a) Manila, (b) Accra, (c) Lagos, (d) Kingston, (e) Nicosia, (f) Cairo, (g) Bangkok, (h) Ankara and (i) Istanbul on 31 March, or the latest convenient date, could expect to wait for (i) interview, (ii) referral of the case to the Home Department and the requested information being received by the post, (iii) decisions and (iv) an explanatory statement prepared by the post in the event of an appeal against a refusal to be dispatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information required at (ii) and (iii) is not available as processing times vary according to the circumstances of individual cases.

As to (i) and (iv) the position at 6 July was as follows:

	(i) interview	(iv) referral
Manila	12 weeks	3 to 5 months

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many explanatory statements related to entry clearance appeals were awaiting typing at each post in the Indian subcontinent and in Manila, Lagos and Accra, on the latest available date; how many staff are employed, both full-time and part-time, to type statements; and when he expects any backlogs to be cleared.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is given in the following table—as at 6 July.

(a) number of explanatory statements awaiting typing.
(b) staff whose duties include typing explanatory statements (staff employed on other typing work shown in brackets).

It is expected that the backlog at New Delhi will be cleared by the employment of casual typists.

Cyprus

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current policy of Her Majesty's Government towards Cyprus's aspiration to join the European Community.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) and the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Grant) on 12 July, Official Report, column 307.

Antarctica

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from the National Federation of Women's Institutes in respect of Antarctica; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have received representations from four local groups of the women's institute drawing attention to a resolution passed at the annual general meeting of their national federation on 7 June.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has on recent civil disturbances in Somalia and reports of deaths caused by actions by Government forces; and what representations have been made to the Government of Somalia.

Mr. Waldegrave: We understand that at least 50 people were killed and many more wounded when security forces guarding President Barré opened fire on an unruly crowd at Mogadishu football stadium on 6 July. Our charge d'affaires has been instructed to raise our strong concern with the Somali Government.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook), Official Report, 2 July, column 402, any matters regarding nuclear non-proliferation controls were discussed at the Turnberry meeting of the NATO Ministers.

Mr. Waldegrave: NATO Foreign Ministers did not discuss the issue of nuclear non-proliferation controls at the North Atlantic Council meeting at Turnberry.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of his most recent meeting with non-governmental organisations where the nuclear non-proliferation treaty was discussed; and if he will give details of any further plans he has for meetings with non-governmental organisations on nuclear non-proliferation before the start of the nuclear non-proliferation forum review conference on 20 August.

Mr. Waldegrave: I last met non-governmental organisations on 3 April, when a wide range of topics, including the non-proliferation treaty, was discussed. The next such biannual meeting will be held in the autumn after the NPT fourth review conference.

Brian Tristram

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for how long Brian Tristram has been in the Peruvian gaol San Pedro de Lurigancho without trial; whether it is possible to extradite him for trial in the United Kingdom; what is his current state of health; when British embassy staff last saw him in the gaol; and what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to ensure that proceedings in Peru against Brian Tristram are either expedited or discontinued.

Mr. Sainsbury: Mr. Tristram was arrested at Jorge Chavel airport, Lima on 6 December 1988, allegedly with a suitcase containing 772 grams of cocaine. On 27 December 1988 he was formally charged with illicit trafficking in drugs and remanded in custody to Lurigancho prison. His case has been submitted to the fifth Callao provincial court for trial. I am not aware that Mr. Tristram has committed any offence in the United Kingdom for which his extradition might be sought.

He was last seen by British consular officials on 22 June 1990. He was comparatively cheerful during that visit. He has no specific complaints about his health, other than that his epilepsy pills had earlier been stolen. They have since been replaced. The British embassy in Lima has made representations to the Peruvian authorities in an effort to have the case brought to trial.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the breakout recently from the maximum security prison, the Canto Grande, in Peru has had any effect upon the conditions in which Brian Tristram is held at San Pedro de Lurigancho gaol.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have consulted the British embassy at Lima, which has seen no evidence that conditions in Lurigancho prison have been affected by events at Canto Grande.

EC Relations

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has received from the Government of the Republic of France in the last two days concerning relations between the republic and the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received from the Federal Republic of Germany in the last two days concerning relations between the republic and the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: There has been comment, much of it public, from a number of sources on Britain's relations with her EC partners. But we have received no representations on the subject.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Government of the Republic of Ireland in the last two days concerning relations between the republic and the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: There has been comment, much of it public, from a number of sources on Britain's relations with her EC partners. But I have received no representations on the subject.

Angola

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken to ensure that the Angolan peace corridors are put in place as soon as possible in order that international aid may reach the areas devastated by drought.

Mr. Waldegrave: The "corridors of peace" are a UNITA proposal which has not yet been accepted by the Angolan Government. But the International Committee of the Red Cross is discussing with the Angolan Government arrangements for supplying emergency famine relief to all drought-affected areas of Angola.

NATO (Japanese Delegation)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, Official Report, 21 June, column 650, the meeting in Belgium between NATO officials and the Japanese political delegation discussed nuclear non-proliferation matters.

Mr. Waldegrave: Nuclear non-proliferation matters were not discussed at the meeting in Belgium between NATO officials and the Japanese political delegation on 17 to 19 June.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what agreements exist between Britain and the United States of America for the exchange of information about chemical and biological weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no formal bilateral agreements between the two Governments for the exchange of such information.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Running Cost Control

Mr. Rost: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those Government agencies and bodies which are exempted from gross running cost control; what conditions are imposed on such agencies as a result of the exemption; and what are the procedures whereby such exemption is granted.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The gross running costs control system was introduced in April 1986. As explained in paragraph 3.10 of Cm 1021, exemption from such control may be agreed for bodies whose costs are fully met by their receipts, provided suitably robust monitoring and management control systems apply. Such cases are considered in the annual public expenditure survey, and those approved have been identified in the relevant public expenditure White Paper and summary and guide to supply estimates. There are currently 19 bodies for which exemption has been approved. They are:

1. Building Research Establishment (DOE)
2. Central Office of Information
3. Civil Service College (OMCS)
4. Companies House (DTI)
5. Department of the Registers of Scotland
6. Driving Standards Agency (DTp)
7. Her Majesty's Land Registry
8. Historic Royal Palaces Agency (DOE)
9. Laboratory of the Government Chemist (DTI)
10. Medicines Control Agency (DH)
11. Natural Resources Institute (ODA)
12. Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (HSE)
13. PSA Services
14. QEII Conference Centre (DOE)
15. Radiocommunications Executive Agency (DTI)
16. Social Survey Division (OPCS)
17. Vehicle Certification Agency (DTp)
18. Vehicle Inspectorate (DTp)
19. Warren Springs Laboratory (DTI).

Manufacturing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross domestic product, was accounted for by the manufacturing sector (a) currently, (b) at the highest level since 1979 and (c) at the highest level since 1960.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1988, the latest year for which data are available, the manufacturing sector accounted for 24 per cent. of gross domestic product, much the same level as in the preceding five years. The corresponding percentage shares in 1960 and 1979—36 and 28 per cent. respectively—were, in both cases, higher than in all subsequent years.

Exports

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of total United Kingdom exports for the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is available in table A3 of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" which is available in the Library of the House, or on the Central Statistical Office database, which may be accessed through the Library.

Interest Rates

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his reply of 10 July, Official Report, column 112, what are the other main domestic and international influences on United Kingdom long-term interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: Long-term interest rates are integrally bound up with monetary conditions generally. The factors bearing on monetary conditions are discussed in chapter 2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Government Accountancy Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the heads of the Government accountancy service for the last 10 years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Mr.—later Sir—Kenneth Sharp from 1975 to October 1983, Sir Anthony Wilson from October 1984 to December 1988, Mr. A. J. Hardcastle from January 1989 to date.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 6 July, Official Report, column 729, when he hopes to make a statement about whether and how changes will be made to the present arrangements for payment of value added tax on duty-free fuel by British fishing vessels.

Mr. Ryder: While the Government are considering whether and how changes to the present arrangements should be made, temporary measures have been introduced which broadly continue the VAT zero-rating of duty-free fuel supplied to British fishing vessels. A full review of the treatment of fuels supplied as stores to shipping and aircraft is to be undertaken. The trade will be consulted. My right hon. and noble Friend the Paymaster General hopes to make a statement on the subject by the end of the year.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church of England (Assembly) Powers Act

34. Mr. Skinner: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what recent representations he has received about the operation of the procedures of the Church of England (Assembly) Powers Act 1919, as amended by the Synodical Government Measure 1969.

Mr. Alison: None.

St. Marks, North Audley Street

35. Mr. Cormack: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what plans the Church Commissioners have for the future of St. Marks, North Audley street.

Mr. Alison: A proposal to use this redundant church for open-plan offices is at present under consideration.

TRANSPORT

Manchester Ship Canal

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the Manchester Ship Canal Harbour Revision Order 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: I made this order on 26 February 1990. Because opponents of the order gave notice that they maintained their opposition, the order became subject to special parliamentary procedure and it was laid before Parliament on 18 April. Petitions against it have been referred to the Chairman of Committees and the Chairman of Ways and Means.

Correspondence

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Minister for Aviation and Shipping will be writing to Mr. A. P. Lambert of Armor House, Carlidnack road, Mawnan Smith, Falmouth, Cornwall, in reply to that gentleman's letter to him of 3 April regarding retired staff travel facilities with Sealink UK Ltd.

Mr. Freeman: My hon. Friend will be aware of the complicated background to this correspondence. We will be sending Mr. Lambert a reply to his latest letter very shortly.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new money, excluding money already committed, would have been required for the Eurorail proposal to have proceeded for the fast rail link from the channel tunnel to London.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail plans investment of over £1 billion to enable passenger services to commence in 1993. Under Eurorail's proposals this investment expenditure would not have been reimbursed at the time the assets transferred to the joint venture: instead a combination of leasing and a low interest deferred loan of £1 billion was proposed. The joint venture further required a capital grant of £500 million toward the use of the new line by commuter services and British Rail investment of up to £400 million, mainly in commuter terminals.

Disabled Travellers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to encourage major transport groups to pay more attention to the specific needs of disabled travellers.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Transport is in regular contact, both directly and through the disabled persons transport advisory committee, with transport authorities and operators throughout the country to promote a better understanding of the transport needs of people with disabilities and to provide practical advice and information on how best to meet them.

Railway Development

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any proposals for further development of the railway system north of Bedford.

Mr. Freeman: I have received a copy of the summary report of a study commissioned by the midland main line consortium of local authorities, advocating electrification north of Bedford, which I have read with interest. It is for British Rail to consider any worthwhile proposals that meet its normal investment criteria.

SCOTLAND

Junior Hospital Doctors

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many junior hospital doctors are currently working more than 72 hours per week;

(2) what is the average number of hours worked by junior hospital doctors;

(3) when he expects to reduce to 72 hours per week the average number of hours worked by junior hospital doctors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the number of hours actually worked by junior hospital doctors is not collected centrally. As at 30 September 1989 there were 2,567 junior hospital doctors in Scotland contracted for more than 72 hours per week. The average number of contracted hours for all junior doctors was 80·2. The objective is to reduce junior doctors' hours to 72 per week as soon as practicable.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to reduce the hours worked by junior hospital doctors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1989 we introduced measures aimed at eliminating junior doctors' rotas more onerous than one night and one weekend in three in Scotland. Health boards have forecast that this initiative will result in the number of juniors on such rotas being reduced to around 32 per cent. by September this year. Health boards have recently been requested to improve on their September 1990 targets.

Charities

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints of criminality have been made against an officer or committee member of a registered charity in Scotland since 1979; what was the nature of the complaints; what action was taken; and what convictions, if any, were obtained.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not centrally held and cannot be made available since hitherto such complaints have been dealt with no differently from other complaints of criminality and cannot be differentiated from them.

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints have been made since 1979 of non-registered charities in Scotland holding themselves out to be charities; and what action was taken.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At present charities operating in Scotland are not required to become recognised as charities for the purposes of section 505 of Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988. Where persons falsely and dishonestly hold themselves out to be acting as or on behalf of charities the ordinary criminal law applies and I would refer to my previous answer.

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints of misconduct or mismanagement have been made against an officer or committee member of a registered charity in Scotland since 1979; what was the nature of the complaints; and what were the names of the charities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is at present no machinery for the receiving and investigation of complaints where the complaint or evidence available fall short of an inference of criminality. Such misconduct or mismanagement has from time to time been brought to the attention of the Secretary of State and other agencies but these have not been recorded. In the absence of any investigative machinery actively seeking out misconduct or mismanagement, it is impossible to say how many complaints have been made since 1979.

Maternity Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the hospitals in Scotland which had consultant obstetric and/or general practitioner maternity beds in 1980, 1985 or the most recent year for which information is available and the numbers of beds of each type in each hospital in each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of average available staffed beds for specialist obstetrics and GP obstetrics by hospital in Scotland for the years ending 31 March 1980 and 31 March 1990—the latest available figures—are as follows:

Heart Transplants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland where and when the Scottish heart transplant centre is to be developed; and for how many patients each year it is to have funding.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish heart transplant centre will be established during 1991-92 with a capacity, when fully operational, to undertake 50 transplants per year. The decision on the location of the centre may be expected in the autumn.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which hospitals Scottish residents received heart transplants in each year since 1985; how many Scottish residents were treated in each hospital; and what transfers of revenue allocation were subsequently made to other national health service regions within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about the number of Scottish residents receiving heart transplants and hospitals where such treatment was provided is not held centrally. No transfers of revenue allocation were made from Scotland in respect of such treatment which is funded as as supra-regional service.

Orthopaedic Beds

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will intervene to prevent the 65 per cent. reduction in orthopaedic beds in the south-east district of Glasgow proposed by the Greater Glasgow health board's strategy review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 July 1990]: I understand that the board proposes to reduce the number of orthopaedic beds in the south-east of Glasgow from 188 to 68, to reflect reductions in both the population of the area and the number of patients transferred from other boards, along with improved efficiency in the service. The board reached this decision following extensive consultation over a four-month period.

Police Manpower

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Scottish police authorities, indicating if their manpower is up to the levels agreed with the chief constables and the police authorities, and indicating the shortfall where applicable.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1990]: As at 31 March 1990 the information requested was as follows:

Force	Police Authorised Establishment	Police Actual Strength	Police Shortfall[1]	Civilian Staff (Traffic Wardens, Clerical and Technical Staff) Authorised Establishment	Civilian Staff (Traffic Wardens, Clerical and Technical Staff) Actual Strength	Civilian Staff (Traffic Wardens, Clerical and Technical Staff) Shortfall

Bypass Operation

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statistics he holds in respect of the number of patients who had been identified as requiring a coronary artery bypass operation but who died prior to receiving surgery.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 July 1990]: In the year ending 31 March 1990 a total of 48 such deaths were recorded. Information on the actual cause of death is not recorded centrally.

NHS Hospitals

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to provide additional funding for the refurbishment of long-term wards in Scotland's national health service hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 July 1990]: Each health board determines its capital expenditure priorities within the block capital allocation made annually by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of how cuts in national health service provision will affect the quality of patient care in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 July 1990]: There have been no cuts in the provision for hospital and community health services.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Question Time

47. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what procedural proposals he expects to bring forward to extend the accountability of Ministers at Question Time.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Ministers are already fully accountable to Parliament. Implementation of the Procedure Committee's recommendations about oral questions will help to make Question Time more effective. As I told the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 25 June, I hope the recommendations can take effect from the start of the next Session.

Political Parties (Offices)

48. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will take steps to ensure that every recognised political party represented in the House shall have office space available to them within easy access of the Chamber.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I understand that this matter is being considered by the relevant sub-committees of the Services Committee.

Members' Allowances

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Lord President of the Council for the last three years for which figures are available, what was the total cost of Members' (a) salaries, (b) office costs allowance, (c) travel to and from and within their constituencies, (d) second home allowances and (e) any other benefits-allowances claimed by hon. Members.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Expenditure under the various headings specified in the years ending 31 March 1988, 1989 and 1990 was as follows:

	1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £
Salaries etc. of Members of Parliament	14,478,702·22	15,785,477·81	17,042,032·64
Office costs expenses	13,786,197·56	14,568,579·36	15,871,657·47
Travel by Members between home, Westminster and constituency and within constituencies	4,322,804·16	5,023,845·31	5,905,744·74
Additional costs incurred in living away from home	4,763,539·21	5,384,650·53	5,493,942·31

The total expenditure from the House of Commons: Members' salaries etc. vote for each of those years was £42,444,582·70 for 1987-88, £46,905,668·40 for 1988-89 and £48,205,324·76 for 1989-90. The difference between the total of the specified amounts and the overall expenditure from the vote is accounted for by other expenses claimed by Members together with Exchequer contributions to the parliamentary contributory pension fund and Members' fund and payments for financial assistance to Opposition parties.

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many reports have been produced by departmental Select Committees since 1979; and now many have been the subject of debate on a substantive motion on the Floor of the House.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: From 1979 to 29 June 1990, 591 reports and 231 special reports have been published by departmentally related Select Committees. Of these, seven have been debated in the House on substantive motions.

Child Care

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) of 24 May, Official Report, column 297, on child care facilities, when he expects the feasibility study to be completed.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is expected that the study will be completed in time to be considered by the Services Committee at a meeting early in the autumn.

Recycled Notepaper

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Lord President of the Council what recent inquiries he has made into the comparative cost of switching to the use of 100 per cent. recycled paper for the supplies of headed notepaper now made available to Members compared with continuing with that presently used.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 24 May 1990, column 297. The Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee considered the comparative costs when approval was given for recycled writing paper and envelopes to be introduced on an experimental basis along with the existing range of stationery.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Surplus Food

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the arrangements for the distribution of surplus beef and butter in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The arrangements for the 1990 scheme follow closely those in successful operation over the last two years, while enhanced publicity this year has enabled the coverage of the country by the scheme to be improved.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the total numbers of cattle recorded as having BSE for each of the last 12 weeks.

Mr. Maclean: The number of BSE cases confirmed each week is as follows:

Week ending	Number
27 April 1990	326
4 May 1990	316
11 May 1990	271
18 May 1990	238
25 May 1990	297
1 June 1990	141
8 June 1990	238
15 June 1990	365
22 June 1990	301
29 June 1990	248
6 July 1990	229
13 July 1990	292

Lead in Cattle Order

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the reasons for imposing the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Lead in Cattle) (England) Order 1990, (S.I. No. 1391) on a farm in Hertfordshire, indicating the source of the contaminant, the number of cattle involved, the levels of lead in test tissues and milk and the date when his Department first discovered there was a problem.

Mr. Gummer: Following the death of five calves on one farm at the end of May, investigations were carried out by the royal veterinary college and the Ministry's veterinary investigation service which suggested lead poisoning. These animals were among a group of 88 animals grazing a particular field. Blood test results for these cattle, are in the range of 0·06 to 5·63 micromol/l. No milk is produced on this farm and tests carried out by the milk marketing board on general supplies from this area show no traces of lead. No animals have been taken for slaughter from this group during the period of these investigations. None the less, while further investigations are being undertaken to establish the cause of the problem, I have made a precautionary order under part I of the Food and Environment Protection Act to ensure that no meat from these animals is allowed to enter the food chain until it is shown to be safe for it to do so.

Tyrrell Committee

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now place his further advice from the Tyrrell committee in the Library.

Mr. Gummer: I did so on 12 July.

Agriculture (Assistance)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing in respect of the most recent year for which figures are available the assistance given to the agriculture industry in (a) European Economic Community aids, (b) national Government aids, (c) price enhancement caused by import levies and intervention, (d) export rebates and (e) other aids; and if he will also provide an indication of total aids of a comparable nature by the United States of America.

Mr. Curry: Estimates prepared by OECD, recomputed by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on a per capita basis, of the transfers from taxpayers and consumers associated with agricultural policies in the European Community and the United States of America in 1989 are shown in the table. The estimates are based on many assumptions. The authors note that the estimates are static ones, taking no account of the effect that a reduction in assistance would have on world prices and thus on the magnitude of the transfers.

ECU per head of population
European Community	125	150	2	273
United States	170	80	2	248

Raspberry Pulp

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the proposals within the European Community to prevent the dumping of raspberry pulp from eastern European countries.

Mr. Curry: Discussions are taking place between the European Commission and the Polish and Yugoslav authorities. The Commission has undertaken to introduce differential prices for different qualities of semi-processed soft fruit and to improve monitoring to ensure that agreed prices are respected. United Kingdom Ministers have been pressing hard for this issue to be resolved quickly and my right hon. Friend will strongly urge the Commission to make a satisfactory statement at the forthcoming Council of Agriculture Ministers.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost if there were no increase in national insurance contributions, if the age of retirement for men were reduced to 60 years; and by how much national insurance contributions would have to rise if there were no Exchequer payments to meet the increase in cost.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest estimates, based on 1985-86 benefit rates, of the gross and net costs to public funds of reducing state pension age for men to age 60 are £4,200 million and £3,000 million respectively. Because of the number of changes affecting benefits, contributions and the labour force in the intervening period, I regret that it is not possible without disproportionate cost to relate such figures to 1990-91 contribution rates. However, the gross 1985-86 cost was equivalent to 18 per cent. of the national insurance fund's outgoings in that year.

Mr. J. W. Davies

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list and date the representations received from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North regarding Mr. J. W. Davies, of 30 Aspley Park drive, Aspley, Nottingham, and his claim for a war pension; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Letters were received from the hon. Member regarding Mr. Davies' claim for war pension on 26 February 1990 and 12 July 1990. The hon. Member also gave notice on 13 March 1990 of a parliamentary question (PQ 1361) on the subject of Mr. Davies' claim and four other questions (PQs 1357-60) requesting background information on war pension claims. A further parliamentary question on Mr. Davies' claim (PQ 2434) was listed on 10 July 1990.

Housing Benefit

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women are in receipt of housing benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the extra cost of the housing benefit scheme in England only if the rate of withdrawal of housing benefit or rent taper was, respectively, reduced from 65 per cent. to (a) 55 per cent., (b) 50 per cent., (c) 45 per cent., (d) 40 per cent., (e) 33 per cent., and (f) 26 per cent. showing the division between rent rebates and rent allowances.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 June 1990]: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates for separate parts of the country. The table gives the estimated extra costs, in the current year and on a Great Britain basis, of altering the rate of withdrawal of housing benefit within the present structure of the scheme.

£ million

Taper (per cent.)	Rent Rebate	Rent Allowance	Total Cost
55	90	70	160
50	140	110	250
45	210	160	370
40	290	230	520
33	430	340	770
26	630	500	1,130

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the extra cost of the housing benefit scheme in England only, if the earnings disregards were increased to £10 for a single household, £25 for a couple and £35 for a single parent.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 June 1990]: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates for separate parts of the country. However, for Great Britain, assuming that single people whose applicable amount includes the disability premium retain the £15 earnings disregard to which they are currently entitled, the estimated cost in the current year of increasing the earnings disregards in housing benefit would be about £110 million.

(Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1985-6-7 Family Expenditure Surveys).

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the extra cost of the housing benefit scheme in England only, if the applicable amount for a single person aged 18 to 24 years was the same as that for a single person aged over 25 years and the applicable amount for a single-parent family was the same as that for a two-parent family.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 June 1990]: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates for separate parts of the country. However, for Great Britain, assuming

(a) the increase in the personal allowance would apply also to 16 and 17-year-olds on housing benefit (the applicable amount for this age group has been set at the same level as that for 18 to 24-year-olds since July 1989); and

(b) the lone parent premium is subsumed into the increased personal allowance for lone parents, but the special earnings disregard is retained, the extra estimated cost in the current year for housing benefit would be about £40 million.

Local Offices

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consultations he has undertaken regarding the future of the regional office of his Department at Gabalfa, Cardiff;

(2) what is his best estimate of the (a) gross and (b) net job loss arising from the proposed reorganisation of the regional tier of administration of his Department's local office network;

(3) what proposals he has to relocate the administration and management of the regional tier of his Department, currently located at Gabalfa, Cardiff.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The restructuring of social security operations, to improve service to the public under the benefits agency, will include the replacement of the present seven regions and two central offices by larger territorial directorates. Many of the functions at present carried out by regional offices are likely to be devolved to local managers, as part of their increased accountability. The detailed implications of these changes will need to be worked out in the light of a study which we have commissioned to identify the continuing need for centralised regional services, and after discussion with the chief executive. The trade union side has been kept informed about this study and about management proposals for three territorial directorates, and it will continue to be consulted about the personnel aspects of the move to the benefits agency. Meanwhile, our concern is to ensure that we continue to meet the needs of the public and of our own staff in Wales to the fullest possible extent, and we have no plans to close the offices at Gabalfa, Cardiff.

Family Credit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost to his Department of the current advertisements to inform the public of their entitlement to family credit; what increase in applications has resulted from this; and how many additional staff have been employed to deal with this.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The cost of the current advertising campaign on television and in the press is £2·4 million. The campaign has not yet been running long enough for the full impact to be reflected in the level of claims. Overtime is being worked at the family credit unit, but otherwise, to date, only one additional member of the staff has been employed, to deal with the requests for claim forms prompted by the adverts.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give figures for each of the last 12 months of the number of people on family credit who have not received a replacement claim book before their current one expired.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Family credit awards are for a fixed period of 26 weeks, and a fresh renewal claim has to be made for entitlement to continue when each period ends.

Information is not available as to the number of cases where the new award is not received before the expiry of the previous book.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are made for representation of adjudication officers at commissioners' hearings; and whether he will make similar arrangements for representation of claimants who would otherwise be unrepresented.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Adjudication officers are represented at all oral hearings before a commissioner. The office of the chief adjudication officer arranges for representation by an adjudication officer from that office, from the central office in Scotland where the case is to be heard there, or by lawyers where complex legal issues are involved.

Responsibility for the administration of the social security commissioners lies with the Lord Chancellor's Department, to which the hon. Member may wish to refer the question of the provision of representation for claimants at commissioners' hearings.

Income Support

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the scheduled dates of publication for 1990 and 1991 of the information relating to income support referred to in his reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) of 9 July, Official Report, column 75.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The data to which the hon. Member refers are collected as part of the Department's management information system. They are not published routinely but are available on request at quarterly intervals.

EMPLOYMENT

Messrs. Graham Brabyn Ltd.

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when former employees of Messrs. Graham Brabyn Ltd. of Redruth, Cornwall, may expect to receive their payments under the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 redundancy payments scheme; for what reason payments have not yet been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My officials are dealing with claims for arrears of wages, holiday pay, notice pay and redundancy pay for around 70 employees. The need to undertake the usual check of the company's wage records, which has proved difficult in this case, and the pressure of current casework in redundancy payments offices has given rise to some delay. I hope, however, to be able to begin making payments to the employees shortly.

Employment Training

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the departmental scrutiny of drop-out rates of employment training, referred to by Sir Geoffrey Holland in his Department's evidence to the Select Committee on Employment concerning employment training, HC 394-i, Q 5-9.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Leighton) on 9 July, Official Report, column 97.

Employment Service

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report the guidelines used by his officials in deciding whether a question should be referred to the chief executive of the Employment Service.

Mr. Eggar: The criteria I use in deciding whether to refer a question to the chief executive of the Employment Service are set out in the Employment Service framework document published by my Department in March this year.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, 10 July, Official Report, column 146, if he will arrange for the 57 replies from the Employment Service Agency's chief executive made between 1 April and 6 July to be printed in the Official Report.

Mr. Eggar: The chief executive of the Employment Service, when replying to questions referred to him, invites hon. Members to say whether they wish the reply to be placed in the Library of the House. The chief executive has informed me that, since 1 April, copies of 26 replies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Beaches

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of lost tourist trade to resorts that have failed to reach the European Economic Community blue flag safety levels on their beaches.

Mr. Nicholls: No such estimate has been made. Thanks to a major programme of remedial works, there has been a very marked improvement in bathing water quality in recent years, with 76 per cent. of identified waters now meeting European Community standards. Further planned capital investment of almost £3 billion should help to ensure that all bathing waters meet EC standards by the end of the century.

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what expenditure was incurred on the action for jobs campaign in 1987-88 in addition to printed material, television advertising, press advertising, radio advertising, outdoor advertising, regional campaigns, exhibition material and research.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure of £194,000 was incurred on presentations in the action for jobs campaign in 1987-88, in addition to printed material, television advertising, press advertising, radio advertising, outdoor advertising, regional campaigns, exhibition material and research.

Voluntary Organisations

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many final operational programme applications have been submitted to the European Commission from voluntary organisations in Wales.

Mr. Eggar: Operational programmes have not been submitted specifically by the voluntary sector in Wales. Operational programmes represent aggregated bids from all interested organisations to run groups of projects under particular European social fund priorities.

Wages Councils

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to ensure the continued existence of wages councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Secretary of State's reply of 6 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett), Official Report, column 543.

Jobcentres

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will take action to prevent jobcentres from advertising vacancies at a rate of pay which is below the legal limit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take action to prevent jobcentres from advertising vacancies which do not specify the wages offered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Training Centre, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer of 9 July from the Secretary of State for Wales, what terms and conditions he has discussed, with Astra Training Services for building a new industrial training centre at Western avenue, Cardiff.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 July 1990]: No discussions have been held with Astra Training Services Ltd. on this subject. My Department is selling the freehold of the site, most of which is held by Astra on a three-year lease.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, if he has instructed King and Co. to convey any interest, leasehold or freehold, in any land at Western avenue to Astra Training Services for an industrial training centre.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The leasehold interest in the site at Western avenue, Cardiff, was conveyed to Astra Training Services Ltd. on completion of the sale of the training business. Should Astra wish to acquire the freehold interest it would be in the same position as any other purchaser and would need to discuss any interest with the Department's agent, King and Company.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, what instructions have been given to King and Co. to dispose of his Department's leasehold interest in the skill centre buildings and associated land at Western avenue, Cardiff.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The leasehold interest in the site at Western avenue, Cardiff, was conveyed to Astra Training Services Ltd. on completion of the sale of the training business.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the reply from the Secretary of State for Wales of 9 July, what future plans he has for development of the Department's land and buildings at Western avenue, Cardiff after 1993.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The land and buildings at Western avenue, Cardiff, are in the process of being marketed by King and Company. It will be for the purchaser to decide any future plans for development.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations he has undertaken with (a) Cardiff chamber of commerce and industry, (b) Confederation of British Industry, Wales region, (c) Engineering Employers Federation, south Wales region, (d) the Welsh Development Agency and (e) South Glamorgan training and enterprise council regarding the future use of land and buildings currently used for industrial training purposes at Western avenue, Cardiff.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 July 1990]: My Department has had no consultation with the organisations listed. Negotiations about the sale of the freehold of land and buildings owned by my Department are being conducted on my behalf by King and Company.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what negotiations he is pursuing with Astra Training Services regarding its requirement for an industrial training centre at Western avenue, Cardiff (a) before 1993 and (b) after 1993.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 July 1990]: No negotiations are being pursued with Astra Training Services Ltd. Astra has a three-year lease on most of the freehold site now being marketed by King and Company. It will be for Astra to decide its future requirements in the locality.

Astra's plans for the future of the business it sought to purchase were discussed with my advisers before terms of sale were agreed.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the reply from the Secretary of State for Wales of 9 July, whether he has discussed plans for long-term investment in an industrial training centre at Western avenue, Cardiff, with Astra Training Services.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 July 1990]: In the course of negotiations for the sale of the Skills Training Agency, my advisers discussed with all potential purchasers their plans for the future of the business they were seeking to buy and these plans were taken into account in reaching a decision on bids.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, what consultations he had with the manager of the skill centre at Western avenue, Cardiff, before instructing King and Company regarding the sale of his Department's interest in the site.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 12 July 1990]: I understand that King and Company, which is marketing my Department's freehold interest in the site, has liaised with the leaseholder, Astra Training Services Ltd., about viewing arrangements and the siting of sale boards etc.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the terms and conditions he has agreed with Astra Training Services for the disposal of his interest in the land and buildings currently sub-let to the employee rehabilitation centre at Western avenue, Cardiff.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 July 1990]: Most of the area occupied by the employment rehabilitation centre (ERC) at Western avenue, Cardiff is outside that part of the site leased to Astra Training Services Ltd. The small part of the ERC that falls within Astra's leased area is covered by a three-year sub-lease between Astra and the Government. Should the ERC vacate within that period, Astra would be free to occupy that area itself or grant a new sub-lease to a third party. This would be until Astra itself vacates the site under the terms of its own three-year lease.

Back-related Illnesses

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on how many working days have been lost in each of the last three years due to back-related illness.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is given in the following table. This shows the number of days of certified incapacity for sickness and invalidity benefit, where the cause of incapacity was due to a back-related illness.

	Total number of days millions[1]
7 April 1986 to 4 April 1987	39·8
6 April 1987 to 2 April 1988	46·5
4 April 1988 to 1 April 1989	52·6

[1] This total excludes the first three days in any spell of sickness (waiting days). It also excludes all days of incapacity covered by statutory sick pay (payable for up to 28 weeks) and all days lost by other persons not entitled to sickness or invalidity benefit. It includes days of incapacity for which invalidity benefit was claimed by men aged 65 to 69 and women aged 60 to 64.

DEFENCE

Radiation

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total occupational whole body equivalent radiation exposure of (a) Chatham and (b) Devonport dockyard workers in milliSieverts, for each year since the onset of the nuclear programme.

Mr. Neubert: The cumulative radiation doses for all workers at Chatham and Devonport dockyards for each of the years 1979 to 1989 inclusive are shown in the table. These figures include the cumulative radiation doses of employees monitored for exposure to ionising radiations by the local issue of direct reading dosimeters while employed under a written system of work. Figures for earlier years are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Total occupational whole body equivalent radiation exposure

	Chatham (mSv)	Devonport (mSv)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 July, Official Report, column 245, concerning exposure to radiation, when the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces expects to write to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will be writing to the right hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown for (a) Chatham and (b) Devonport dockyards of annual individual radiation exposure for workers in the bands of (i) 0 to 10, (ii) 10 to 20, (iii) 20 to 30, (iv) 30 to 40, (v) greater than 50, (vi) greater than 70 and (vii) greater than 100 milliSieverts for all years since the onset of nuclear work.

Mr. Neubert: A breakdown of annual individual radiation doses for (a) Chatham and (b) Devonport dockyard workers for each of the years 1979-89 is given in the tables. A more detailed or alternative breakdown of the figures and data for years earlier than 1979 can be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Helicopter Noise

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he will publish the results of the review of the boundaries of the helicopter noise insulation grant scheme;

(2) if he will publish the results of the noise survey carried out by the university of Ulster at sites affected by high levels of helicopter activity.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is little that I can add to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 21 June, column 647. The results of the noise surveys undertaken by the university of Ulster in the vicinity of the helicopter landing sites at Bessbrook, Crossmaglen and Forkhill are currently being studied by my Department.

My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces expects to be in a position to write to the hon. Member, and other hon. Members who have expressed an interest, in the near future with details of the survey results. Local announcements will be made shortly afterwards.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many helicopter noise insulation grants have been issued since the insulation scheme was implemented;

(2) how many buildings currently fall within the boundaries to which the helicopter noise insulation grant scheme applies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Noise insulation grant schemes were introduced at Bessbrook, Crossmaglen and Forkhill on 1 June 1988. These enabled residents of homes within the qualifying noise contour to apply for grants for secondary acoustic glazing for all bedrooms and up to two living rooms.

The following table lists the number of grant applications received thus far for each scheme.

	Eligible dwellings	Grant applications
Bessbrook	45	22
Crossmaglen	30	24
Forkhill	20	1
TOTAL	95	47

Procurement Executive Airfields

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of the procurement executive's airfields at Bedford, Farnborough and Boscombe Down.

Mr. Neubert: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) on 19 June, Official Report, column 547.

Research and Development

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will publish a list of research contracts and agreements in universities and polytechnics funded by his Department which are not classified secret;

(2) what contracts have been placed with universities and other institutions of higher education for research on zirconium and zirconium films since 1983;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report (a) a list of the five universities which were awarded the highest number of research and development contracts in the last financial year, (b) the number of contracts and agreements which each of these universities received and (c) the total worth of these contracts for each of the five universities;

(4) if he will list the universities and polytechnics in Britain where his Department is currently funding research and development contracts and agreements.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 8 February at column 774.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how his Department intends to reduce its spending on defence research and development;

(2) if he has any plans to reduce the amount of money his Department spends on research and development in (a) universities and polytechnics and (b) industry.

Mr. Neubert: The Government have announced their intention gradually to reduce the real level of their spending on defence research and development, while recognising there must be sufficient activity for defence needs. This will involve looking very carefully at what is available off the shelf and at the opportunities for international collaboration before embarking on major new development programmes. Within the total, spending in industry and the universities will depend on the requirements of the programme.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many research and development contracts and agreements in universities and polytechnics are currently being funded by the Admiralty Research Establishment; how many universities and polytechnics currently hold contracts and agreements funded by the Admiralty Research Establishment; and what is the total worth of these contracts and agreements;

(2) how many research and development contracts and agreements in universities and polytechnics are currently being funded by the Royal Aircraft Establishment; and what is the total worth of these contracts and agreements;

(3) how many research and development contracts and agreements in universities and polytechnics are currently being funded by the Atomic Weapons Establishment; how many universities and polytechnics currently hold contracts and agreements funded by the Atomic Weapons Establishment; and what is the total value of these contracts and agreements;

(4) how many research and development contracts and agreements in universities and polytechnics are currently being funded by the Chemical Defence Establishment; how many universities and polytechnics currently hold contracts and agreements funded by the Chemical Defence Establishment; and what is the total value of these contracts and agreements;

(5) how many research and development contracts and agreements in universities and polytechnics are currently being funded by the Royal Armaments Research and Development Establishment; how many universities and polytechnics currently hold contracts and agreements funded by the Royal Armaments Research and Development Establishment; and what is the total value of these contracts and agreements;

(6) how many research and development contracts and agreements in universities and polytechnics are currently being funded by the Royal Signals and Radar Establishment; how many universities and polytechnics currently hold contracts and agreements funded by the Royal Signals and Radar Establishment; and what is the total value of these contracts and agreements;

(7) how many research and development contracts and agreements in universities and polytechnics are currently being funded by the Aeroplane and Armament Experimental Establishment; how many universities and polytechnics currently hold contracts and agreements funded by the Aeroplane and Armament Experimental Establishment; and what is the total value of these contracts and agreements.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested on research agreements funded by A&AEE, ARE, AWE, CDE, RAE, RARDE and RSRE is as follows:

Funding establishment	Number of current agreements	Total value £ million	Number of universities and polytechnics
ARE	113	8·8	40
CDE	64	7·9	33
RAE	188	16·6	43
RARDE	153	13·0	47
RSRE	101	9·7	40
TOTAL	619	56·0	203

The Ministry of Defence currently has some 143 research and development contracts with universities and polytechnics. The total value of these is some £5·1 million. It is not possible to provide the information on research and development contracts at each establishment without incurring disproportionate expense.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Chemical Defence Establishment is funding research in universities and other institutions of higher education on various aspects of verification technology.

Mr. Neubert: As part of the United Kingdom's support for the negotiations in Geneva for a comprehensive, global and verifiable chemical weapons convention, the Chemical Defence Establishment, together with other departments concerned, is undertaking work on various aspects of verification technology, supported by extramural contracts with universities and polytechnics as appropriate.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the positive results from his Department's funding of research and development in universities and polytechnics since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: This work has played an important role in support of the defence research programme and has provided good value for money. It is not possible to list individual benefits without incurring disproportionate expense.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons his Department has increased its spending on research and development in universities and polytechnics since 1984.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 8 February 1990 at column 775.

Universities and Polytechnics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what formal links exist between universities and polytechnics and his Department, other than the awarding of contracts and agreements.

Mr. Neubert: The MOD currently funds six defence lectureships at British universities and is contributing towards the cost of the establishment and running of a new centre for defence studies at Kings college, university of London. Links are also maintained through the sponsorship of MOD personnel undertaking research and higher degrees at universities and polytechnics; and participation in seminars. Grants for work of relevance to defence are made under collaborative grants arrangements with the research councils. The MOD and the Science and Engineering Research Council co-fund awards to certain students who are jointly supervised by their university and defence research establishments. All activities are in support of the defence programme.

Royal Marines School of Music

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has reached a decision on the future of the Royal Marines school of music at Deal.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A review carried out during 1989 recommended, on financial and management grounds, that the Royal Marines school of music (RMSM) should be relocated from Deal to Whale island, Portsmouth. My right hon. Friend has considered this recommendation carefully but concluded that a decision should be postponed until such time as the longer-term requirement for the RM barracks at Deal has been clarified. The RMSM will therefore remain at Deal for the foreseeable future.

ENVIRONMENT

Creosote

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what discussions he has had in meetings of the European Council of Ministers on the failure of the Federal Republic of Germany to adopt new regulations on the use of creosote for wood preservation;

(2) if he has any proposals to increase controls over the use of creosote as a wood preservative.

Mr. Trippier: There are at present no Community regulations on the use of creosote for wood preservation. The German Government have notified the Commission in accordance with directive 83/189/EEC of their intention to introduce controls on certain uses of creosote. The Department of the Environment and the Health and Safety Executive are preparing a response to the proposals in consultation with other Departments and industry. This subject has not been discussed by the Council of Ministers.

Big Ben

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 647, to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth, what will be the cost of forging the new hammer arm for Big Ben.

Mr. Chope: About £8,000.

Local Government Finance

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidance was given by his Department to local authorities on the recruitment of suitably qualified computer systems operators for processing community charge payments;

(2) what guidelines were issued by his Department on the operation of computer systems for processing community charge payments.

Mr. Chope: My Department has issued guidance to local authorities and the major computer companies on the operation of all aspects of the community charge. We continue to keep them up to date as necessary with any changes in the arrangements. It is the responsibility of local authorities, which vary greatly in size and requirements, to ensure that they have suitable computer systems and staff to operate them.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers local authorities have to charge a different rate of community charge to those with two sets of accommodation in the light of individual circumstances.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 11 July 1990]: Local authorities have a wide discretion in levying the standard community charge on the owners of domestic properties which are not used as a sole or main residence. They may at the beginning of each financial year set for the whole of that year the multiplier for the standard charge at zero, half, one, one and a half or two times the personal community charge for the area. If the authority wishes, different multipliers may be set for different classes of circumstances providing these do not exceed the maximum multipliers prescribed for 11 particular circumstances defined in regulations. Authorities may also determine, within defined criteria, their own further classes for the purpose of applying different multipliers. They may also in certain classes prescribe periods of grace within which no charge is payable. Multipliers cannot be varied during the course of a year.

My right hon. Friend is currently reviewing the use that authorities have made of their discretion during 1990-91 and may in due course propose further classes which are to be subject to maximum multipliers in 1991-92 and future years.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate has been made of the extra administration costs for each authority which has been capped.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 July 1990]: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear in his statement on 3 April 1990 about community charge capping in England—Official Report, Volume 170, column 1033—we estimate that the costs per authority will be about £200,000 per charging authority. The Secretary of State took account of this amongst the other relevant factors in deciding on the appropriate levels of cap.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average increase across England in standard spending assessments as against grant-related expenditure assessments for 1990-91 against 1989-90; what were the figures for Calderdale; and what were the causes of the deviation between Calderdale and the national average.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 July 1990]: Standard spending assessments (SSAs) for 1990-91 were around 10 per cent. higher than the total of grant-related expenditure assessments (GREs) for 1989-90, adjusted on to a comparable basis. The equivalent increase for Calderdale was 4·1 per cent. The SSA for Calderdale was calculated, as for all authorities, according to the formulae set out in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) approved by the House on 18 January, using the appropriate data (as described in annex A to that report) for Calderdale, reflecting its social, physical and demographic characteristics.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of administering the rates each year since 1979 in each of the authorities which have been capped.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The information as returned by authorities is given in the table:

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra resources the Government will make available to each poll tax-capped authority.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The Government will make available to authorities no extra resources as a consequence of designation for charge capping.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the clearing banks about the workings of the direct debit system to process community charge payments.

Mr. Chope: My Department has been in close touch with the major clearing banks, the Association for Payment Clearing Services and local authorities about the use of direct debits for community charge payments. We have issued guidance to local authorities on the use of direct debit in our practice note on collection of the community charge. Since the commencement of the community charge system on 1 April 1990 we have not received any representations from the clearing banks.

Air Safety

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he issues to district councils on the weight to be given to air safety in considering planning applications from gliding clubs and similar organisations.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department has issued no guidance on this matter. Statutory responsibility for safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now rescind permission for the discharge of radioactive waste into the River Thames.

Mr. Trippier: The levels of radioactive waste in the Thames are extremely low. Drinking water derived from the Thames contains levels of radioactivity well below those limits recommended by the World Health Organisation and the International Commission on Radiological Protection. As a consequence the risk to health is negligible and there is no reason to discontinue the present disposal arrangements to the River Thames.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites are currently under consideration by Nirex for a repository for intermediate-level and low-level radioactive waste; if he will name those sites; and if he will list the sites that are on any reserve list for consideration.

Mr. Trippier: Site investigations for a repository for low-level and intermediate-level radioactive waste are currently under way in the vicinity of Sellafield and Dounreay. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no information about consideration by Nirex of any other sites.

Parish Councils

Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the results of the survey carried out by his Department on the workings of parish councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department is in the process of commissioning research on parish councils; the target date for the completion of the research will depend on the terms of the contract eventually made.

Rent-to-Mortgage Scheme

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the expected take-up of the scheme for converting rents into mortgages;

(2) whether the scheme for converting council rents into mortgages will include (a) recipients of housing benefit, (b) recipients of income support, (c) retirement pensioners and (d) people receiving poll tax rebate.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No such scheme has been announced for England.

Homeless Women

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many single women (a) under 25 years, (b) over 25 years and (c) over 60 years are homeless.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Acts. The information provided does not identify those who are single women and my Department has no estimates.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many women-only (a) hostels and (b) night shelters there are.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his latest estimates of the numbers of homeless women in the following categories: (a) pensioners, (b) young women, (c) single mothers and (d) women from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Acts. The information provided does not include the number of women accepted, nor those in the categories requested, and my Department has no such estimates.

Disabled People (Housing)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has issued any guidelines to local authorities on the provision of housing for disabled people.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Local housing authorities are required by section 3 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 to have regard to the special housing needs of disabled people when considering the housing needs of their district. The Department has recently issued a circular to local authorities on the assistance available to disabled people for house adaptations under part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Homelessness

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has developed any proposals to seek to amend the Housing Act 1985 to extend the official definitions of homelessness and priority need.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to amend part III of the Housing Act 1985 to extend the statutory responsibilities of local authorities to include single women; and if he will make a statement about single women and homelessness.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government recently reviewed the homelessness legislation and concluded that the Act provided an adequate safety net for the genuine homeless in priority need. We concluded that the Act was serving the purpose which Parliament had originally intended of it, and therefore proposed no changes to the statutory framework.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the £15 million recently allocated for the relief of homelessness will be spent on the provision of more hostel placements for young people in London.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We are in the process of consulting public bodies, local authorities and housing associations about the provision of direct access and move-on accommodation through the programme which I announced on 22 June.

Housing

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities allocate housing to women who are the victims of domestic violence; and how many allocations were made for this purpose in 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has no information on this subject.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's strategy for ensuring housing is provided for those people covered by community care legislation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The housing aspects of the care in the community proposals are the subject of discussion between the Department of the Environment and the Department of Health in consultation with the local authority associations.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proposals he is developing to enable women heads of households on low incomes to gain easier access to housing;

(2) what proposals he is developing to enable women heads of households to become owner-occupiers more easily.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government's policies designed to promote the supply of affordable housing to rent and buy will benefit households headed by men and women alike.

Radon Gas

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the causes, incidence and location of abnormally high concentrations of radon gas in domestic homes; and what action he intends to take further to assess and mitigate consequent problems for human health.

Mr. David Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the free booklet issued by my Department, the "Householders' Guide to Radon". A second edition is to be issued shortly. Further information is given in the statement on radon in houses, published by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) in documents of the NRPB, volume 1, number 1, January 1990. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. My Department is continuing to fund research on the distribution of homes with high concentrations of radon, on ways of reducing the radon levels, and on the effects of radon on human health.

Alpha Lighting Ltd.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department received an application from the London borough of Greenwich for a grant to Alpha Lighting Ltd. under section 6 of the Inner Urban Areas Act; and when it will be approved.

Mr. Moynihan: The London borough of Greenwich applied originally in January this year for urban programme grant approval for assistance for Alpha Lighting Ltd. The borough's 1989-90 allocation was already fully committed so the application was part of the 1990-91 inner area programme submission. That programme is not yet approved as further information is awaited from the borough. Nevertheless a provisional approval for an urban programme grant for Alpha Lighting Ltd. has been given by the Department in advance of final approval of the borough's full programme.

Ozone Pollution

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Hornchurch, 14 June, Official Report, column 294, if he will indicate to whom the 27 daily summaries have been released and publish a telephone number for the public to inquire about levels of ozone pollution.

Mr. Trippier: We cannot precisely say to whom the daily summaries have been released because we do not record such information but the majority were requested by the media. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), in his reply to a question from the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) on 27 June, gave the telephone number of the Department of the Environment's public inquiries—071 276 3000—from which information about low-level ozone is available during episodes.

Water Meters

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will suspend expenditure by his Department on the water meter trials in the Normanton constituency until the Office of Water Services has published its consultative document in September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. The water metering trials have been set up to provide information on the costs and problems of implementing an effective metering system and to determine the impact of charging by volume on consumption. They will continue for a further two to three years and provide valuable information on costs and benefits for the water industry, Government and the Director General of Water Services which will contribute to the debate about future methods of charging.

Beaches

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take to ensure that beaches awarded the European Economic Community blue flag safety levels maintain the standards and to monitor those standards.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It will be for the National Rivers Authority using its powers under the Water Act 1989 to monitor bathing waters and to ensure that they continue to meet the directive's standards. Responsibility for beaches rests with the local authority or, in some cases, with the owner. They have a clear incentive to ensure that their beaches continue to meet the requirements for the award of a blue flag.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the overall cost of cleaning the nation's beaches to European Economic Community blue flag safety levels.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The cost of bringing the bathing waters up to the directive's standards and ensuring that all substantial discharges of sewage will be treated is estimated at £2·9 billion. The cost of bringing beaches up to the standards needed to qualify for a blue flag has not yet been estimated nationally.

Football Supporters Association

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet officials of the Football Supporters Association.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the Football Supporters Association. Officials from my Department have had recent meetings with it both in England before the world cup finals and in Italy during the tournament.

Bedford (Population)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessments have been made of population projections for Bedford, including Kempston, in 1995, 2000 and 2010 and the number of new houses likely to be built (a) south of the River Ouse and (b) north of it.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Population projections below national level are prepared by OCPS, in consultation with the Department of the Environment, for areas down to county level only. Assessments of expected population levels, and the equivalent requirements for house building at district level and below are a matter for county and district councils in reviewing and updating the development plans for their areas.

The approved structure plan for Bedfordshire is currently being reviewed to 2001, taking into account the current regional planning guidance for the south-east. That review is expected to be submitted in the autumn of this year, and the population proposed, including that for the Bedford area, is expected to be assessed at an examination in public early in 1991.

North Bedfordshire district council published a draft districtwide local plan for its area in July 1988 for public consultation. This was updated by an interim strategy published in February of this year. It is understood that the district council expects to place the local plan on deposit later this year, following the submission of the structure plan review by the county council. A local public inquiry into that plan by an independent inspector will provide an opportunity for the proposed levels of house building in Bedfordshire to be assessed.

Housing Capital Grants

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the arrangements for paying new housing capital grants.

Mr. Chris Patten: New housing capital grants were introduced by part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. The approval of Parliament for expenditure on these new grants is being sought in the main supply estimates for class VIII, vote 1; Housing England. Pending that approval urgent expenditure, estimated at £71·546 million, is being met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Drinking Water

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are considered to be safe levels of iodine 125 in drinking water; and what assessment he has made of the levels of the radioactive isotope in Thames water from Berkshire down to its mouth.

Mr. Trippier: Limits for the levels of iodine 125 in drinking water are recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has a national programme for checking the levels of radioactivity in drinking water sources. This programme includes the sampling of the Thames including the stretch between Berkshire and the mouth of the Thames. The levels of iodine 125 in drinking water from the Thames are trivial and the risk to health is negligible.

Planning Agreements

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the outcome of the consultation exercise about planning agreements, announced on 11 July 1989, Official Report, column 485; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The consultation paper provoked 229 responses. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have decided that the three proposed amendments to section 52 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 should proceed as soon as there is a legislative opportunity. These are:

(a) to enable a developer to give a unilateral undertaking to carry out certain works, or to do whatever the undertaking specified;

(b) to make provision for a planning agreement or unilateral undertaking to be discharged when its planning purpose has ended; and

(c) to enable the Crown to enter into section 52 agreements.

It is also intended to make certain technical changes to section 52, designed to improve and clarify the drafting.

The new policy guidance on which we consulted will be issued in due course, taking account of some of the points made by respondents to the consultation paper.

Development (Bradford)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Rothschild's representing shareholders in 3Ds Ltd. is currently involved in the negotiations for city grant for the West End development in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 12 July 1990]: Rothschild's is not involved in any negotiations with the Department in connection with the proposed West End development in Bradford.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when it is expected that the application for city grant by 3Ds Ltd. will be concluded; what is the estimated cost of considering the application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 12 July 1990]: 3Ds Ltd. has submitted details of its proposals for the West End development scheme, and discussions are continuing with the Department on what further information may be needed. I am not able to provide an estimate of the cost of considering the application.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of houses currently being considered in the application for city grant by 3Ds Ltd. for the West End development in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 12 July 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him of Monday 18 June 1990 at column 482.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sum of money is currently allocated in the integrated development operation application by Bradford for the West End scheme; whether any such money will be subjected to the additionality rule; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 12 July 1990]: Private sector developments such as the proposed West End scheme are not eligible for funding under the Bradford integrated development operation. The IDO supports public sector schemes.

The only project in the West End area of the city to have been allocated resources through the Bradford IDO is environmental improvement work in Quebec street. This project has attracted £12,625 in grant from the European regional development fund. The normal additionality arrangements apply. EC receipts are taken into account when domestic expenditure programmes are set so that these programmes are larger than they would otherwise have been.

Written Answers to Questions

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe on 4 July, Official Report, column 577, if he will now state to what extent, either implicitly or explicitly, pensions were taken into account in each of the years from 1960 onwards in determining home civil service pay; and if he has a precise figure for the extent that pensions were taken into account for any particular year.

Mr. Major: Civil service pensions are an important part of the total remuneration package and are fully taken into account in setting pay levels. Assessments of the value of the civil service pension scheme have been made for the purposes of pay negotiations under the previous pay comparability arrangements and under the pay determination framework introduced as part of the new flexible pay arrangements. In 1980, the last year of the earlier arrangements, the reduction in pay levels averaged over men and women to take account of civil service pensions was 7·9 per cent.

VAT

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what are the value added tax rates in each European Community state in respect of hotel accomodation and restaurant meals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The information requested is contained in the publication "VAT in Europe", published by the International Bureau of Fiscal Documentation, a copy of which is located in the economic affairs section of the House of Commons Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by police area the number of firearms certificates and shotgun certificates which were in force in England and Wales on 31 December 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not yet available. The latest information, for the number of firearms certificates and shotgun certificates on issue at 31 December 1988, is shown by police force area in tables 2 and 4 of the Home Office statistical bulletin 18/89, a copy of which is in the Library.

Working Men's Clubs

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from organisations in England and Wales in relation to police right of entry to working men's clubs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have received 31 such representations, all from working men's clubs.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to amend the law relating to police right of entry to working men's clubs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to amend the law in this respect.

Prisons (Suicides)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, pursuant to his answer on suicides by prison officers in Brixton prison, Official Report, 3 July, column 485, he will give the figures for suicides in other local and trainer prisons in 1989.

Mr. Mellor: The table gives, for each prison service establishment, the number of inmates who died by their own hand in 1989 and, of these cases, the number in which verdicts of suicide were returned at coroners' inquests.

Before 1 January 1990 no central record was kept of the causes of deaths of prison officers. That information is therefore not readily available and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Re-entry Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to move the re-entry visa section from Petty France to Lunar house; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are keeping the arrangements for the readmission of visa nationals under review. But no plans have been made to move the re-entry visa section at the London passport office to Lunar house.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time for the processing of a re-entry visa for each of the offices in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. The table shows the maximum processing times for straightforward, non-urgent applications as at 11 July 1990:

Office	Working days
Glasgow	2
Liverpool	5
London	8
Newport	5
Peterborough	6

[1] Same day service for counter applications.
[2] Following initial processing in Belfast applications are dealt with in London.

Passport Offices

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are employed at the (a) passport office and (b) re-entry section in each office in the United Kingdom for the years (i) 1970, (ii) 1975, (iii) 1980, (iv) 1985, (v) 1986, (vi) 1987, (vii) 1988, (viii) 1989 and (ix) at present.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. Table (a) shows the number of permanent and casual staff in post at each office on 31 May for each year since 1984 when the Home Office assumed responsibility for passport issuing in the United Kingdom. Table (b) shows the number of staff employed on re-entry visa work in the London passport office on 31 May for each of the years 1985 to 1990. In other passport offices re-entry visa applications are handled by staff whose main function is the issue of passports. The staffing resources required for re-entry visa work in such offices cannot be identified separately.

1. The figures are as at 31 May each year.
2. The first figures represent permanent staff and the bracketed figures casual staff (employed to assist with peak demand).

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has introduced to help with stress-related illnesses for the workers at the passport offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Internally mounted management courses for Home Office managers contain an input on the management of stress and passport office managers attend such courses. All staff also have access to staff welfare facilities. I am not, however, aware that staff in passport offices are particularly prone to stress-related illnesses.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visas have been issued from each passport office in the United Kingdom from 1985 to the present.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is shown in the table for the financial years 1985-86 to the present:

Brixton Prison

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any temporary limit has been placed on the admission of prisoners to Brixton prison.

Mr. Mellor: Prison officers voted in June to take national industrial action over staffing levels and overcrowding. The local branch of the Prison Officers Association at Her Majesty's prison Brixton, together with other branches, took industrial action between noon on 6 July and noon on 9 July. This took the form of reducing the prison population to its certified normal accommodation level by refusing admission of prisoners. As a result of this action at Brixton, 40 prisoners were accommodated in police cells overnight on 6 July and 43 prisoners overnight on 7 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present establishment for (a) prison officers and (b) all staff at Brixton prison; and what plans there are to increase it.

Mr. Mellor: There are at present 916 in post at Brixton prison of whom 718 are prison officers (including principal and senior officers and specialists). The target officer-in-post figure set by regional management for 31 March 1991 is 720.

Video Cassettes

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what role he envisages for the Broadcasting Standards Council in commenting upon the suitability of programme material distributed via video cassette rental.

Mr. Mellor: Although we have not included the video industry within the statutory functions of the Broadcasting Standards Council in the Broadcasting Bill, the council's general remit extends to video on a non-statutory basis. We understand that the British Board of Film Classification, in discharging its function under the Video Recordings Act 1984, will take account of the council's code of practice on the portrayal of violence and sex and standards of taste and decency and that the council will consult the board, among others, when drawing up or revising the code.

Security Industry

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to finalise his views on the recommendations of the report on the self-regulation of the security industry, submitted to him in July 1989.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member on 3 May at column 666.

Immigration

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees from Somalia and their dependants have so far been granted leave to remain in the United Kingdom; how many applications have been refused; and how many are awaiting a decision.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested for years from 1979 to 1988, including the number of Somalian applications for refugee status and asylum awaiting a decision at the end of 1987 and 1988, is published in Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1988", a copy of which is in the Library. Revised figures, including provisional figures for 1989, will be published shortly in the bulletin for 1989 and are given in the table. Figures for the number of applications outstanding especially at the end of 1989 overstate the position because of under-recording of decisions made earlier.

Revised and more up-to-date information on applications received for refugee status or asylum from Somalian citizens

	[1]1987	[1]1988	[2]1989
Grants of refugee status or asylum	57	346	1,170
Grants of exceptional leave	[3]85	73	305
Refusals of exceptional leave or refugee status	[3]89	9	10
Applications outstanding at end of year	[3]600	580	1,820

[1] Revised figures.
[2] Provisional figures.
[3] These figures are unaltered.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken by his Department to investigate cases referred from overseas posts in order to assess whether the maintenance and accommodation requirements of the immigration rules have been met.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested. But the estimated average time taken by the immigration service to deal with all categories of cases deferred by entry clearance officers during the past 12 months was about 60 days.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it takes for a decision to be made on a case of (a) naturalisation, (b) registration, (c) immigration, (d) eastern European casework and (e) asylum and related casework from the opening of the letter.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 10 July 1990]: The available information relates to the average times taken from the date of receipt of applications to their completion. Applications for naturalisation and registration completed in June 1990 took 30 months and 22 months respectively. After-entry immigration applications, applications from eastern European nationals and applications for asylum completed in the first quarter of 1990 (the latest period for which information is available), took 102 days, 108 days and 9·5 months respectively.

Pet Theft

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the Association of Chief Police Officers concerning reports on pet theft given to him by the national Petwatch organisation; and with what result.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have not discussed this with the Association of Chief Police Officers, but we sent material provided by National Petwatch to the association which then circulated it to all chief constables in England and Wales. The investigation of alleged thefts is a matter for the police to whom all incidents should be reported.

RAF Greenham Common (Sentences)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will initiate the process to have the sentences of those persons prosecuted under the Ministry of Defence's bylaws at RAF Greenham Common, which were the subject of the House of Lords ruling of 12 July, reviewed or quashed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are currently considering the terms of the House of Lords ruling of the RAF Greenham Common byelaws and will of course consider any representations made by those who have been convicted under those byelaws.

Prison Overcrowding

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to reduce overcrowding in prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The Government are tackling the problem of overcrowding by policies designed to ensure that imprisonment is not used in the case of persons who can be adequately punished in the community, and by a massive prison building programme. On 13 July there were 45,483 people in prison or temporarily held in police cells. This is the lowest July figure since 1984.

Under the prison building programme, eight prisons have been completed since 1979, and 12 are under construction, with more planned to follow. Between now and March 1992 the programme will produce over 5,000 new places, and this figure will rise to nearly 7,000 by March 1993. The new establishments are being built to a high standard, and places in them will have integral sanitation; and with their completion, the number of places available to the prison service of category B standard will rise by one third. Over 5,000 of the new places will be used for prisoners in local prisons or remand centres, thus relieving directly the areas of greatest pressure.

There is also a substantial programme of projects producing places at existing establishments. Over the next three years 3,000 places with integral sanitation will come into use at existing establishments. About half these places will be in local establishments.

I concluded towards the end of last year that the distribution of the prison estate needed attention. In particular, with the welcome fall in the young offender population, young offender accommodation was not full, while the adult system remained under considerable strain. A review has been carried out of the prison estate as a whole with the aim of providing the necessary places through the most cost-effective and efficient mix of establishments, in particular by examining what scope and options exist for changes and adjustments to the young offender estate and to the role of establishments in order to bring planned capacity and expected population levels more closely into line. The prime purpose was to seek ways of relieving the burden of overcrowding in the adult estate, where the need is for good quality and secure accommodation.

The main proposals which have emerged from the review are as follows. First, three large young offender institutions will become adult prisons for category C prisoners. Her Majesty's prison Wellingborough, which has accommodated with success the bulk of the Grendon population while building work has been going on there, will continue as an adult prison when Grendon returns to operation during the autumn. Her Majesty's young offender institution The Mount will become an adult establishment (the purpose for which it was originally built) before the end of the current financial year, and Her Majesty's young offender institution Castington similarly in 1992-93. While some security work will be necessary to make them fully suitable for their new role, all three establishments offer modern and secure accommodation and will be most valuable additions to the adult estate. Secondly, a number of establishments will change their functions in whole or in part so as to provide a resource more fitted to the expected population. This may involve the provision of local, training or young offender places as required in the particular area. In some areas, these changes will help to move young offenders on remand out of adult local prisons. For example, part of the existing young offender institution at Everthorpe has been redesignated as a prison to enable it to hold such offenders and to give immediate relief to Her Majesty's prison Hull. In 1992, it is intended that Her Majesty's prison Thorp Arch should take young offender remand prisoners so as to reduce or even eliminate the young offender population in Her Majesty's prison Leeds.

It was always clear that as we sought to develop plans for the better use of the estate, the possibility could not be ruled out of closing establishments, particularly young offender establishments, where their accommodation was uneconomic, poorly located, or in other respects below standard. It is proposed that HM young offender institution Campsfield House and HM young offender institution Lowdham Grange should close by the end of the current financial year, and HM young offender institution Eastwood Park and HM prison Northeye by the end of 1992-93. Campsfield House offers no more than 70 places with low security. To fill this up with prisoners not suitable for these conditions would be to put the public at risk. The establishment could discharge any alternative and secure function only following virtual rebuilding at high cost and considerable delay. Similar considerations apply to Eastwood Park and Northeye. Lowdham Grange is an open young offender establishment which has for some time been only partly occupied as the young offender population has fallen. Inmates suitable for open conditions can be accommodated elewhere within the system. Staff, trade unions and boards of visitors will be consulted on the basis of these proposals.

These initiatives will produce a more efficient prison estate in which accommodation is better located, better fitted to its tasks, and with better facilities than now exist.

Rape

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken since 1987 to tackle the crime of rape.

Mr. John Patten: The Government continue to attach a high priority to action against rape, including the detection and punishment of offenders; the provision of help and support to victims; and the development of prevention policies.

The enhanced police response to rape allegations is reflected in the increases in the recorded crime statistics. Victims of rape have been encouraged to come forward. Changes in police practice have meant that a higher proportion of rape allegations have been recorded as crimes. A high percentage of recorded rapes are cleared up by the police (71 per cent. in 1987 and 74 per cent. in 1989) and the police now have their disposal improved detection methods such as DNA fingerprinting with which to provide the courts with evidence of guilt. The maximum penalty for attempted rape was increased to life imprisonment in 1985. In 1986 the Court of Appeal gave guidance on sentencing in rape cases in R v Billam. Since 1987, over 70 per cent. of convicted rapists have received sentences of five years or more.

In line with Home Office guidance issued in October 1986, the police are increasingly alert to the special needs of rape victims. Rape examination suites have been set up where distressed victims can be examined in comforting surroundings and by a woman doctor wherever possible; interviews with victims are usually also conducted by women police officers. The aim is to treat victims sensitively and to provide them with full information about medical, support and counselling services after their ordeal.

Anonymity for rape victims was strengthened in the Criminal Justice Act 1988. It is now an offence to publish or broadcast the name or address or a still or moving picture of a woman after an allegation has been made that she has been the victim of a rape offence, if that is likely to lead members of the public to identify her as the alleged victim. The prohibition applies during the whole of the woman's lifetime, unless the courts make a specific direction to the contrary, and it applies whether proceedings follow or not; if they do, it applies in relation to civil as well as criminal proceedings.

The Home Office is providing £4·5 million this year towards the cost of local victim support schemes. These now cover over 94 per cent. of the population of England and Wales and are helping increasing numbers of victims of serious crime, including rape victims. Improved understanding of the nature of crimes is desirable as a basis for developing prevention policies. In February 1989, we published two important research studies about rape, "Changes in rape offences and sentences" (Home Office Research Study 105) and "Concerns about rape" (Home Office Research Study 106). Among other findings, the studies suggest that women are more likely to be raped by someone they know than by a stranger, and that more rapes take place indoors than in public places. The reports are in the Library.

The latest edition of our crime prevention handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime" encourages women to take common-sense precautions to reduce the risk of attack.

Arrangements for the treatment of sex offenders in prison custody and their treatment and supervision in the community are being reviewed by a prison service working party and by Her Majesty's inspectorate of probation. This work should contribute to the development of improved provision for the treatment of offenders, so that they are less likely to re-offend.

TRANSPORT

M3 (Compulsory Purchase)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 12 July to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford, when he expects the remaining part of the compulsory purchase order relating to the Bar End-Compton section of the M3 will be made.

Mr. Atkins: A date for making the compulsory purchase order for the Bar End-Compton section of the M3 has not yet been fixed.

Toxic Materials (Rivers and Estuaries)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to introduce new regulations for the control of the transport of toxic materials on rivers and estuaries.

Mr. McLoughlin: The existing Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1981, as amended, which govern the transport of toxic materials on rivers and estuaries within the United Kingdom, will be revised to take account of recent internationally agreed conditions for the transport of marine pollutants by ships.

Collisions (River Usk)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many collisions and other accidents involving ships in the River Usk, Gwent have taken place in the past three years; and how many of these involved ships carrying toxic wastes.

Mr. McLoughlin: Records show that there have been two accidents involving ships in the River Usk in the past three years. The details are:

Date of accident	Name of vessel	Type of accident
13 November 1989	Hargevan	Grounding
24 April 1990	Bell Ranger/Morias	Collision

The Bell Ranger was carrying, among other items, a container of drums of chemical waste. The chemical is classified as a toxic substance. Hargeven and Morias were both carrying cargoes of steel.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 6 July to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, column 737, if he has any additional information (a) on the condition of the containers and (b) the severity of the collision.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have no information on the condition of the containers as commissioned for use but none was damaged in the incident in question.

As to the severity of the collision, both vessels sustained only minor damage.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions his Department has had with the Metropolitan police about the case for ensuring a stronger enforcement of regulations as to the illegal use of bus lanes by other motor vehicles; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he is having with London councils about an extension of the present provision of bus lanes within the Greater London area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The provision of bus lanes and the enforcement of the regulations applying to them are being considered with the development of our proposals for improving traffic management and parking control in London set out in "Traffic in London". Discussions are under way with the Metropolitan police and the local authorities concerned in connection with the priority route pilot scheme planned in north and east London.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with the Metropolitan police about the removal of any existing bus lanes in central London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has had no recent discussions with the Metropolitan police on this subject.

Roads, Cumbria

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what road improvements are pending between Cumbria and the A1 in the light of the proposed upgrading of the A1; and if he will make it his policy that the upgrading of the A66 will be completed before the A1 upgrading is completed.

Mr. Atkins: On the A66 between Penrith and Scotch Corner there are three improvement schemes planned. Works are expected to begin in September on a dual carriageway scheme between the Bowes bypass, in Durham, and the Cumbria border.

The two other schemes are in preparation. These are between Stainmore and Banksgate and at Temple Sowerby and works are planned to start from mid-1992.

The trans-Pennine study, now being carried out by consultants commissioned by the Department, will consider the need for further improving the road links across the Pennines, including the A66.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State explained in his announcement on 3 July 1990, the upgrading of the A1 from London to Tyneside will inescapably be spread over a number of years. Within this period and with the outcome of the trans-Pennine study the future needs for the A66 trunk road will become more defined.

Merchant Ships

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average age of British merchant ships; and what information he has on the world average age.

Mr. McLoughlin: As at 31 March 1990, the average age of United Kingdom-registered trading vessels was 13·7 years: the average age of all world trading vessels was 12·7 years.

UK Airports and Airspace

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet received the Civil Aviation Authority's advice on United Kingdom airport and airspace capacity, which was commissioned for his Department in July 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The Civil Aviation Authority is publishing today its advice on airport and airspace capacity. Copies of the report are being placed in the Library.

The CAA's work has had two main elements: first, an examination of what additional runway capacity appears to be needed to serve the south-east; and, secondly, an analysis of the technical feasibility, in airspace and air traffic control terms only, of the options for providing that capacity.

The CAA has reassessed its traffic forecasts. It has reached the view that extra runway capacity to serve the south-east will be required around the year 2005.

The authority looked at eight options for further development at existing airports. At my request, it did not consider green field sites. Sir Christopher Tugendhat, the chairman of the CAA, has noted in his covering letter to me that the Government will need to take account of many wider factors before making a choice. He has also acknowledged that the wider view might lead us to reject some locations which, from an airline or air traffic control viewpoint alone, might appear favourable.

The Government are in no way committed to any of the options identified by the CAA. I am acutely aware of the impact of airport development on the environment, on employment, and on local infrastructure. These matters will need to be thoroughly addressed and there will be no question of any major new runway development taking place without full public consultation and a public inquiry into any objections.

As the next step, I propose to establish a working group to examine these factors, and to make recommendations. Representatives from bodies representing local and environmental interests, from airport and airline operators, from the tourism and travel industry, and from Government Departments, will be invited to participate.

In their 1985 White Paper on airports policy, the Government expressed their view that a second runway should not be built at either Stansted or Gatwick. The considerations which led to that view remain compelling.

I shall be reminding the working group of the undertakings which have been given in the case of Gatwick and Stansted and of the acute environmental problems which gave rise to the views which the Government expressed on those airports in the 1985 White Paper. Obviously, the wider considerations the chairman referred to are no less relevant at Heathrow.

In its advice, the CAA has said that it believes that traffic at regional airports will continue to grow rapidly, but that this will not be an effective substitute for additional London area capacity. I shall be asking the working group to assess this conclusion most carefully and to gauge the extent to which regional airports can play a part in meeting the overall growth in demand, into the next century.

Orange Badge Holders

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many orange badge holders were registered in England and Wales for the year 1988; and what is his Department's projected figure for 1991 under the new proposals.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 13 July 1990]: According to information supplied by local authorities, whose task it is to administer the scheme, about 930,000 badges were in circulation in England and Wales in March 1988.

Changes currently proposed to the regulations are designed to ensure that badges are issued only to those people who most need them. The scheme is not being modified with any specific target in mind for the number of badge holders.

Bedford (Traffic Flows)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the most recent traffic flow figures for the A428 and the A6 in Bedford and of the number of vehicles passing over the Prebend street, High street and Newnham street bridges;

(2) what is his Department's estimate of the traffic expected to be taken off the A428 at Bedford following the upgrading of the A45 and the completion of the southern route through Elstow to the M1.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The most recent traffic flows are shown in the table together with the anticipated reduction at the opening of Bedford southern bypass. These figures allow for a transfer of traffic from Bedford to take account of the improvements along the A45 and the completion of the M1-A1 link route.

16 hour Annual Average Weekday Traffic (all vehicles)

Location	1989	Predicted reduction[1]
A428 West of Bedford	21,000	6,500
A428 East of Bedford	18,000	11,500
Longholme Way/ Newnham Avenue Bridge	29,000	15,000
A6 North of Bedford	20,000	—
A6 Town Bridge (High Street)	29,000	—
Prebend Street Bridge	27,000	—

[1] On opening of Bedford southern bypass.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the cost to Bedford for failure to tackle the traffic problems in the town.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The net present value (NPV) of the proposed road improvements, using my Department's standard cost-benefit analysis method, gives a guide to the overall cost. The proportions of value/cost accruing to Bedford alone are not calculated. The NPV of Bedford southern bypass has been estimated at between £33 million and £85 million (at 1988 cost and prices), depending on the rate of economic growth assumed over a 30-year period. The NPV of a proposed improvement to the west of Bedford has not yet been estimated.

Benefits may also accrue from the proposed town centre improvements which are the responsibility of Bedfordshire county council as the local highway authority.

Polegate Bypass

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a decision about the route of the proposed Folkington link on the A27/A259 trunk road which is part of the proposed Polegate bypass.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 July 1990]: My right hon. Friend hopes to be able to make an announcement about the A27 Folkington link extension of the proposed Polegate bypass later this year.

Bypasses

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many towns in the south-east of the size of population of about 80,000 remain to be bypassed.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The towns in the south-east of the size of population of about 80,000 outside the M25 ring, on trunk roads, that do not have a bypass are:

Town	Progress
Bedford/Kempston	At planning stage
Norwich	Construction of the southern bypass has recently started
Dunstable	At planning stage
Hastings Bexhill	At planning stage
Brighton and Hove	Bypass under construction
Worthing	At planning stage
*St. Albans
*Milton Keynes
*Luton
*Southend

Although through traffic passes through the towns marked with an asterisk, the Department has no proposals for a bypass.

Road schemes are not planned around the size of populations, but to assist economic growth by reducing transport costs, to improve the environment by removing through traffic from unsuitable roads in towns and villages and to enhance road safety.

A1

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any proposals for linking developments (a) at Thurleigh and (b) at Poddington airfields with the A1.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 July 1990]: No.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport at how many points the A1 between Newcastle and the border is currently reduced to one-way operation during roadworks; and at how many points it is expected to be restricted to one-way operation during the forthcoming Scottish and English bank holiday weekends.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 July 1990]: There are three points on the A1 between Newcastle upon Tyne and the border which are currently reduced to one-way operation for roadworks. These are at adjacent locations on the Alnwick bypass to allow for road maintenance and the provision of marginal strips, and on the Berwick bypass.

There will be no one-way operation on this section of the A1 during the forthcoming Scottish bank holiday. Maintenance works are to start south of Scremeston in August. Consideration will be given to the possibility of removing one-way operation for the forthcoming English bank holiday weekend.

M20/M2 Improvements

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that major road improvements on the M20, junctions 3 to 5 and 5 to 8, and the M2, junctions 1 to 3, will be completed before the channel tunnel is due to open.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The proposed widening of the M20 between junctions 3 and 5 was added to the roads programme in the May 1989 review. My Department's consultants are investigating possible options with a view to the announcement of a preferred scheme in autumn 1991.

Proposals to improve the M20 between junctions 5 and 8 were considered at a public inquiry earlier this year. Subject to the completion of the statutory procedures it is hoped to start work next summer for completion by the time the channel tunnel is planned to open in 1993.

The timing for the proposed widening of the M2 between junctions 1 and 3 is being reviewed following the addition to the roads programme earlier this year of a scheme to improve the motorway between junctions 3 and 4.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether proposals for upgrading trunk roads to motorways are subject to public inquiry procedure.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 July 1990]: In all cases we will publish orders under section 16 of the Highways Act 1980. If any statutory objections are received we will undertake a public inquiry.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in bringing forward proposals for upgrading trunk roads to motorways, he will give consideration to the need to offer alternative road arrangements or compensation to users of agricultural and other vehicles prohibited from using such roads for local journeys.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 July 1990]: In developing proposals to upgrade trunk roads to motorway the Secretary of State is required to consider the requirements of local planning and agriculture before making a scheme under section 16 of the Highways Act 1980 authorising a motorway. An order cannot be made under section 18 of that Act appropriating an existing road as part of a motorway unless the Secretary of State is satisfied that either another reasonably convenient route is available for prohibited traffic or that no such route is reasonably required for any such traffic. In the case of non-prohibited traffic he would of course also consider making alternative arrangements for persons undertaking local journeys which would formerly have involved the road to be upgraded but which could not in future be made.

Entitlement to compensation is governed by statute and will depend on the circumstances of each case.

Newly Qualified Drivers

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider the introduction of P-plates to indicate that a motor vehicle is driven by a newly qualified driver; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 July 1990]: Yes, I am in the process of so doing.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Frans Buitelaar (Farms) Ltd.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has made an assessment of the animal welfare and human health implications of the intensive husbandry practices associated with the use of feedlots at Frans Buitelaar (Farms) Ltd. premises at Claygate farm in Lincolnshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Farm Animal Welfare Council has examined the feedlot system. Its conclusion was that it does not present a welfare risk as long as certain sensible precautions are taken. The state veterinary service has inspected the farm referred to and found no evidence of any unnecessary pain or unnecessary distress in contravention of the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968. I am not aware of any human health risk associated with the feedlot husbandry system.

Live Animals (Travel)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's current policy in relation to EEC proposals to restrict the time that live animals may be required to travel without rest; and if he will make it his policy to support a reduction below 12 hours.

Mr. Maclean: The Government will support proposals to fix maximum intervals for the transport of animals without rest, food and water. These must relate to the welfare requirements of individual types of animal rather than be set at a fixed period to cover all animals.

Live Animals (Export)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will invoke article 36 of the treaty of Rome to prevent the export of live animals where those animals are likely to suffer transportation and slaughter conditions inferior to those operating in this country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I am advised that article 36 of the treaty cannot be invoked where, as in this case, there are Community measures on the subject in question. The Government however already prohibit the export of live animals for slaughter or for further fattening to countries which do not implement standards equivalent to those laid down in Community directives on the protection of animals during international transport and on the pre-slaughter stunning of animals.

Caribbean Bananas

Mr Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the letter of 25 June to the hon. Member for Oxford, East, concerning banana exports from the Caribbean after 1992, whether price guarantees are included in his assurance of preferential access arrangements for Caribbean banana exporters.

Mr. Curry: Our objective is an effective preferential arrangement after 1992, which will enable a continuing flow of bananas from the Caribbean into the Community market, in line with our commitments under the Lomé convention. Current preferential access to the United Kingdom for Caribbean bananas does not guarantee prices. Commission proposals for post-1992 banana trade have not yet emerged. We cannot predict the mechanism by which preferential access will be protected.

Food from Devon

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to food from Devon to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Curry: Yes. I understand the exhibition will be on display for one week from 5 November.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, Official Report, 10 July, column 109, when he expects to be content that welfare-related problems will have been eliminated from the emerging alternative systems and that these systems are commercially viable.

Mr. Maclean: Some alternative systems are already being installed successfully. The proposals now under discussion in the Council of Ministers provide for the Commission to report by 1 January 1993 on the welfare of sows kept in different degrees of confinement or in groups, and to submit appropriate proposals. I am hopeful that any remaining problems with alternatives to stall and tether systems will have been resolved by that time.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, Official Report, 10 July, column 109, whether he will phase out the existing stall and tether systems if the alternatives prove not to be commercially viable.

Mr. Maclean: I have made it clear that legislation requiring major changes to husbandry systems should be adopted on a Community basis. The action to be taken, should the Community not agree to the phasing out of stall and tether systems, would need to be considered at the time.

Fur Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he intends to take regarding the recommendations made by the Farm Animal Welfare Council on 4 April 1989 concerning mink and fox farming.

Mr. Maclean: The Farm Animal Welfare Council recommended that Agriculture Ministers should require that the state veterinary service carry out effective monitoring of standards of management on these farms. This is being done.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will amend the rules of the farm woodland scheme to permit farmers to make more than one application per holding.

Mr. Gummer: Existing participants in the farm woodland scheme have shown interest in increasing their plantings under the scheme. The rule limiting them to one application per holding is preventing that. Agriculture Ministers have therefore decided from today to abolish the rule and to permit additional applications to be made up to the limit of 40 hectares per agricultural unit. I am pleased with the continuing interest in this innovative scheme which should bring environmental benefits for future generations.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Visits

Q52. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to pay an official visit to Scotland in the near future.

The Prime Minister: I hope to visit Scotland later this year.

Q78. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to make an official visit to the Channel tunnel site.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Defence Review

Q65. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration has been given to the role of the security services in her Government's present options for change review; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The options for change studies are concerned with the future structure and deployment of our armed forces.

Bed-and-Breakfast Hotels

Q70. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what action she is taking to ensure that children in bed-and-breakfast hotels are living in safety and in receipt of full-time education when of school age.

The Prime Minister: Local authorities have considerable powers to control safety standards of houses in multiple occupation, which include bed-and-breakfast hotels. These powers have recently been strengthened. Responsibility for ensuring that all children of compulsory school age receive a proper education, including those in bed-and-breakfast accommodation, rests, under the Education Acts, with parents, schools and local education authorities. The Government are concerned to reduce the need for local authorities to use unsatisfactory bed-and-breakfast hotels and are making available, over the next two years, £250 million to local authorities and housing associations in London and the south-east, specifically to get homeless families out of such accommodation and into permanent homes.

Afghanistan

Q198. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if she will meet the President of Afghanistan to discuss renewal of diplomatic relations between the two countries; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to meet General Najibullah. Diplomatic relations between Britain and Afghanistan have not been broken.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act her office has received; what was her estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration she is giving to the subject access fee charged by her office as a result; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The total number of subject access requests received by my office is one. No specific estimate on the number of requests expected was made at the time as the amount of information held on computers in my office was small. The subject access fee charged was minimal to cover the cost of the work involved. The fee is set by the Cabinet Office, which has the responsibility for Data Protection Act matters for my office.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report her response to the letter of 15 June from Dr. Peter Jung and expert colleagues in minerals, molluscs and entomology of the natur-historisches museum in Basel, about whether major collections can be actively cared for under proposals such as those for the natural history museum in respect of expert staff; and what action she proposes to take to discharge obligations in respect of scientists' work in building up collections to the benefit of smaller museums throughout the world.

The Prime Minister: I understand that my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts will shortly be placing a copy of the Government's response to Dr. Peter Jung's correspondence in the Library of the House.

The Minister for the Arts has asked the Government's chief scientific adviser, who is in discussion with the natural history museum, to keep him informed of the museum's position in relation to the United Kingdom science base. The Minister for the Arts will also be meeting the chairman and director of the museum to discuss the corporate plan and the wider issues.

British Airways

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will raise at her next meeting with the President of the Commission of the European Community his officials' search of the private offices of the chairman and chief executive of British Airways and examining of their private papers and personal bank statements.

The Prime Minister: I am advised that the visit was made by prior arrangement with the company and a legal representative of British Airways vetted documents (for relevance to the investigation and for possible legal privilege) before the Commission officials read them.

Engagements

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement concerning the use by the Crown prosecution service of lawyer agents in magistrates courts.

The Attorney-General: In the long term, as and when lawyer strength permits, it would be the aim of the Crown prosecution service (CPS) to employ agents to cover only 5 to 10 per cent. of court sessions.

The number of sessions (half days) in magistrates courts undertaken by counsel and solicitors in private practice on behalf of the CPS in 1989-90 was 138,000. This represented 38 per cent. of all sessions undertaken by the CPS in the magistrates courts. The information given in annex 9 of the CPS evidence to the Home Affairs Committee was incorrect: the data had been wrongly interpreted. The percentage of court sessions covered by agents has remained at 38 per cent. for both 1988-89 and 1989-90. The revised figures are:

(a) Court sessions covered by agents

	National totals
1988-89	130,643
1989-90	138,066

(b) Percentage court sessions covered by agents

	Per cent.
1988-89	38
1989-90	38

(c) Expenditure on agents fees

1988-89	14,793,896
1989-90	16,473,527

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Order Paper

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he is considering to review the format of the Order Paper.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is understood that, once the decisions have been taken on the recommendations contained in the Procedure Committee's report on oral questions, the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee will be prepared to consider a review of the format of the Order Paper. The hon. Member and any others with a contribution to make on this issue should send their comments to the Sub-Committee Chairman.

Procedure Committee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the reports of the Procedure Committee, published since 1983-84, which have yet to be dealt with on the Floor of the House; and when he expects them to be brought forward for decision.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The following are the reports from the Procedure Committee, published since 1983-84, which have neither been debated on a substantive motion nor "tagged" as relevant to a general debate on procedure: First Report (1988-89) HC 290 ("Conduct of Members in the Chamber and the Alleged Abuse of Parliamentary Privilege"); First Report (1989-90) HC 379 ("Oral Questions"). I hope to be able to give the House an opportunity in the near future to reach a decision on the report on oral questions. There are no immediate plans for a debate on a substantive motion on any of the reports from the Procedure Committee on which the House has not yet reached a specific conclusion.

NORTHERN IRELAND

North Eastern Education and Library Board

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary were assigned to investigate allegations of irregularities in North Eastern education and library board contracting from June 1986 until August 1987; what was the level of qualification and experience within the Royal Ulster Constabulary of each officer involved in this investigation; how many man-hours were spent by each investigating officer on the assignment; how many witnesses were interviewed by Royal Ulster Constabulary officers; how many miles were travelled by Royal Ulster Constabulary officers investigating the allegations from June 1986 until 31 March 1987; and whether, in the period 1 April 1987 until August 1987, the investigating officers completed reports on hours worked, miles travelled and so on, throughout the period of the investigation.

Mr. Cope: The Chief Constable has informed me that two officers from the RUC's serious crime squad were assigned to this investigation assisted as necessary by other officers and that all the officers involved were appropriately qualified for their work. I regret that the other particulars requested are not readily available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

UNESCO

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of expenditure of funds saved by United Kingdom withdrawal from the United Nations Educational, Science and Cultural Organisation and figures of how these funds were used in the main area of United Nations Educational, Science and Cultural Organisation activity for the financial years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90; and if he will ensure that the United Nations Educational, Science and Cultural Organisation's savings will continue to be spent in the same manner until Her Majesty's Government decide to return to membership of the United Nations Educational, Science and Cultural Organisation.

Mrs. Chalker: Figures for expenditure of funds saved by United Kingdom's withdrawal from UNESCO for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are:

My hon. Friend may rest assured that in planning our aid programme priorities we will continue to take full account of the appropriate allocation of the funds saved by our withdrawal from UNESCO.

Epidemics

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the Overseas Development Administration has given to setting up a global early warning system for new epidemics at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine.

Mrs. Chalker: None; responsibility for global monitoring of notifiable diseases rests with the World Health Organisation. The London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine is an international centre for epidemiology and public health, and works closely with the WHO. The ODA has recently agreed a package of assistance (£11 million over the next five years) for nine new research and training programmes in public health and tropical medicine at the school. These programmes will strengthen the school's (and the ODA's) capacity to provide practical advice to international agencies and Governments in developing countries on all aspects of international health policy.

Nicaragua

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will be in a position to make a decision in respect of further bilateral technical aid to Nicaragua.

Mrs. Chalker: No further decisions are needed. The modest technical co-operation programme which I announced on 2 April in a reply to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) at column 415 will be a continuing one.

Rain Forests

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to link British aid packages to agreements with the recipient Governments to limit the destruction of the rain forests.

Mrs. Chalker: While specific environmental conditions will often be appropriate at the project level, we do not favour conditionality based on a country's overall environmental record. We believe institution building and strengthening capacity to care for the environment and support for activities which help recipient countries limit rain forest destruction are more likely to be effective.

Women

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in ranked order the top 10 countries making financial contributions to the United Nations development fund for women.

Mrs. Chalker: The 10 highest Government pledges of financial contributions to UNIFEM in 1990 were:

1. Finland
2. United States of America
3. Netherlands
4. Federal Republic of Germany
5. Sweden
6. Italy
7. Australia
8. United Kingdom
9. Denmark
10. Belgium

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the work of the Overseas Development Administration towards achieving the aims of the Nairobi "Forward Looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women" declaration.

Mrs. Chalker: ODA's policy is to take account in all its activities of the role of women as agents and beneficiaries of development aid. Our efforts focus on designing projects to ensure that these benefit women in developing countries; finding ways of increasing the numbers of women participating in training programmes both in the United Kingdom and in developing countries; trying to overcome constraints to the recruitment of women on ODA contracts in developing countries and improving ODA staff's understanding of women-in-development issues.

The ODA encourages aid recipient Governments to adopt policies which would fulfil the aims of the Nairobi forward-looking strategies and has encouraged other donor agencies, including the World bank and the European Commission, to improve their performance on women-in-development issues. Britain plays an active role in the OECD's development aid committee women-in-development expert group and has contributed over £900,000 to the United Nations development fund for women (UNIFEM) since it was established.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of nominations by developing countries under the technical co-operation training programme to study in Britain were for women in each year since 1980.

Mrs. Chalker: No central record is kept of the number of nominees for awards for women under the technical co-operation training programme (TCTP) but the number of women arriving to take up awards in this country since 1985 (earlier figures are not available) and as a percentage of the total is as follows:

Financial year	Woman TCTP arrivals	Total percentage of TCTP arrivals
1985-86	698	14·5
1986-87	964	16·7
1987-88	1,065	17·0
1988-89	1,122	17·8
1989-90	1,115	19·2

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of the Minister for Overseas Development of 9 July, Official Report, column 20, what is the number and percentage of women participating in Overseas Development Administration training programmes in developing countries.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1988, the latest date for which analysed figures are available, 2,665 women students and trainees were on courses financed directly or indirectly by the ODA, excluding some in-country training. This was 19 per cent. of the total.

Uganda

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Minister for Overseas Development holds regular discussions with the Government of Uganda.

Mrs. Chalker: The Minister for Overseas Development and her officials have regular discussions with President Museveni, Ugandan Ministers and officials on all aspects of our aid relationship.

Forestry

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many forestry projects have been agreed with Latin American, Caribbean, African and Pacific countries.

Mrs. Chalker: Bilateral forestry projects, research projects and projects financed by ODA under the joint funding scheme in the regions named are as follows:

	Number
Latin America	17
Caribbean	5
Africa	59
Pacific	7

Vietnam

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the European Economic Community regarding aid to Vietnam.

Mrs. Chalker: We have regular contacts with our European Community partners at both ministerial and official level on the question of aid to Vietnam.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Sanctions

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what factors he takes into consideration when considering the circumstances in which it is appropriate to apply trade sanctions against any country.

Mr. Redwood: The imposition of trade sanctions is a matter for the Community as a whole. In considering whether such action is appropriate, the Government must have regard not only to the reasons why sanctions may be necessary but also to their likely impact and effectiveness and to the response of others. In addition, we need to consider the broader implications for our foreign, trade and competition policy.

Post Office Users National Council

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what response he proposes to make to the latest report by Post Office Users National Council and if he will review the Post Office monopoly as it may be affected by its recommendations.

Mr. Forth: I have noted with interest the comments contained in the annual report of the Post Office Users National Council and I have written to the chairman thanking him for the valuable work done by POUNC on behalf of all postal users. The Post Office's letter monopoly is kept under review, but no decisions have been taken.

Management Training

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the amount of money spent by his Department on the management charter initiative for management training and the anticipated amount to be spent in each of the next three financial years, in real terms.

Mr. Forth: My Department agreed in principle in 1988 that we should offer support of up to a total of £2·5 million over a period of up to five years to cover the setting up of the management charter initiative (MCI). Funding for each financial year is the subject of separate negotiation. In the first financial year 1988-89 £500,000 was spent and in 1989-90 £500,000 was spent. The Government are presently considering MCI's business plan for 1990-91 and beyond, and a decision on future funding will be made shortly. Responsibility for this funding will be transferred to the Department of Employment from 1 April 1991.

Textiles

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next proposes to meet representatives of the textile industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend's predecessor met representatives of the textile industry on 12 June. No date has been fixed for a further meeting, but Ministers and officials are in regular contact with the industry.

Accounting Practices

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received (a) on the open marketing of off-balance sheet financing schemes and (b) calling for the curbing of such schemes; and from where.

Mr. Redwood: I replied to questions from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) about off-balance sheet finance in April, but have not received any subsequent representations. The extension of the definition of a subsidiary undertaking in the Companies Act 1989 will bring on to the balance sheet a number of schemes which would previously have been off-balance sheet. The issue of off-balance sheet finance is also being addressed by the Accounting Standards Committee, which published an exposure draft in May entitled "Reflecting the substance of transactions in assets and liabilities".

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the different treatment of (a) research and (b) development expenditure in company accounts.

Mr. Redwood: The issue of disclosure of research and development expenditure was discussed during the passage of the Companies Bill last year. I am not aware of any representations since then on the treatment of such expenditure in company accounts.

EC-Gulf Trade

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department plans to make an assessment of the effects on the United Kingdom petrochemical industry of a free trade agreement between the European Community and the states of the Gulf Co-operation Council.

Mr. Redwood: The Government have consulted widely with industries interested in the forthcoming negotiations, including the petrochemical industry, and remain ready to consider further views.

Fur Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of fur and fur product exports from Britain in (a) 1987-88, (b) 1988-89 and (c) 1989-90; and what proportion in each case was accounted for by re-export.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The available information is in the table. Data on re-exports could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

United Kingdom exports of fur and fur products

Year	Value (£ million)
1 April 1987—31 March 1988	130·3
1 April 1988—31 March 1989	99·4
1 April 1989—31 March 1990	86·8

Sources: Industrial Economics Indicator (IEI) Database Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom (March 1990).
Classification: Standard Industrial Classification (SIC 80)—Activity Heading 4560.
Definition: Sorting, dressing and dyeing furs and the manufacture of fur apparel and other fur goods.

Financial Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the names of all companies or firms investigated or suspended since the implementation of the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 16 July 1990]: Statistical information on investigations is included in the report of the Trade and Industry Select Committee on company investigations and the annual report of the Securities and Investments Board also includes similar information on the use of their enforcement powers. Suspensions by SIB and the SROs are made public by these bodies. Investigations are confidential, as they may reveal that the firm or persons being invesitgated is innocent and publication of suspicion would be damaging.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all the reports published on investigations carried out under the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 16 July 1990]: Only reports of inspectors appointed under section 94 of the Financial Services Act can be published. No such reports have been published. The Secretary of State's powers under section 94 have been transferred to the Securities and Investments Board.

Auditors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of cases since 1980 when his Department has taken court action against auditors criticised in Companies Act inspection reports.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 16 July 1990]: None. Copies of initial reports are passed to the auditors' professional body for consideration.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

National Curriculum

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when examples of test papers under the new curriculum for mathematics, science and English will be made available to teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: Prototype standard assessment tasks (SATs) were piloted in a sample of primary schools this summer. In the light of the evaluation of that pilot, SATs for the purpose of statutory assessment will be developed and made available to teachers in spring 1991.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the guidelines for making reports to parents in assessments under the new curriculum for school reports will be available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Education (Individual Pupils' Achievements) (Information) Regulations 1990 were laid by my right hon. Friend on 10 July and come into force from 1 August 1990. Copies are available in the Library.

Primary Schools (Admissions)

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a commencement order in respect of admissions to primary schools in accordance with sections 26 to 32 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has not yet reached a decision on when the more open enrolment provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988 should be extended to primary schools. When a decision has been reached, a commencement order will be made as necessary at the appropriate time.

School Closures

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the closure of four comprehensive schools in the borough of Wandsworth.

Mrs. Rumbold: None. I understand that the authority is to consult locally on school reorganisation proposals which include the closure of four secondary schools.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if students training to qualify as physiotherapists and other vocational qualifications registered under the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960 are eligible for a student loan.

Mr. Jackson: The Education (Student Loans) Act, together with the regulations recently approved by Parliament, make the loan available to full-time students who meet the personal eligibility requirements and who attend courses of the type prescribed by schedule 1 of the Act at educational institutions receiving support from public funds. At other institutions such courses would have to be specifically designated.

Universities and Polytechnics

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson), Official Report, 10 July, column 164, if he will list the distinctive characteristics in respect of universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: The distinctive characteristics of polytechnics compared to universities include a greater emphasis on: teaching compared to research; applied research rather than other research; vocational, professional and industrially based courses; sub-degree and part-time courses; provision for a broader range of students; and meeting the particular needs of local and regional employers.

Higher Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of all visits made to independent institutions of higher education by Her Majesty's inspectors, including accompanied visits, showing the name of the institution, the circumstances by which the visit came to be made, the purpose of the visit, its results, its cost and by whom this was borne, for the period 1986 to date.

Mr. Jackson: To answer the hon. Member's question would involve a scrutiny of some 2,600 HMI diaries for each of the past four years. This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information Technology

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy in respect of the recommendations of the expert group on information technology in initial teacher training, which reported in March 1989.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The recommendations of the expert group which were for action by the Government have been implemented. The revised criteria for the accreditation of initial teacher training courses, published last November, require that initial teacher training institutions should provide all students with a specified minimum IT capability. In addition, we commissioned the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council to undertake a survey of the IT resources available to initial teacher training institutions. The survey was carried out at the end of last year and the results are being analysed. A number of institutions have commented on the expert group's report, at the Department's invitation. The Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education and Her Majesty's inspectorate will be monitoring the action taken by institutions in response to the revised criteria and the recommendations of the report.

Crookham Court School (Sexual Abuse)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration he has given to the result of the case concluded at Reading on 12 July concerning sexual abuse at Crookham Court school in Berkshire; and if he will consider the introduction of new legislative provisions governing the operation of private schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Under new provisions to be introduced by virtue of the Children Act 1989, section 71 of the Education Act 1944 will be amended to provide an additional ground for complaint with respect to independent schools. This additional power will be brought into effect where there is failure by a proprietor of an independent school to safeguard and promote the welfare of any child provided with accommodation by the school. The Act will also enable local social services departments to enter and inspect independent schools to determine whether the proprietor is fulfilling his welfare duties. These provisions of the Children Act will be implemented in October 1991.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received regarding unsolicited telephone calls requesting personal information made to members of the public by companies authorised by his Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department has received only one representation regarding unsolicited telephone calls requesting personal information.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the topics of interest to his Department which were regarded as suitable for commercial public opinion surveys by means of unsolicited telephone calls.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Topics considered suitable for commercial public opinon surveys by means of unsolicited telephone calls in the last three years were:

Calls to employers:

1. Employers' sick pay and disability pension.
2. Maternity rights survey (a).
3. Awareness of the social security advice line to employers.
4. Awareness of national insurance and statutory sick pay information materials.
5. Check of receipt of 1989 national insurance tables.

Calls to the general public:

Awareness and opinions of households in Berkshire of people with disabilities.

Note: Survey jointly sponsored by DSS, Department of Employment and the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many surveys based on unsolicited telephone calls have been commissioned by his Department in the last three years; how many commercial organisations were engaged; and at what cost.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Details of surveys based on unsolicited telephone calls commissioned by the Department in the last three years are contained in the table.

	£000
Number of surveys	6
Number of commercial organisations involved[1]	6
Total cost[2]	274·5

[1] Includes "not for profit" organisations.

[2] The cost is the total cost of the study of which the survey was a part.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he will give to a member of the public who receives an unsolicited telephone call from a commercial company claiming it was authorised to collect personal information on behalf of his Department on how to deal with that call.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Commercial companies authorised by the Department to conduct telephone surveys among the general public are required to give a telephone number which people may ring to check the validity of the research. A member of the public who has any reason to doubt the validity of a call should report the fact to the Department. Additionally, they have the right not to take part in any survey.

Transitional Payments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants were receiving transitional additions in April 1988, 1989 and 1990; how many of these were pensioners; and how many were receiving income support for mortgage interest payments.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The table shows the number of income support claimants receiving normal statutory transitional additions immediately after the introduction of income support in April 1988 and the uprating in April 1989, together with the number of pensioners, and of claimants receiving income support for mortgage interest which are included in those totals. Corresponding figures, but excluding boarders and those living in residential care and nursing homes, immediately after the uprating in April 1990 are estimates based upon the results for 1988 and 1989 and estimated changes since then.

	May 1988	May 1989	May 1990
(a) Claimants receiving a transitional addition	1,587,000	497,000	130,000
(b) Claimants included in (a) receiving a pensioner, enhanced pensioner or higher pensioner premium	710,000	241,000	64,000
(c) Claimants included in (a) with housing costs including mortgage interest	138,000	25,000	5,000

These figures are derived from the Annual Statistical Enquiries of May 1988 and May 1989, copies of which are in the Library.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many full-time students in receipt of discretionary awards, who do not qualify for a student loan, will lose entitlement to social security and housing benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are estimated to be some 48,000 discretionary award holders, but not all such students are excluded from receipt of a student loan.

It is not possible to estimate the number of discretionary award holders currently receiving benefit as the social security data collected do not differentiate between types of student claimant. However, those students in vulnerable groups, including students with dependent children, disabled students and those students in further education under the age of 19, will retain entitlement to income support and housing benefit.

Those full-time discretionary award holders who lose entitlement to income support, unemployment benefit and housing benefit will be able to turn to the access funds for further financial assistance.

Elderly People (Funding)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any proposals to increase the funding of support for the elderly in their homes especially for those living alone.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: All benefit levels are considered for uprating each year and final decisions for next April will be taken in the autumn.

Pensions

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has any proposals to increase the basic state pension to one third of average male earnings for a single person, and one half of average male earnings for a couple where the partner's pension is dependent on her husband's contributions;

(2) if he has any proposals to introduce a basic non-means-tested state pension of not less than one third and one half of national male earnings for a single person and married couple, respectively.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government have honoured their commitment to maintain the value of the state retirement pension in line with prices. A link with earnings is not the key factor in improving pensioners' incomes. What matters most to pensioners is the value of their total income, from whatever source. The success of our policies is demonstrated by the over 31 per cent. real terms growth in pensioners' average total net income between 1979 and 1987.

OPCS Reports

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made to date in reproducing the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' survey reports in braille.

Mr. Scott: I can confirm that work on reproducing the OPCS survey reports in Braille is continuing and that the report entitled "Financial Circumstances of Families with a Disabled Child" will be available shortly. A copy will be placed in the Library and additional copies can be obtained from Social Survey Division, OPCS, St. Catherines House, 10 Kingsway, London WC2B 6JP. As each braille report is published, a copy will be placed in the Library.

Widows' Benefits

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of repealing those parts of the overlapping benefits regulations which prevent the payment of other benefits to widows receiving (a) a widowed mother's allowance and (b) a widow's pension; and what would be the cost if the repeal were limited to the payment to widows of sickness, invalidity and unemployment benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 2 July 1990]: The cost in relation to widowed mother's allowance is estimated to be approximately £4·3 million and in relation to widow's pension £63·7 million. Were the repeal to be limited to payment of sickness, invalidity and unemployment benefit, the cost in relation to widowed mother's allowance is estimated to be approximately £1·9 million and in relation to widow's pension £9·7 million.

Note: Widow's pension is not payable beyond age 65. Widows aged 65 and over receive either a widow's retirement pension or a pension based wholly or partly on their own contributions.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Antarctic

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will announce his proposals to protect the Antarctic environment for the special Antarctic treaty consultative meeting to be held in November in Santiago.

Mr. Maude: When consultations with our Antarctic treaty partners have been completed.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the purpose of the liability protocol meeting on the minerals convention.

Mr. Maude: To explore and discuss all proposals relating to article 8(7) of the convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now support the proposal of the New Zealand Government for an environmental protocol to the Antarctic treaty.

Mr. Maude: We favour an environmental protocol to the Antarctic treaty.

The Prime Minister of New Zealand has said that New Zealand will work with Antarctic treaty partners on a draft of such a protocol for presentation to the Santiago meeting in November. We look forward to seeing the draft.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from non-governmental organisations calling for Antarctica to be declared a wilderness reserve.

Mr. Maude: We have received representations from the World Wide Fund for Nature, from Wildlife Link and from the Women's Institute.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding New Zealand's decision to set aside ratification of the convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities; if Her Majesty's Government will reconsider ratifying the convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We are aware of the New Zealand Prime Minister's press statement of 6 July. We continue to support the Antarctic minerals convention as a means of ensuring protection for the Antarctic environment.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give consideration to the establishment of a long-term legally binding moratorium on minerals mining in Antarctica; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Antarctic minerals convention provides for a binding moratorium on mineral exploration and development which would remain in force until such time as the convention's commission decided otherwise by consensus. We fully support such a moratorium and therefore the early entry into force of the convention.

Gifts

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, Official Report, 9 July, column 47, how many gifts received from foreign powers in 1989 (a) were placed on the inventory of a British mission, (b) were placed on the inventory of his Department, (c) were given to external institutions, (d) were retained by Ministers, (e) were retained by civil servants, (f) were bought by Ministers, (g) were bought by civil servants and (h) were sold at public auction.

Mr. Maude: The disposal of gifts received from foreign powers in 1989 is as follows:

	Number
(a) Were placed on the inventory of a British mission	2
(b) Were placed on the inventory of his Department	7
(c) Were given to external institutions	3
(d) Were retained by Ministers	22
(e) Were retained by civil servants	13
(f) Were bought by Ministers	10
(g) Were bought by civil servants	9
(h) Were sold at public auction	None

This does not include gifts of a minor nature.

Cambodia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has concerning the validity of reports that Pol Pot is currently inside Cambodia;

(2) what information he has concerning the current whereabouts of Pol Pot.

Mr. Maude: There are no reliable reports of Pol Pot's whereabouts.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will instruct Her Majesty's Government's representative at the United Nations to oppose recognition by the United Nations of any Cambodian delegation that includes members of the Khmer Rouge.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 11 July.

Political Parties (Funding)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the information available to him on the systems of state funding for political parties in the Group of Seven countries.

Mr. Maude: The following is a summary of information currently available:

(a) Canada

The Treasury reimburses registered political parties 22·5 per cent. of allowable election expenses and parliamentary candidates 50 per cent. of expenses up to a maximum of 50 per cent. of the total permitted, subject to certain conditions of expenditure incurred and votes received. Political contributions to candidates and political parties benefit from income tax credits. Parties in Parliament receive funds for research staff budgets, office supplies and certain support services.

(b) France

Under new legislation parties will receive funding for legislative and presidential election campaigns, subject to conditions of parliamentary representation, contesting at least 75 constituencies and opening their accounts to scrutiny. Funds will be allocated proportionate to the number of seats held in Parliament and the number of votes won in the first rounds of the most recent legislative elections.

(c) FRG

At general elections each party is reimbursed DM 5·00 per eligible voter voting for it, subject to its publishing its accounts. The reimbursement may not exceed half a party's revenues, but under certain conditions deductions may be made from the next reimbursement, and parties may receive advances of reimbursement. Similar arrangements apply to elections to the European Parliament and in the Federal Laender.

(d) Italy

Subject to certain conditions of parliamentary representation or votes received at the most recent general election and to opening their accounts, parties receive an annual subvention. The amount is calculated by complex rules reflecting recent electoral performance. In 1990 the largest grants were to the Christian Democrats (25·7 million lire), Communists (17·8 million) and Socialists (11·6 million).

(e) Japan

There is no formal state funding of political parties but political groups represented in the Diet receive a monthly sum of 605,000 yen per Dietman.

(f) United States

For presidential elections, a voluntary public financing system provides, subject to certain conditions, matching funds to candidates in primaries and to party nominees in the general election and flat grants to parties for their nominating conventions. (In 1988 the national spending limit for pre-nomination campaigns within which matching funds were available was 23·1 million dollars plus 4·6 million dollars for fund-raising; the maximum subsidy for the two major parties' nominating conventions was 9·2 million dollars; and the maximum subsidy for the general election (subject to no additional funds being raised or spent by the candidate) was 46·1 million dollars. As for congressional elections, until recently no public funding was available, but some states are beginning to experiment with a matching fund system. Some states and cities provide public funding for state and municipal elections; others do not.

Kenya

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Kenya about human rights in that country, and the recent arrest without charge of Mr. Kenneth Matsla and Mr. Charles Ruha.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are real causes for concern including the detention of critics of the Government which are bound to worry the friends of Kenya. The Kenyan Government are well aware of our views on these matters.

Gulf Co-operation Council

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet representatives of the Gulf Co-operation Council; and what matters he will discuss.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs expects to meet representatives of the Gulf Co-operation Council in the margins of the UN General Assembly in New York in September. He last met such representatives at an EC/GCC ministerial meeting in Muscat on 17 March 1990. Among the matters discussed were the implementation of the EC/GCC first-stage agreement and forthcoming negotiations for a second-stage agreement, as well as regional and international issues.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has seen the text of the European Parliament's resolution on a possible free trade agreement between the European Community and the states of the Gulf Co-operation Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We have seen the text of a resolution adopted by the European Parliament on 13 July concerning a possible free trade agreement with the Gulf Co-operation Council.

The Commission will shortly begin negotiations with the GCC for a second-stage EC/GCC agreement, based on a free trade arrangement. We have consulted widely with United Kingdom industries interested in these negotiations and believe that the Commission's negotiating mandate takes into account essential United Kingdom interests.

ENERGY

Community Insulation Projects

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many homes were insulated by community insulation projects in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The number of homes treated by the projects in 1988 and 1989 were some 159,000 and 134,000 respectively.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much was spent on the promotion of energy efficiency (a) in 1979 and (b) in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Expenditure by my Department on energy efficiency programmes in 1979-80 was £2·4 million. The provision for expenditure by the Energy Efficiency Office in 1989-90 was £15 million.

EC-Gulf Trade

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has made any assessment of the effects on the United Kingdom offshore sector of a free trade agreement between the European Community and the states of the Gulf Co-operation Council.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Assessment of the effects of a free trade agreement between the European Community and Gulf Co-operation Council is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. However, any agreement is expected to have little effect on the United Kingdom offshore sector.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to review the upper limits on direct sales to large electricity consumers by the present generating companies.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those companies which have been given second-tier licences as electricity suppliers.

Mr. Baldry: The Director General of Electricity Supply has a statutory responsibility for maintaining the register of all licences granted.

Standing Charges

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek powers to abolish standing charges on domestic electricity supplies for all old age pensioners.

Mr. Baldry: No. Pricing decisions are a matter for the regional electricity supply companies.

ENVIRONMENT

Bathing Waters

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by which date all designated beaches will be prohibited from having untreated sewage discharged into their bathing waters.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 5 March at column 452 that in general all substantial discharges of sewage should be treated at a sewage treatment works and that this investment programme should be completed as soon as practicable. Discussions are now being held with the water industry about implementation of this policy.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to bring all Britain's beaches up to European Community blue flag level; and by what date he hopes to achieve this.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 5 March at column 452 that, in general, sewage will be treated before discharge. The cost of doing this was estimated to be £1·5 billion. The programme, which is being integrated with the £1·4 billion investment programme to bring the remaining bathing waters up to the directive's standards, is expected to last for 10 years. It will be for local authorities and other proprietors of beaches to capitalise upon this and bring their beaches up to the requisite standards.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met leaders of local authority associations to discuss alternatives to the community charge.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend and I last met the leaders of the local authority associations on 5 July at the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance. The leaders did not raise the question of alternatives to the community charge.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average reduction in poll tax per head for each additional £1 million support for each local authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The effect on community charges of an extra £1 million of support for an area depends upon the budget decisions of the local authorities in that area. Prudent authorities would pass the support on to their charge payers in the form of reduced community charges. Others might increase spending, giving no benefit to charge payers in their area.

Nitrogen Oxides

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the research which he has commissioned into the control of nitrogen oxides technologies; what reports he has received; and if he will place copies in the Library.

Mr. Trippier: My Department commissioned a report on acid emission abatement technologies from the Fellowship of Engineering, a major part of which deals with technologies for reducing emissions of nitrogen oxides. The report was placed in the Library. As part of its work for my Department, the Warren Spring laboratory is making a study of technology for reducing emissions of nitrogen oxides from cars and its report will be placed in the Library.

My Department recently commissioned an evaluation of NOx abatement technologies for large combustion plant. A draft report has been received and is being considered.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what grant in aid the National Rivers Authority is receiving for its laboratory investment programme; what assessment has been made of the impact of running costs in such a programme as against contracting out these services; and what is his policy towards funding such work;

(2) what cost-benefit analysis was undertaken before the National Rivers Authority reversed the original intention of contracting out analytical requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The National Rivers Authority may claim grant in aid in respect of that part of its laboratory investment programme which is not financed by cash transfers from water and sewerage undertakers. The total net cost of the programme is not yet known, but amounted to some £2 million in the period 1 September 1989 to 31 March this year.

In those regions where water authorities transferred one of their laboratories to the authority a full cost-benefit analysis was not thought appropriate. In those regions where new laboratories were to be provided and where contracting services were, or might have been, available a comparative cost analysis was carried out to assess whether building new laboratories was the best way of providing the required capability.

I am satisfied with the decisions reached on the authority's ownership of its own independent laboratory facilities and that grant in aid should support their provision.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of new laboratory facilities at Reading for the National Rivers Authority; and what is the estimated annual revenue cost of undertaking analysis in-house as against contracting out.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The estimated capital cost of the National Rivers Authority's new Reading laboratories is £3·62 million. The estimated annual revenue cost of using it to undertake analysis in-house is £1·02 million, compared with a contracting-out cost of £1·31 million.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the National Rivers Authority is able to compete for and perform any third-party work.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Section 145 (2) of the Water Act 1989 gives the National Rivers Authority power to carry out work for other public bodies. It also has general powers to do anything which, in the opinion of the authority, is calculated to facilitate, or is conducive or incidental to, the carrying out of the authority's functions.

Gas Emissions

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department collects on the emission of gases damaging to the ozone layer from (a) aircraft, (b) road vehicles and (c) other sources; and what the most recent statistics indicate in respect of such emissions.

Mr. Trippier: The approach of the Montreal protocol, and that of the European Community, is to control the supply to the market, rather than the emission, of ozone-depleting substances. We do not therefore need to collect data on emissions.

Avon Dam

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current water volume stored by the Avon dam; and what is his current projection of when the volume will drop to 600 megalitres.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: South West Water Services Ltd. has recently reported that the current stored-water volume in the Avon reservoir is 1,232 megalitres and that the reservoir is 96 per cent. full. The projection requested is not held centrally.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts are made by his Department to quantify the total amounts of low-level radioactive waste being dumped in London.

Mr. Trippier: Radioactive waste may be disposed of only if an authorisation has been issued by HMIP under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. The Department does not maintain a central record of the quantities of low-level radioactive waste disposed of through local disposal routes nor of specific disposal locations.

However, a condition of authorisation requires waste producers to keep proper and detailed records relating to their disposals. These records as well as the premises or sites concerned are subject to scrutiny by HMIP inspectors to ensure compliance with the terms of the certificates of authorisation.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions he has reached in respect of the purity of water supplies in London arising from the study sponsored by his Department on the disposal of low-level radioactive waste; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has a national programme for checking the levels of radioactivity in drinking water sources. This shows that the levels of radioactivity in the Thames are extremely low and the levels in drinking water supplies are below the guideline values for potable water recommended by the World Health Organisation. The research study commissioned by my Department and being carried out by St. Bartholomew's hospital medical college will not be completed until March 1991. A first draft report was received by my Department this month and is currently being reviewed. The report will be published in due course and copies will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list all those organisations authorised by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to dispose of low-level radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

(2) if he will give the number and names of organisations in Greater London area permitted to dispose of low-level radioactive waste.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the Department's "List of Premises in England and Wales currently authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to dispose of radioactive waste", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Radon

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, following the Government's announcement of 19 January that the recommended action level for radon in houses was to be halved, he plans to issue any advice to householders.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A second edition of the Department's publication, "The Householders' Guide to Radon", was published today, and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The guide comprises a general first section describing what radon is and where it comes from, how it can affect people, how it gets into homes, the ways of finding out if a house has a high level of radon, and what to do if measurements show radon concentrations above the action level. The second section gives practical advice on ways of reducing the level of radon indoors in various types of houses, and on how to get the work done and paid for. The third section answers some more questions which are commonly asked about radon. Sources for further information and advice are also given.

The new edition takes account of the reduction of the action level from 400 to 200 becquerels per cubic metre announced by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside on 19 January this year. The section on reducing the level of radon in houses has been extended, and incorporates the latest findings of the Government-funded research programme currently being carried out by the Building Research Establishment.

The second edition of "The Householders' Guide to Radon" will be widely distributed, especially in those areas of the country where high levels of indoor radon are most prevalent. The document is available free of charge from the Department by writing to:

Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the business ventures that made use of Warrington and Runcorn development corporation property; how long each of them used the property rent-free; and how much in each case was eventually deducted from fees paid by the corporation to take into account the use of its property.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 July 1990]: Although Warrington and Runcorn development corporation did not at the outset charge business ventures directly for the use of its property, the fees which the corporation paid to business ventures were exclusive of accommodation costs. This ensured that the costs incurred by the corporation were no greater than if the work of business ventures had been retained in-house. The absence of a direct rental charge to business ventures did not represent a subsidy. After the first year the development corporation reduced the fees it paid to business ventures to reflect the use they made of its accommodation in carrying out work for other clients. The period over which each business venture used corporation property and the fee reduction in respect of work for other clients are as follows:

Rendel Palmer and Tritton	1 April 1987 to 30 September 1989	60,666
Cipfa Services (latterly CSL)	1 August 1987 to 30 September 1989	1,050

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether business ventures supported by the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation paid the bills covering rates, heating and lighting (a) during the period they used corporation property rent-free and (b) after the corporation had started to make deductions for the use of its property.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 July 1990]: Since the fees paid by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation to business ventures were exclusive of accommodation costs, it would not have been appropriate for the business ventures to have paid bills covering rates, heating and lighting. However, these items were taken into account in the adjustment to fees paid to business ventures to reflect the use they made of corporation accommodation in carrying out work for other clients.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what savings were made as a consequence of the privatisation of Warrington and Runcorn development corporation services; what records were kept to show what savings had been made; and whether the contracts awarded to these business ventures will be offered for competitive tender when they come up for renewal.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 July 1990]: Business ventures were established on the basis that they should cost Warrington and Runcorn development corporation no more than the cost of retaining the work in-house. Budgetary controls were used, and appropriate records kept, to ensure that this objective was achieved. It is the normal policy for the Commission for the New Towns to let contracts on the basis of competitive tender.

Tenancies

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to ensure that live-in carers have the right to succeed to a tenancy in the event of the death of the person they care for; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 16 July 1990]: No. If the carer is a spouse or is living with the tenant as a husband or wife, and the tenant is not already a "successor", he or she has the right of automatic succession to a secure tenancy (granted by local authorities and, before 15 January 1989, by housing associations) or an assured tenancy (new tenancies granted by housing associations and by some private landlords).

If the carer is a close relative and has lived with the tenant for at least a year, he or she has an automatic right to succeed to a secure tenancy and may be able to negotiate to succeed to an assured tenancy by agreement with the landlord.

In other cases it is open to these landlords to grant a joint tenancy, secure or assured as appropriate, to the live-in carer.

Women's Safety

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidelines to local authorities concerning the improvement of street lighting and the use of resident caretakers on housing estates in the interests of the safety of women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 16 July 1990]: Street lighting is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, but I understand that recommendations for local authorities are covered in British standard 5489 part 3, relating to lighting of subsidiary streets, which my right hon. Friend reissued last year after extensive consultation.

Guidance on the use of resident caretakers on housing estates can be found in the priority estates project guide to local housing management issued by my Department in April 1987. In addition, the estate action programme encourages a local management presence and the use of concierges, where appropriate, for the benefit of all residents.

My right hon. Friend has no plans to issue further guidelines.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what services are provided on behalf of the Government by local authorities at Heathrow airport.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [pursuant to his reply, 13 July 1990, c. 350]: No local authority acts as agent for the Government in providing services at Heathrow airport: such functions as they discharge there are their own responsibility.

I understand, however, that staff of the London borough of Hillingdon are employed in support of medical inspectors of immigrants at Heathrow airport. The council also negotiates the rental of the health control unit premises at the airport.

WALES

Maternity Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research his Department has funded to assess the safety or comparative costs of delivery in (a) district general hospitals, (b) general practitioner maternity units and (c) at home; and if he will give the conclusions of each project funded.

Mr. Grist: No research directly assessing the safety and comparative costs of delivery has been funded by the Department. The hon. Lady may, however, wish to note the conclusions of the Wales perinatal mortality initiative 1984-86 and the report on perinatal intensive care services in Wales. Copies are available in the Library.

Teachers

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on education authorities in Wales seeking to limit the number of applicants for teaching posts by stipulating a criterion that applicants should have been educated at some stage within that county.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. The employment and deployment of teachers is a matter for local education authorities and schools.

Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authority schools in Wales have voted to opt out of local education authority control.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Two.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many local education authority (a) nursery schools, (b) infant schools, (c) primary schools and (d) secondary schools there are in each of the counties of Wales;

(2) how many private (a) nursery schools, (b) infants schools, (c) primary schools and (d) secondary schools there are in each of the counties of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is available in "Statistics of Education in Wales: Schools No. 3", table 1.02. Independent schools are not classified by sector.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authority (a) nursery schools, (b) infant schools, (c) primary schools and (d) secondary schools he has visited in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: As the Minister with direct responsibility to my right hon. Friend for education matters in Wales I am a frequent visitor to schools throughout the Principality.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the impact of recent legislation on school governing bodies in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Recent education legislation provides governors with the statutory powers to make decisions about school priorities, and about the needs of individual children. The governing bodies of schools with delegation under local management of schools are now directly responsible for their budget spending and for taking decisions about staff appointments.

River Pollution

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the causes of the decrease in the percentage of consented discharges achieving a minimum of 80 per cent. compliance with conditions for discharge into rivers in the Welsh Water Authority area as reported in table 2.10 of Environmental Digest for Wales No. 4 for 1988-89; and what action his Department has taken to tackle this trend.

Mr. Grist: One of the general duties of the National Rivers Authority, which was established last year, is to monitor and improve the quality of rivers and other controlled waters. Since its establishment, the authority has increased monitoring of rivers and effluents, is applying stricter conditions and prosecuting a greater proportion of offenders for consent failures. In 1989-90 the performance recorded reversed the trend suggested in 1988-89 and continued the improvements shown in the preceding years. The reasons why the performance overall of discharges of trade effluent should deteriorate in any particular year are unknown.

EC-Gulf Trade

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if his Department will make any assessment of the effects on the petrochemical and allied industries in Wales of a free trade agreement between the European Community and the states of the Gulf Co-operation Council;

(2) if his Department will make any assessment of the effects on employment in the petrochemical and allied industries in Wales of a free trade agreement between the European Community and the states of the Gulf Co-operation Council.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to do so. The Government have already consulted widely interested industries.

Health Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy that public access to the information and documents of health authorities in Wales should be on the same basis as for local authorities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: No. There is already considerable openness in health authority affairs. They continue to be subject to the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 10 July, Official Report, column 147, if he will list how many collective meetings his Department had with the non-departmental public bodies in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The available information is as follows:-

Year	Number of meetings
1984	3
1985	2
1986	0
1987	1
1988	2
1989	2
1990 (to date)	1

Reliable information on the number of meetings held in the earlier years is not available.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given to each community health council in Wales covering the area of one district council with a mechanism for all the community health councils in a health authority's area to meet on a representative basis.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 13 July by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

National Health Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has made any announcement in the past week on the financial resources available to the national health service in Wales.

Mr. Grist: At a meeting of district health authority and family practitioner committee chairmen my right hon. Friend was delighted to be able to announce his endorsement of the strategic intent which will provide the management target for the National Health Service in Wales into the next century.

In so doing my right hon. Friend drew attention to the record level of funding being provided by the Government for the service in Wales: over £1·5 billion this year—£500 million more in real terms than in 1979-80.

My right hon. Friend was also pleased to announce separately his decision to make available the necessary resources to enable Project 2000 courses to be introduced in south-east Wales from spring 1992, at the same time as in west Wales.

General Practitioner Budgets

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply of 9 July, Official Report, column 69, if he will make it his policy to ensure that the necessary software will be available to enable those general practitioners who wish to be responsible for their budgets, and the practice funding scheme, to start on 1 April 1991.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 9 July 1990.

Bypasses

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the bypasses planned for Llanymynech Pant and Welshpool will be completed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The A483 Pant/Llanymynech scheme is in Shropshire; its timing is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. The A483 Welshpool relief road scheme is included in the "Roads in Wales" short-term programme to start before April 1991, and will take about two years to complete.

Unfit Housing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's latest estimate of the total cost that would be involved in bringing all unfit housing (a) in Cardiff and (b) in Wales as a whole up to a fit standard.

Mr. Grist: Information in the form requested is not available centrally.

Myodil

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will undertake a review of problems which have arisen for patients in Wales as a result of the use of Myodil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my letter of 27 April, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, to which there is nothing I can usefully add.

Renewal Areas Scheme

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been provided to local authorities in order to develop the renewal areas scheme for older housing in Wales (a) so far this financial year and (b) prior to April 1990; and for what purposes this money was provided.

Mr. Grist: Renewal areas were introduced under the provisions of part VII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 with effect from 1 April 1990. Credit approvals of £1 million are being held by the Department to meet local authorities' proposals for renewal areas in the current financial year.

North-south Dual Carriageway

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for a dual carriageway road link between north and south Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Our proposals for selective improvements are clearly set out in "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s".

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has made any estimate of what the effect on tourism of a dual carriageway road link between north and south Wales would be.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The selective improvements planned, together with improvements to the motorway and trunk road network throughout Wales, will greatly improve the potential for growth in tourism and leisure-based industries.

A55

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the final improvements to the A55 between St. Asaph and Holywell will be completed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Work on the Rhuallt Hill scheme started in May and is expected to take two years to complete.

A470 and A483

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current traffic flow figures for the A470 and the A483; and what estimates there are of the future traffic flow on these roads.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Annual average daily traffic flows on the A470 range between 42,300 north of Cardiff and 2,500 in mid-Wales; and on the A483 between 19,800 in Clwyd and 2,000 in mid-Wales.

The latest national road traffic forecasts indicate that between 1988 and 2025 traffic is expected to grow by between 83 per cent. and 142 per cent.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what improvements have been made to the A470 and A483 during the last 10 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since 1979, 21 schemes on the A470 and nine schemes on the A483 have been completed, at a cost of over £100 million and £52 million respectively.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what improvements are currently under way on the A470 and the A483; and what future improvements are planned.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Twenty-eight schemes are under construction or planned on the A470, at a cost of over £73 million; six schemes are under construction or planned on the A483 at a cost of some £30 million.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for accelerating planned improvements to the A470 and the A483.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The timing of schemes is determined by the satisfactory completion of engineering and statutory procedures, and the availability of finance.

Bangor-Cardiff Road

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for having improvements to sections of road with bad bends and steep hills between Bangor and Cardiff added to the roads programme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Our policy is to continue to undertake schemes to improve safety and reduce journey times. Schemes will be added to the programme as the need for them is identified.

A487

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve the conditions on the Caernarfon-Maentwrog section of the A487.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The case for improving the A487 between Caernarfon and Maentwrog is under consideration. It is too soon to say what proposals will emerge.

Heads of the Valleys Road

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what stage of development has been reached in the provision of a dual carriageway on the heads of the valleys road.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The case for upgrading the A465 is being reviewed as part of the South Wales traffic study which is scheduled for completion later this year.

Bypasses

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to add bypasses to settlements not currently planned for bypassing to the road programme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Work is continuing to identify towns and villages where bypasses are desirable and the cost can be justified. Schemes will be added to the programme as appropriate.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of funding his Department has provided to the Alzheimer's Disease Society (a) in Wales and (b) in each country of Wales in each of the past five years; and what level of finance he intends to provide (i) to maintain and develop the present work of the society and (ii) to provide facilities and support to carers following the transition to care in the community.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 9 July 1990]: No funding was provided by the Department to the Alzheimer's Disease Society before 1987-88. The following amounts have been given for local and national purposes since that year:

1987-88	5,741
1988-89	24,607
1989-90	91,009
1990-91	124,641
1991-92	[1]30,025
1992-93	[1]30,025
1993-94	[1]22,525

[1] Projected allocations.

The county breakdown of central funding for local projects is:

	Gwent (£)	South Glamorgan (£)
1987-88	5,741	—
1988-89	11,936	12,671
1989-90	13,096	77,913
1990-91	16,800	95,341

Any bid for additional resources in future years would be considered on its merits.

The development of facilities and services for users and carers is a matter for the local health and social services authorities and other organisations working within the framework of the White Papers "Working for Patients" (Cmnd. 555) and "Caring for People" (Cmnd. 845) and other policy guidance, including the all-Wales mental illness strategy.

Forests (Recreational Activities)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the factors which led to a drop in public recreational activities provided by the Forestry Commission between 1986 and 1989 as reflected in table 1.4 of the environmental digest for Wales No. 4 1988-1989.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 10 July 1990]: The fall in the numbers of listed picnic places, forest walks and forest nature trails is a reflection of the Forestry Commission's policy of channelling resources into improving those facilities most used by the public. The Commission's objective is to attract more visitors and to offer them better value.

Consultants

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the financial years from 1985-86 to 1989-90, how much was spent on the work of outside consultants by (a) his Department, (b) each district health authority in Wales, (c) each family practitioner committee in Wales and (d) any other public body or assisted body in respect of the work of the national health service.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 10 July 1990]: (a) I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 8 June for expenditure in respect of district health authorities. Additional expenditure by the Department in each of the past five years on the work of outside consultants relating to other aspects of the work of the national health service was as follows:

Year	Number
1985-86	15,000
1986-87	31,441
1987-88	Nil
1988-89	93,662
1989-90	148,222

(b) and (c) Comprehensive information in respect of expenditure by health authorities and family practitioner committees in Wales is not held centrally.

(d) Expenditure was incurred by one outside body directly responsible to the Department as follows:

Welsh National Board for Nursing Midwifery and Health Visiting

Year	Number
1985-86	Nil
1986-87	Nil
1987-88	2,128
1988-89	Nil
1989-90	14,447

HEALTH

Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the organisations providing for elderly people to which his Department makes grants under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department provides funding under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 to a large number of voluntary bodies, many of which undertake provision for elderly people as part of their overall role. I refer my hon. Friend to the the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) on 24 April 1990 at columns 160-64. Voluntary organisations working wholly or predominantly with and for elderly people, which are receiving funding under section 64 in 1990-91, are as follows:

Age Concern England
National Osteoporosis Society
Extend
Age Exchange Theatre Company
New Horizons Trust
Contact
Jewish Welfare Board
British Association for Services to the Elderly

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the programmes run by the Health Education Authority which make express provision for the health education needs of elderly people.

Mr. Dorrell: Express provision is made in the "Look After Your Heart" campaign. Relevant advice is also given in other programmes, including those on smoking, alcohol, nutrition and cancer.

Persons Needing Care and Attention

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on how many occasions section 47 of the National Assistance Act 1948 was invoked by each local authority in England and Wales in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(2) what steps his Department is taking to monitor the use by local authorities of section 47 of the National Assistance Act 1948;

(3) what guidance he issues to local authorities in respect of their responsibilities under section 47 of the National Assistance Act 1948.

Mr. Dorrell: Information about the use made by local authorities of section 47 of the National Assistance Act 1948 is not collected centrally. This is a matter for local authorities and the courts and no central guidance has been issued.

Cancer

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has any information on the protection offered by selenium against carcinogens in humans.

Mr. Dorrell: Some reports in the scientific literature suggest that the risk of developing cancers of the lung, colon and bladder decreases as the consumption of vegetables with a high selenium content increases. However, other reports suggest that the risk of developing cancers of the stomach and liver and, in contradiction of the aforementioned reports, of the lung increases as the blood level of selenium increases.

Selenium is one of a number of substances that appear to inhibit the development of cancer. The mechanism whereby such substances exercise inhibitory effects are not clear and, for the present, no firm conclusions can be drawn. It is important to note that an excess of selenium can cause acute illness and it is inadvisable for anyone to take selenium supplements other than under medical supervision. Eating a well-balanced diet will ensure, for most people, an adequate intake of selenium.

If further data become available they will be carefully considered.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he is aware of any studies which point to a possible role for calcium ingestion in the prevention of cancers in humans;

(2) if his Department has any information on studies which have demonstrated a possible link between nutrition and pre-cancerous intestinal lesions;

(3) if his Department holds any information on studies of links between diet and cancers of the pancreas and bile ducts.

Mr. Dorrell: No such studies have been drawn to our attention.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department holds any information on studies which demonstrate a possible relationship between nutrition, alcohol consumption and breast cancer.

Mr. Dorrell: We are aware of a number of studies investigating such links.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has yet received the report of the International Agency for Research on Cancer on the control study relating to the links between nutrition, lifestyle and the incidence of breast and colon cancer in the European Community.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Creosote

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has of any carcinogenic risk to humans from the use of creosote as a wood preservative.

Mr. Dorrell: There are case reports published in the United Kingdom and reports to Her Majesty's inspector of factories of skin cancers among workers treating timber with creosote, handling creosote in storage and using creosote as a releasing agent for brick moulds. These indicate that repeated and prolonged contact with the skin over many years may result in skin cancer. The WHO International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) has, on the basis of these reports and the results of experiments on laboratory animals, classified creosote as a probable carcinogen. However, there is no evidence to indicate that occasional contact with creosote would be likely to give rise to cancers.

Alzheimer's Disease

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the projections of those suffering from Alzheimer's disease and related dementias for the periods (a) 1985 to 1990, (b) 1990 to 1995 and (c) 1995 to 2000; and what assumptions these projections are based on.

Mr. Dorrell: Such projections are not produced.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has made an assessment of the possible impact of (a) burnt hydrocarbon gases from diesel engine exhausts, (b) nitrogen dioxide and (c) sulphur dioxide on the potency of pollen grains and the consequences for public health; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Reports in the scientific literature of interactions between pollen and a range of air pollutants from motor vehicle or other fuel-burning sources have been examined in relation to their possible effect on the occurrence of asthma, but no clear conclusions have emerged. The matter is being kept under review.

GP Budgets

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what payments are projected to general practitioners to (a) work up and (b) operate practice budgets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Eligible practices are able to claim an allowance of up to £16,000 to help meet the costs of the preparatory work necessary in order to become fund holders. From 1 April next year fund-holding practices will be able to claim an annual management allowance of up to £32,000 to help meet the costs incurred in running the fund. In addition, practices which commit themselves formally to participation in the scheme will be able to claim an extra 25 per cent. of the cost of purchasing, leasing or upgrading their computer systems in accordance with a scale to be published in the statement of fees and allowances. This is in addition to the allowance of up to 50 per cent. which all GPs can claim.

Embossed Literature Service

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the amount awarded by his Department to fund the embossed literature service for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available;

(2) what steps he is taking to encourage greater provision of materials in braille;

(3) what would be the current value of the embossed literature service grant had it been increased in line with inflation since 1979;

(4) what discussions he has held with the Royal National Institute for the Blind on the embossed literature service grant.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the amounts awarded, under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, to the Royal National Institute for the Blind's (RNIB) embossed literature service, for each of the financial years 1981-82 to 1990-91. The amount awarded in 1978-79 (£165,000) would be worth £411,341 at 1990-91 prices. Officials met a number of senior representatives of the RNIB in February this year to discuss the future funding of this service, which produces embossed literature to meet a wide variety of social, cultural, educational and technical needs. As a consequence of this meeting, a number of suggestions have been offered to the RNIB for generating new sources of income for the service. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People has also initiated discussions between his officials and the RNIB about producing social security information in braille at an agreed cost which would be met by funds from the Department of Social Security.

Pro Plus Tablets

Mr. Rhodes James: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received any representations on Pro Plus tablets; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received one letter from my hon. Friend.

Self-Governing Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library on a daily basis applications received by his Department by units for self-governing trust status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. However, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will direct the relevant regional health authority to consult on each application for trust status. The region will seek the views of local Members of Parliament as part of this process. If the hon. Member wishes to see individual applications, he should contact the relevant regions.

Heart Drugs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the budgets set aside for heart drugs in each regional health authority for 1990-91; and what were these budgets, expressed as an expenditure figure per head.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authorities are responsible for setting their own budgets for particular items of expenditure. Details are not held centrally.

National Health Service and Community Care Act (Publicity)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will break down the £2·75 million being spent on publicising the National Health Service and Community Care Act, giving the amount spent on (a) design, (b) production and (c) distribution of the booklet; and if he will give the timetable for distribution;

(2) if work done on the design of the booklet to publicise the National Health Service and the Community Care Act was done by an outside agency; whether tenders were invited for (a) the design and (b) the production of the booklet; and when the decision was taken to produce and distribute 20 million booklets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The estimated costs for the booklet "The NHS Reforms and You" are:

(a) Design costs	24,000
(b) Production costs	1,400,000
(c) Distribution costs	800,000
	2,224,000

These costs are for the English version only. The remainder of the £2·75 million will be required for the production and distribution of the shorter version being produced in nine ethnic minority languages for fulfilling requests for further copies of the English version and the "Look After Your Heart" insert. The distribution begins in the week comencing 16 July and is scheduled for completion in the week commencing 13 August. Ninety-two per cent. of households should receive a copy in the first week.

The decision to produce and distribute the booklet was taken on 15 March 1990.

The booklet was designed by an outside agency appointed by tender. The production of the booklet was commissioned by Central Office of Information and HMSO using suppliers approved by them and appointed on their ability to deliver a quality product, on time, at a competitive price.

Herbal Medicines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure the continued availability of herbal medicines; and if he will make a statement on the progress of European Community deliberations in respect of controls on herbal medicines.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no new initiatives in Europe exclusively or explicitly affecting herbal medicines. There are currently under consideration European Community proposals which apply to all medicinal products, including herbal products, and which have implications for their wholesale distribution, legal status, labelling, advertising and future licensing. There are also proposals for a directive to regulate homoeopathic medicines.

None of these proposals implies any change to the general availability of herbal medicinal products, and none is planned.

Colin Jago

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he received a report from the Nottingham health authority on the death of Colin Jago; what conclusions he has reached; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We received a report from Nottingham health authority in late June. Having read the report, we have concluded that Mr. Jago received a proper level of care from the Nottingham health authority.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the production and use of (a) 2-Naphthylamine and its salts, (b) 4-Aminobiphenyl and its salts, (c) Benzidine and its salts and (d) 4-Nitrodiphenyl is permitted in Britain.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Regulation 4 and schedule 2 of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 (COSHH) prohibit the manufacture and use for all purposes, and the importation into the United Kingdom, of 4-aminodiphenyl, 4-nitrodiphenyl, benzidine, 2-naphthylamine, their salts and any substance containing any of these compounds in a total concentration exceeding 0·1 per cent.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the carcinogenic substances that have already been classified by directive 67/548/EEC.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The list of carcinogenic substances is included in part 1A1 of the third edition of the "Authorised and Approved List—information approved for the classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous substances for supply and conveyance by road", published by the Health and Safety Commission. A copy of this is available from the House of Commons Library.

SCOTLAND

TVEI

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is carrying out any current evaluation of the educational impact of the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mr. Lang: A report by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools on TVEI pilot projects, "Learning and Teaching in TVEI in Scotland", was published in November last year. A series of evaluation studies has also been undertaken as part of the initiative itself. The need for further work is kept under review.

Playground Supervision

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest position on his playground supervision initiatives.

Mr. Lang: The Schools (Safety and Supervision of Pupils) (Scotland) Regulations 1990, which place a duty on education authorities to provide playground supervision for most primary and all special school pupils under their charge, came into force on 1 April 1990.

Waste Incinerator, Scotstoun

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received an appeal against Glasgow district council's decision to refuse planning permission for a medical waste incinerator in Scotstoun.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has not received such an appeal.

Court Proceedings

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state, in respect of each procurator fiscal office, the number of police reports received in 1989 and the actual number and percentage marked no proceedings.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of reports submitted by the police and other reporting agencies to procurators fiscal which were marked "no proceedings" in each procurator fiscal office for 1989 is as follows:

EC-Gulf Trade

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will make any assessment of the effects on employment in the petrochemical and allied industries in Scotland of a free trade agreement between the European Community and the states of the Gulf Co-operation Council.

Mr. Lang: The Government have consulted widely with industries interested in these forthcoming negotiations, including the petrochemical industry and remain ready to consider further views. Employment in Scotland will be one of the issues to be considered.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will make any assessment of the effects on the offshore industry in Scotland of a free trade agreement between the European Community and the states of the Gulf Co-operation Council.

Mr. Lang: Assessment of the effects of a free trade agreement between the European Community and the Gulf Co-operation Council is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. However, any such agreement is expected to have little effect on the offshore sector in Scotland.

Court Delays

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the delay in weeks between pleading and trial hearings in (a) each sheriff court and (b) each district court in Scotland for the quarters ended (i) 31 December 1988, (ii) 31 March 1989, (iii) 30 June 1989, (iv) 30 September 1989, (v) 31 December 1989 and (vi) 31 March 1990.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people were made redundant in Scotland in each of the past five years and in each month of 1990;

(2) how many manufacturing jobs have been lost in each of the regions of Scotland since 1979; and what percentage this is of the manufacturing jobs in existence in 1979.

Mr. Lang: There are no comprehensive statistics on redundancies. The number of redundancies involving 10 or more workers confirmed to the Department of Employment: the Training Agency as having occurred in Scotland since 1985 is set out in the table:

Year	Redundancies
1985	23,892
1986	32,882
1987	22,833
1988	14,311
1989	15,350

March	1,968
April	667
May[1]	1,573
June[1]	2,079

[1] Confirmed redundancies in the latest 2 months are provisional and may be subject to revision.

Information on employment for Scottish local authority regions is obtained from the censuses of employment. There was no such census undertaken in 1979 and the latest census results relate to 1987. The change in manufacturing employment in the Scottish regions between June 1978 and September 1987 is set out in the table:

Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish students attained university entry qualification level in each of the years 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Lang: The available information was published by the Scottish Education Department in its statistical bulletins "Higher Education Projections for Scotland" (No. 7/J1/1988) and "Higher Education Projections for Scotland 1990" (No. 8/J1/1990) which are available in the Library.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish students went to British universities outside Scotland in each of the years 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Lang: The figures are given in the table:

Service Station, Nether Abington

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he intends to announce his decision to site the new service station to replace the existing station at Nether Abington; and if the proposed fast-link road from the M8 to the M74 will influence the decision;

(2) if he will make a statement on the provision of a service station on the M74 when upgraded to replace the existing station at Nether Abington;

(3) if he will list the representations he has received on the siting of a new service station to replace the existing station at Nether Abington.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The Government's policy for the provision of motorway service areas in Scotland was given in my reply on 4 April to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) at columns 661-62.

In accordance with this policy, consultants will be advising on the location of a new motorway service area in the general vicinity of Millbank and Nether Abington. Their recommendations are awaited. Consideration of the best location for a new facility will require to take account of all proposed developments, including the M74/M8 fast link, should this proceed. In any event, no decision can be made until road orders for the section of new M74 between Nether Abington and Elvanfoot are confirmed.

Written representations on the siting of the new motorway service station have to date been received from Clydesdale district council and the Scottish tourist board.

Health Visitors

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were recruited as health visitors in Scotland in 1988, 1989 and 1990 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 July 1990]: Information on health visitor recruitment in Scotland is not held centrally, and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Nitrogen Dioxide

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take to reduce levels of nitrogen dioxide in both Edinburgh and Glasgow city centres.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The levels of nitrogen dioxide in city centres are almost entirely due to emissions from motor vehicles, the reduction of which is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. Plans for the reduction of emissions are contained in the written answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Transport on 8 June 1990 at column 722.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the levels of nitrogen dioxide in Edinburgh and Glasgow city centres; what are the relevant European Community air quality standards; and what recent representations he has received on this.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 July 1990]: On the basis of the results obtained from a nationwide survey of ambient nitrogen dioxide concentrations in 363 urban areas in the United Kingdom, one continuous monitoring station, operating in accordance with the requirements of the Council directive of 7 March 1985, was established in Glasgow. The results obtained have been satisfactory and are below the directive limit value.

The relevant limit and guide values in the Council directive of 7 March 1985 on air quality standards for nitrogen dioxide are for the 98th percentile calculated from the mean values per hour or per period of less than an hour recorded throughout the year:

Limit Value 200 micrograms per cubic metre
Guide Value 135 micrograms per cubic metre

No representations have been received.

Milk Marketing

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he intends to have on the report by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries on the Aberdeen and district milk marketing board's commercial operations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland published a report on 7 June 1990 on the relationship between the Aberdeen and district milk marketing board's producer activities and its commercial division. The Aberdeen and district milk marketing board and the Scottish Dairy Trade Federation have been invited to consider the report and its conclusions and to submit their views to the Department by 1 October 1990.

School Closures

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many schools in Scotland of fewer than 50 pupils closed in (a) 1975, (b) 1980, (c) 1985 and (d) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The Scottish Education Department does not maintain records of school closures by size of school.

Industrial Fishing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements have been made to police industrial fishing vessels to prevent them from catching significant proportions or amounts of small sile; if he will give details of these arrangments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The industrial fishery is regulated by licence and European Community legislation lays down the minimum mesh size of net to be used and the maximum percentage of species which may be retained as a by-catch. This is enforced by sampling the catch either on boarding the vessel or at the time of landing.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the calculation of estimates of the proportion of shoals caught by industrial fishing fleets for the production of soap and animal feed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The quantities estimated to have been landed in direct industrial fisheries using small-mesh trawls in the North sea for the years 1985-89 are given in the table together with the officially reported landings of all fish:

(thousand tonnes)

	(a) Estimates landings in industrial trawl fishery	(b) Reported landings of fish used for all purposes
1985	1,033	2,428
1986	1,140	2,495
1987	1,106	2,552
1988	1,349	n/y a
1989	[1]1,483	n/y a

[1]Preliminary estimate.
n/y/a= not yet available.
Source: (a) Report of the Advisory Committee on Fishery Management of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, May 1990; (b) Bulletin Statistique des Peches Maritimes.

The figures given in the table indicate that a minimum of 42 to 46 per cent. of fish landed from the North sea in the years 1985-1987 were caught in directed fisheries for reduction to meal and oil. The estimates of industrial fish landings, however, do not include quantities of herring and mackerel caught in other fisheries and landed for reduction. For example, large quantities of herring and mackerel are sold for reduction in Norway.

United Kingdom fisheries are primarily for human consumption and the United Kingdom strongly supports the European Community ban on fishing for herring for industrial purposes.

Sandeels

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of any scientific evidence he has relating to the depletion of North Sea sandeel stocks by seals and by small herring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 July 1990]: Sandeels are preyed on by many predators in the North sea including, seals, seabirds and numerous other species of fish.

Published estimates for the total North sea indicate that the annual consumption of sandeels by grey seals was in the order of 35,000 to 40,000 tonnes in 1984 and 1985. An unpublished estimate for 1989 is 27,500 tonnes. There are no comparable estimates for common seals.

A rough estimate of the annual consumption of sandeels by both species of seals in the Shetland area of the North sea is in the order of 8,000 to 9,000 tonnes, which is over twice as much as the quantity taken in the fishery in 1989 and more than three times the 1990 catch.

Herring are known to prey on small sandeels at times. Research is currently being carried out by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland on the possible role of predation and other factors in controlling sandeel recruitment. At present, however, any link between the decrease in sandeel recruitment at Shetland and herring predation is purely speculative.

EMPLOYMENT

Equestrianism

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what extent the United Kingdom has been involved in the European Year of Tourism to date; and what plans he has to promote the United Kingdom's equestrianism during the European Equestrian Month in November.

Mr. Nicholls: The British Tourist Authority has taken the lead in co-ordinating the United Kingdom's participation in the European Year of Tourism. It has launched a number of campaigns to promote the interest and active involvement of the United Kingdom tourism industry and many events are taking place across the country throughout 1990. Thirty-nine United Kingdom projects have been accepted for co-funding by the European Commission.

A number of suggestions has been made for equestrian events during European equestrian month in November. The British Tourist Authority would be delighted to hear from the hon. Member if he has any specific ideas he wishes to put forward.

Union Assets (Sequestration)

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the importance of the sequestration of union assets as a means to enforce employment legislation.

Mr. Nicholls: Sequestration is a penalty that may be imposed by the courts, where appropriate, for any contempt of court. As such, it is necessary to ensure that trade unions are not able to flout the law, including employment law, with impunity.

Child Care

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of whether the new single unit cost per training place system encourages training managers to discriminate against trainees with child care requirements; and what options have been considered as to how such trainees should be funded under the new contract.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has no evidence that lone parents are being denied access to employment training. Arrangements for funding child care are for negotiation between individual training managers and the training and enterprise council or Training Agency area office concerned.

Training Managers

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what transitional funding he proposes to offer to training managers to cover the shortfall between their contractual cost commitments to existing trainees and the unit cost per trainee they are receiving under the new contract.

Mr. Nicholls: Funding arrangements for employment training, including any transitional arrangements, are for negotiation between training managers and the local training and enterprise council or area office concerned.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of contracted training places awarded to training managers in each of the (a) private, (b) local authority and (c) voluntary sectors; and what were the comparable figures under the old contract.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Clothing Industry

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for employment how many jobs have been lost in the clothing industry over the past two years.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of employees in employment in the clothing industry including hats, gloves and fur goods, in Great Britain fell by 6,000, or 2·9 per cent. between December 1987 and December 1989.

Construction Industry

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new steps he intends to take to reduce accidents in the construction industry.

Mr. Nicholls: The prime legal responsibility to bring about improvements rests with the industry itself. As part of a continuing process to promote longlasting change in the industry, the Health and Safety Commission is to take forward proposals for new legislation to strengthen the legal requirements relating to the management of health and safety on construction sites.

The Health and Safety Executive is continuing to target inspection activity where it will be most effective. That is on the more hazardous activities such as roof work and demolition, and on the quality of site management and its ability to manage health and safety. Inspectors continue to pursue inquiries and enforcement action to the highest levels in companies which do not measure up to the standards expected to them and are also vigorously enforcing the Construction (Head Protection) Regulations which came into force on 30 March 1990.

Labour Statistics

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on trends in employment since 1981.

Mr. Nicholls: In December 1989, the latest date for which information is available, the work force in employment in the United Kingdom was 27,082,000, the highest level ever. This represents an increase of 2,759,000, or 11 per cent., since June 1981.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he estimates the effect of the present Sunday trading laws is on employment.

Mr. Nicholls: No such estimates are available.

Disabled People

79. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details for Great Britain of the number and percentage of people with disabilities of working age who are unemployed.

Mr. Eggar: The most recent estimate is that there are about 285,000 people with disabilities who are economically active and want but are not in work. This is 22 per cent. of the total. This information was obtained in summer 1989 during a survey commissioned by my Department into the numbers and characteristics of people with disabilities in the labour market. The figure is compiled on a basis different from that used to produce the monthly claimant-based statistics, so is not exactly comparable with general unemployment figures.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details for Great Britain and for the west midlands region, for each year from April 1986 to the most recent date, of the number and percentage of YTS leavers who on leaving YTS were unemployed (a) in total and (b) with disabilities.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

	All leavers		Disabled leavers
	West midlands	Great Britain	West midlands	Great Britain
April 1986 to March 1987
Number	2,739	19,761	73	761

April 1989 to January 1990[1]

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to what percentage of the work force employed by British Coal registered as disabled.

Mr. Eggar: As at 1 June 1989, 0·4 per cent. of the work force of British Coal were registered disabled, as published in the Employment Gazette in February 1990.

Political Funds

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those unions which have voted on the establishment of a new political fund since 1984 with the full result in each case.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the establishment of political funds is contained in the annual reports of the independent certification officer for trade unions and employers' associations. Copies of the reports are available from the Library. The table lists those unions which were qualified to operate political funds for the first time between January 1984 and the end of December 1989 — the latest date for which that information is available. The full results of relevant ballots are provided in confidence to the certification officer by the unions concerned.

[1] The National Communications Union (Engineering and Clerical Groups), which already had approved political fund rules in relation to its Engineering group, had further rules approved in 1986 for its Clerical group.

[2] The Association of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Taxes, which had political fund rules approved in 1987, ceased to exist with effect from 1 January 1989 when it transferred its engagements to the Association of First Division Civil Servants.

[3] In 1989, a body was created within the Association of First Division Civil Servants called the Association of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Taxes which became listed in its own right as a trade union and which voted to adopt a political fund.

Note.—The information set out above is obtained from the Annual Reports of the certification officer for trade unions and employers' associations.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Health and Safety Executive last inspected the natural history museum.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive last inspected the natural history museum on 14 February 1990.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Employment Group, comprising the Employment Department, the Employment Service, the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service, the Health and Safety Executive, and the Training Agency has received a total of 383 subject access requests under the Data Protection Act. Before the subject access date of 11 November 1987, it was not possible to make any firm estimate of the number of requests which would be received. We are currently reviewing subject access fee charging policy in the Department of Employment Group.

EC-Gulf Trade

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has any plans to make an assessment of the effect on employment in the United Kingdom of a free trade agreement between the European Community and the Gulf Co-operation Council states.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has no current plans for such an assessment. However, the Government have consulted widely industries interested in the forthcoming negotiations and remain ready to consider any further views.

Adjudication Officers

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps he is taking to introduce effective adjudication training for adjudication officers; and what progress has been made in incorporating an indicator for adjudication in his Department's quality control system;

(2) how many (a) adjudication officers, (b) sector adjudication managers and (c) regional adjudication officers there are in each employment service region; and if he will make a statement on their functions, particularly with respect to the changes brought in with the Social Security Act 1989;

(3) how many regional co-ordinators have been appointed and in which regional adjudication office sections, to develop expertise in the Social Security Act 1989; and if he will make a statement on the problems which they have identified;

(4) what arrangements exist for regional adjudication officers to assist adjudication officers regarding guidance on individual cases of particular difficulty.

Mr. Eggar: The Employment Service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Young Travellers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to encourage the provision of low-price accommodation for short-term travellers.

Mr. Nicholls: The English tourist board, which receives funds from my Department, actively encourages the provision of all forms of accommodation, including budget accommodation, to meet the needs of the market. The ETB's forthcoming "Guide to Good Practice In Rural Accommodation" will further encourage the development and upgrading of accommodation suitable for young people.

Employment Service

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will take steps to ascertain whether the present arrangements regarding answers to questions relating to the employment service are acceptable to hon. Members on both sides of the House.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the assurances I gave to the House during the Adjournment debate on executive agencies on 21 May, Official Report, columns 145-152, and to my written replies to questions from the hon. Members for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) and Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 9 and 10 July respectively, Official Report 9 July, column 102 and 10 July, column 144.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department has to reduce the impact of the uniform business rate on the hotel trade.

Mr. Nicholls: I have no such plans. The transitional arrangements introduced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will ensure that no existing business will face an annual increase of more than 20 per cent. in real terms. This phasing-in will last until 1995, and there is scope for it to be continued thereafter, should that prove to be necessary. My noble Friend Lord Strathclyde will continue to keep in touch with the hotel sector on this issue.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to provide grants towards improving the appearance of major tourist attractions.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no such plans.

Employment Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why there are variations in regional targets for output-related funding under the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: There are variations in regional targets for achievement of positive outcomes on employment training because of differences in regional labour markets.

Training Credits

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the funding of training credits will come from the Training Agency budget and how much from local authorities for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Eggar: Funding for training credits will come from three sources: planned resources for youth training; additional funding from Government of £12 million in 1991-92 and £25 million in 1992-93; and thereafter and transfer of the relevant portion of rate support grant provision for part-time courses for 16 to 18-year-olds.

The rate support grant provision is estimated at approximately £5 million in 1991-92 and £15 million in 1992-93. Figures have not been produced for 1993-94.

"TEC Director"

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual cost of producing the publication "TEC Director".

Mr. Eggar: The estimated production costs for "TEC Director" during the financial year April 1990 to March 1991 are £99,440·88.

DEFENCE

Soviet Disarmament

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessment he has made of the defence implications for the United Kingdom of Soviet disarmament measures in Europe.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessment he has made of the defence implications for the United Kingdom of Soviet disarmament measures in Europe.

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessment he has made of the defence implications for the United Kingdom of Soviet disarmament measures in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are examining options for change in the structure and deployment of our armed forces in the light of changing international circumstances, including the withdrawals of Soviet forces from eastern Europe and Soviet unilateral force reductions. We continue to attach high importance to reaching agreement in the conventional forces in Europe negotiations in Vienna to eliminate the continuing significant Warsaw pact superiority over NATO in conventional arms.

Expenditure Reductions (Scotland)

15. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reductions in his Department's expenditure in Scotland he proposes arising out of the reduction in tension between NATO and the Warsaw pact countries.

47. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reductions in his Department's expenditure in Scotland he proposes arising out of the reduction in tension between NATO and the Warsaw pact countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is too early to say what financial savings for the defence budget as a whole might be consistent with the outcome of the first stages of CFE and changes in eastern Europe. Defence expenditure is not accounted for on a regional basis.

Trident

16. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest progress made to replace the Polaris strategic nuclear deterrent with Trident.

Mr. Alan Clark: The programme to replace Polaris with Trident is on time and within budget and continues to make satisfactory progress towards its in-service date of the mid-1990s.

17. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any consideration has been given to the Trident nuclear submarine in his review of options.

20. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any consideration has been given to the Trident nuclear submarine in his review of options.

22. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any consideration has been given to the Trident nuclear submarine in his review of options.

67. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any consideration has been given to the Trident nuclear submarine in his review of options.

Mr. Tom King: As I informed the House on 18 June, we believe it is essential to keep our independent nuclear deterrent; that means that we intend to proceed with the replacement of Polaris with Trident. As the London summit declaration made clear, we believe nuclear weapons have a crucial role to play in the prevention of war.

Military Co-operation

18. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the scope for military co-operation with states applying to join the European Community.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Applications to join the EC have been made by Turkey, Austria and the Republic of Cyprus. We already have close defence links with Turkey through our joint membership of NATO. The scope for defence co-operation with Austria and the Republic of Cyprus is more limited, but we maintain appropriate links with them.

United States Defence Secretary

19. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his United States counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

Mr Tom King: The position is as I set out earlier for the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields).

39. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his United States counterpart to discuss weapons development and deployment.

50. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his United States counterpart to discuss weapons development and deployment.

24. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the numbers of armed forces personnel which will be required for the Royal Navy, Army and Royal Air Force in 1995.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Manpower plans are updated as part of our normal reviews of the defence programme under the long-term costing process. It would not be appropriate to give details of long-term manpower plans.

Soviet Force Withdrawals

28. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made concerning the unilateral withdrawal of Soviet nuclear and conventional forces from eastern Europe over the last year.

43. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made concerning the unilateral withdrawal of Soviet nuclear and conventional forces from eastern Europe over the last year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Soviet Union has carried out the initial phase of its unilateral withdrawal of ground forces from eastern Europe on schedule. However, it has suspended the removal of further troops from East Germany in part pending the outcome of the two plus four talks on the future status of Germany. We do not expect the two Soviet divisions in Poland to withdraw in the immediate future.

The majority of Soviet nuclear-capable short-range ballistic missile launchers appear to have been withdrawn from Czechoslovakia and probably all from Hungary. Nuclear-capable artillery is still in the process of being withdrawn and some will probably remain in Czechoslovakia until the last divisions leave.

The Soviet Union has carried out, and probably exceeded, its stated intention to withdraw 300 combat aircraft from eastern Europe; some of the aircraft would have been capable of both nuclear and conventional operations. Some air defence surface-to-air missile forces have been withdrawn from Hungary, East Germany and Poland.

Nuclear Tests

29. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what nuclear tests have been carried out by NATO countries and France in the current year; and for what purpose.

92. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent agreements have been reached regarding sea-launched cruise missiles; and what are the implications for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 22 June at column 723.

81. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of removal of cruise missiles from the United Kingdom, and the alternative use of the sites.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answers which I gave to the hon. Members for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) and for City of Durham (Mr.

Steinberg) on 6 February at column 591, in respect of RAF Greenham Common, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant) on 11 January at columns 691-92, in respect of RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about cruise missiles and their deployment in the United Kingdom and within United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: With the exception of the remaining ground-launched cruise missiles based at RAF Greenham Common, which are due to be removed by the end of May 1991 under the terms of the INF treaty, there are no nuclear cruise missiles deployed on land in the United Kingdom.

Vessels of the United States navy visit ports and facilities in the United Kingdom. Like the Royal Navy they neither confirm nor deny whether they are carrying nuclear weapons.

Territorial Army

33. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to increase the strength of the Territorial Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The work in hand on examining options for change is of a broad policy nature. While it is therefore not possible to be specific at this stage, there is no doubt that the Territorial Army will continue to play a vital role in the future.

82. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of serving members of the Territorial Army; and what was the comparable figure 10 years ago.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total strength of the Territorial Army, at 31 May, was 72,705. The corresponding figure 10 years ago was 62,989.

Aeroplane and Armaments Experimental Establishment

35. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken to (a) screen personnel and (b) assess hazard in additional buildings, following the discovery of brown asbestos in offices at the Aeroplane and Armament Experimental Establishment at Boscombe Down, near Salisbury.

Mr. Neubert: Following the discovery of a trace of amosite, or brown asbestos, at the Aeroplane and Armament Experimental Establishment Boscombe Down, staff have been given a medical briefing by the occupational hygienist and the offer of an individual consultation. If, following such a consultation, members of staff wish to be given an appropriate medical screening, the establishment has offered to arrange for it to be provided free of charge.

The dust sample containing the trace of amosite came from a single building with inner and outer cladding of white asbestos sheeting. Extensive tests of the air in, and the fabric of, this building and eight others of a similar age and construction have, however, all proved to be negative.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

37. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence his Department has concerning the proliferation of chemical and biological weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have received reports from time to time on the development of chemical and biological weapons by other countries. However, it is not our normal practice to comment on the detailed information available to the Government on such matters.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what retraining will be given to civilian personnel no longer required by his Department.

38. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what retraining will be given to civilian personnel no longer required by his Department.

87. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what retraining will be given to civilian personnel no longer required by his Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: Reductions in civilian manpower numbers will, so far as possible, be handled through natural wastage.

41. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications of the proliferation of nuclear and chemical weapons.

44. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications of the proliferation of nuclear and chemical weapons.

84. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications of the proliferation of nuclear and chemical weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We keep all potential risks under continuous review. We also aim to prevent the proliferation of nuclear and chemical weapons by providing strong support for arms control agreements and associated regimes, such as the non-proliferation treaty, the missile technology control regime, the proposed chemical weapons convention and the Australia group.

RAF Parachute Training Establishments

42. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in 1989 safety inspectors visited Royal Air Force parachute training establishments.

Aldermaston A90 Building

51. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes to the original programme of work has been made during the construction of the Aldermaston A90 building.

Mr. Neubert: Changes to the programme of work for the A90 building at AWE Aldermaston were made as a result of the Government's decision to purchase the Trident system and in response to subsequent programme slippage. I refer the hon. Member to appendix 4 of the July 1987 report by the Comptroller and Auditor General—"Control and Management of the Trident Programme"—HC27. The construction of A90 is now complete and equipment installation is proceeding within the scheduled time scale for Trident.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on progress on conventional forces disarmament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The conventional armed forces in Europe talks which opened in Vienna in March 1989 are making good progress. Agreement has been reached on definitions for tanks, armoured combat vehicles and artillery, and is close for combat helicopters. Agreement has also been reached on ceilings for all these categories except artillery. Significant differences remain on the treatment of combat aircraft, and there is much detailed work still to do on verification. As was made clear in the NATO summit declaration of 6 July, we attach great importance to the successful conclusion of these negotiations this year. We understand that the USSR shares that aim.

Tornado

57. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions between his Department and British Aerospace in relation to the recently announced cancellations of Tornado aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 2 July at column 466.

Departmental Land

61. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors he takes into account in deciding whether to release land currently held by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is Government policy that the defence estate should be no larger than necessary to satisfy the requirements of the armed forces and we are continually seeking opportunities for rationalisation and release of surplus land. As well as considering operational requirements, rationalisation studies take into account economic factors such as potential disposal receipts and savings in running costs.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much land his Department owns throughout the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government policy on such land ownership.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At 1 April 1990, Ministry of Defence landholdings in the United Kingdom, including freehold and leasehold land and foreshore, stood at 240,613 hectares. The defence estate exists to meet the services' needs for operational bases, training areas, accommodation and support facilities and it is our policy that the size of the estate is the minimum necessary to meet these requirements. Since 1979, more than 12,000 hectares of land have been sold and we are continually seeking further opportunities to rationalise and reduce our landholdings.

Type 23 Frigates

64. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the command and control system for the type 23 frigate fully works yet.

Mr. Neubert: The type 23 frigate command system is currently under development and is planned to enter service in the mid-1990s.

65. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes he anticipates will be necessary in the low-flying training programe as a result of changes in the United Kingdom's defence requirements following recent developments in eastern Europe.

79. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received on the subject of low flying; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Neubert: During June 1990, the Ministry of Defence received 742 inquiries or complaints about military low-flying training in the United Kingdom. My Department will continue to seek to ensure that the disturbance caused by low flying is kept to the minimum consistent with meeting essential training requirements.

83. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received in connection with low-flying aircraft in north-west Norfolk.

Mr. Neubert: During June 1990 the Ministry of Defence received six inquiries or complaints from north-west Norfolk about military low-flying training.

85. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received a copy of the report published by the Western European Union on low flying; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Soviet Union continued to produce large numbers of conventional weapons in 1989, although in certain categories, especially tanks and fighter aircraft, we believe output was significantly reduced from the previous year's level. On the naval side, six major combatants and nine submarines were completed.

Royal Navy

76. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet in a position to announce what changes to the Royal Navy will result from his review of defence commitments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 14 June 1990 at columns 329-30.

The basis of the current rules was laid down in 1937 and has been subject to regular review, the latest in 1989.

Month	Days
January	6
February	8
March	10
April	6
May	10
June	15

Actual firing at the range fell short of planned levels, due mainly to adverse weather conditions, particularly in the early part of the year. There are no plans to increase live firing at Willsworthy range above currently permitted levels.

Royal Marines Reserve

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently members of the Royal Marines Reserve; and how he expects that number to change in the next five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The strength of the Royal Marines Reserve as at 31 May 1990 was 1,135. In 1983 we announced plans to increase the strength of the RMR by 400 men, to about 1,580 men in total, and the RMR continues to recruit towards this manpower target.

Social Fund

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of provision per trainee for (i) employment training trainees and (ii) comparable trainees funded by the European social fund.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training managers have (a) withdrawn from the scheme or (b) reduced the number of trainees they take, with the introduction of the new contract, from each of the (i) private, (ii) local authority and (iii) voluntary sectors.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest available information shows that nine private sector, three local authority and four voluntary sector training managers have withdrawn from employment training following the introduction of new contracts. Information about those training managers who have reduced the number of their trainees is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Charter

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made by the European Community Commission in preparing directives arising out of the principles of the social charter; and if he has received any guidance from the Commission on whether the directives are to be considered by majority vote.

Mr. Eggar: The European Commission has published four draft directives from its social action programme; one concerns asbestos, and three concern part-time and temporary work. The Commission's proposal is that the draft directive on asbestos and two of the draft directives on part time and temporary work, should be decided by qualified majority voting.

I understand that the Commission is well advanced in drafting a number of other directives. We do not yet know how many of these are likely to be proposed for qualified majority voting.

Employment Training

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the current level of expenses paid to those on employment training schemes.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the development of youth training.

Mr. Nicholls: New youth training is a major step forward. It offers the promise of a level-2 qualification or more for every trainee who can achieve it. It offers flexible design and duration of training and wider eligibility. It will provide improved help for those with special training needs and those seeking employment after training.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to improve the quality of the initial assessment of trainees on employment training courses.

Mr. Nicholls: A number of initiatives are continuing to develop and improve the quality of initial assessment of trainees seeking training within employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department concurs with the findings and recommendations of the "Tourism for All" report, which was published last year by the English tourist board. The national tourist boards, in collaboration with the holiday care service, are currently taking forward those recommendations, which are designed to improve access for people with special needs to the whole range of tourist facilities.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have been created.

Mr. Eggar: Twenty TECs have now signed operational contracts and I will arrange for a list of board members for these TECs together with their companies/organisations to be placed in the House of Commons Library as soon as possible.

Government Training Schemes

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many trainers were involved with Government training schemes on (a) 18 June 1979 and (b) the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Telephone Chatlines

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that jobs with chatline companies are not advertised in Government jobcentres if they carry bonus incentives to keep callers talking for long spells.

Mr. Eggar: The Employment Service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Training Centre, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what alternative provision he will make for the accommodation of the employee rehabilitation centre, Western avenue, Cardiff, after 1993.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 July 1990]: Plans for the alternative provision for the accommodation of the employment rehabilitation centre, Western avenue, Cardiff, after 1993 have yet to be made. The South Glamorgan committee for the employment of disabled people will be consulted in drawing up any such plans.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations he has undertaken regarding the future provision and location of services provided by the employee rehabilitation centre, Western avenue, Cardiff.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 July 1990]: In the consultative document on employment and training for people with disabilities published by my Department on 29 June, my right hon. and learned Friend invited comments on plans for developing employment rehabilitation provision. The document has been sent to over 1,400 individuals and organisations including the South Glamorgan advisory committee for the employment of disabled people. Consultations about the future provision and location of services specifically provided by the employment rehabilitation centre in Cardiff have not yet commenced.

PRIME MINISTER

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government will publish a White Paper making an economic assessment of the effect of joining the ERM of the European monetary system at the current rate of exchange.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's Government have no plans to publish such a White Paper. Participation in the exchange rate mechanism will help to reinforce counter-inflationary policy.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Surendra Paul

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information Her Majesty's high commissioner to India has in relation to a warning given in advance to the Assam state police about the murder of Mr. Surendra Paul.

Mr. Maude: The British high commission has no information about any such warning.

EC (Irish Presidency)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the period of the Irish presidency of the European Community.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made to the House on 28 June by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 28 June at columns 489-90.

Human Rights

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries in each of the past five years to which Her Majesty's Government have made representations over human rights violations.

Mr. Maude: In the last five years we have made representations to the Governments of many countries, both bilaterally and with our EC partners. The precise information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The diplomatic and aid wings together have so far received 35 requests for subject access, all from present or former members of staff: this figure is in line with forecasts of likely numbers of applications. We do not propose to change the arrangements for charges set out in the reply given by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member on 30 October 1987, Official Report, column 478.

Albania

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Albania concerning the refugees that are seeking to leave the country.

Mr. Waldegrave: On behalf of the whole Community, the ambassadors of the four member states represented in Tirana called on the Albanian Minister of Foreign Affairs on 7 July. They delivered an agreed statement urging the Albanian Government to ensure that the safety of the refugees, to refrain from reprisals against their families, to allow them to receive such assistance as necessary and to guarantee their departure from Albania.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for establishing new links with the Albanian Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following the apparent thaw in early 1990 in Albania's attitude towards the outside world we renewed on 20 April our 1980 offer to establish diplomatic relations without pre-conditions.

Indonesia

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet the Indonesian Foreign Minister.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no immediate plans for a meeting with the Foreign Minister though he hopes one will be possible before long.

North and South Korea

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made with regard to the opening of the border between North and South Korea.

Mr. Maude: None. We have consistently supported all realistic initiatives which might lead to peace on the Korean peninsula. We welcome the resumption of official contacts on 3 July. How these contacts might be expanded must be left to discussion between North and South Korea.

Liberia

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts he has had in the previous 12 months with the Liberian Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. Her Majesty's ambassador in Monrovia however has regular contacts with members of the Liberian Government.

Kenya

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Kenya for the release of political prisoners and the establishment of multi-party democracy there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I would refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave to the honourable Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) on 17 July, Official Report, column 496.

China

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many diplo matic contacts and at what levels, have taken place with Chinese diplomatic representatives over the past month.

Mr. Maude: Regular contacts on a variety of subjects have been maintained between the two Governments through channels up to and including the Chinese ambassador in London and the British chargé d'affaires in Peking.

Visas

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs from which European countries visitors to the United Kingdom are required to have visas; and what plans he has for removing these restrictions on a country-by-country basis.

Mr. Maude: Visitors to the United Kingdom from the following European countries require visas:

Albania
Bulgaria
Czechoslovakia
Hungary
Poland
Romania
Soviet Union
Turkey

We have no plans to abolish visas for Turkey, which were only recently imposed—in June 1989. We welcome the moves towards greater democracy and the freer movement of people in eastern Europe. We are examining our visa policies towards these countries on a case-by-case basis, in the light of developments, and keeping in touch with our European Community partners.

Ivory

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Hong Kong Government will comply in full with the CITES ban on all commercial trade in ivory when the six-month reservation is withdrawn on 18 July.

Mr. Maude: The Hong Kong Government have already enacted legislation to implement the CITES ban on international commercial trade in ivory. The legislation will come into effect when our reservation is withdrawn on 18 July 1990. A potential loophole in the legislation which might have enabled tourists to export ivory as souvenirs up to a weight of 5 kg has been closed. Hong Kong legislation now fully reflects the CITES convention.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the reason for the delay in issuing advice to school governors about their responsibilities under the Data Protection Act; whether his Department has any plans to indemnify or compensate any school governor prosecuted under the Act; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Preparation of guidance is well under way, but proving to be more complex than expected. The Data Protection Registrar is aware of the position and will be consulted in the course of its preparation.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not collected by the Department. The subject access fee for external requests is £8, which is below the maximum set in central guidance. Current and previous employees are not charged.

Grant-maintained Schools

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the issue of parents of first-year pupils, or children due to become first-year pupils at the start of the next school year, being disenfranchised from ballots on opting out due to the fact that the procedure was initiated in the period shortly before their children became formally registered at the school; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has received a number of letters on this subject. Guidance is contained in the Department's booklet "School Governors: How to become a Grant-Maintained School", which was sent last year to every school eligible to apply for GM status. It advises governors and parents to think carefully about the timing of actions they take.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals are being considered for amendments to the Education Reform Act in order to make it easier for schools to opt out; whether the introduction of a procedure to opt back into local education authority control, on the same basis as that to opt out, is under consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: This September there will be 44 GM schools with a total of 30,000 pupils. That means the number of GM schools has more than doubled in 12 months. That is an impressive measure of the strength of interest among parents and governors in becoming grant maintained. My right hon. Friend will be keeping a careful watch to ensure that LEAs do not abuse their position when dealing with individual schools; and will be ready to take further action should it prove to be necessary.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much his Department's booklet "Grant-Maintained Schools: Questions Parents Ask" cost to produce and distribute.

Mrs. Rumbold: The cost of printing the booklets and of posting an initial distribution to all schools eligible to apply for grant-maintained status was £32,275.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the introduction of a standard wording for parents' petitions requiring the governing body of schools to organise a ballot on whether or not the school should opt out of local education authority control; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received one letter on this subject. Guidance on the wording of parental petitions was given in the booklet "School Governors: How to Become a Grant-maintained School", which was sent last year to every school eligible to apply for GM status. Paragraph 11 of the booklet said:

"The wording of the petition should make it clear that it is to require the governing body of the school, in accordance with Section 60 of the Education Reform Act, to hold a ballot of parents on the question of whether the school should apply to the Secretary of State for grant-maintained status".

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the organisations referred to in his Department's booklet "School Governors: How to become a Grant-Maintained School" as sources of information on the subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Officials in the Department have received two letters on this subject.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities and local authority associations concerning his Department's booklet "Grant-Maintained Schools: Questions Parents Ask".

Mrs. Rumbold: There has been correspondence between the Association of County Councils and the Department about the booklet. My right hon. Friend has not received representations from individual local authorities about the booklet.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received a copy of the booklet published by Local Schools Information called "Grant-Maintained Schools: Questions Parents Ask"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has seen a copy of the booklet. The booklet suggests that grant-maintained schools could be isolated, but the facts point the other way. GM schools are working together constructively, sharing experiences and co-operating in joint ventures. The booklet also suggests that an application for GM status would be a leap in the dark. Yet the first GM schools have welcomed their new status and are already making full use of their greater freedom and responsibilities.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines he has issued in respect of the arrangements he would expect a governing body to make in order to enable parents of a school where opting out was being considered to have an informed debate about the options available.

Mrs. Rumbold: Guidance on this point is contained in the Department's booklet "School Governors: How to become a Grant-Maintained School", which was sent to all schools eligible to apply for GM status last year. Paragraph 21 of the booklet says

"That debate [for and against grant-maintained status for a particular school] will have to take place locally . . . and will no doubt be well under way before the ballot is actually held. The Secretary of State has made it clear that he expects such debate, and any ballot on grant-maintained status or its procedures to be properly conducted: if this proves not to be the case, he may require the ballot to be held again."

In addition a letter was sent from the Department to every local education authority in February 1989 about the responsibilities of LEAs during ballots on grant-maintained status. The letter made clear the Secretary of State's intention that parents, governors and school staff should be able to consider the option of grant-maintained status without fear of intimidation or harassment.

Special Educational Needs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many appeals under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 he is currently considering; how mnay of those appeals concern hearing-impaired children; and how many have been under consideration for 12 months or more.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend is currently considering 48 appeals under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981, four of which concern hearing-impaired children. Of these 48 appeals, 22 have been under consideration for 12 months or more. Appeals are complex and involve the consideration of a large number of documents and representations. The Department has recently revised its procedures in order to minimise the time taken to reach decisions on individual cases but has to balance the need for speed with the need for thorough and careful consideration of the details of each case. My right hon. Friend must ensure that, in line with the rules of natural justice, each party has the chance to present his or her version of the facts and be able to comment on the other's version. This process can involve several lengthy exchanges between parents, the Department and the LEA.

Reading Standards

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many 10-year-old children in state schools in England and Wales were recorded as experiencing reading difficulties in the school sessions (a) 1979-80 and (b) 1989-90.

Mrs. Rumbold: Such national data do not exist currently, although the national curriculum assessment arrangements will in due course provide information about the reading levels of pupils at seven, 11, 14 and 16.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the companies that have been contracted to build each of the city technology colleges so far designated.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information that the hon. Member requested is listed below:

	Company
Kingshurst phase 1	Miller Construction
phase 2	Wimpey

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the individual companies that have agreed to sponsor city technology colleges, indicating in each case the amount of money promised.

Mrs. Rumbold: The principle sponsors of the city technology colleges announced to date are as follows:

In addition, a further 80 companies/individuals have pledged over £9 million to the programme as a whole. Discussions are continuing with other prospective sponsors, and I am confident that these talks will provide further sponsorship.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Political Parties (Funding)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the introduction of state funding for political parties.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

Passport Offices

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many days have been lost through sickness at each of the passport offices in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is shown in the table for the financial year 1989-90 and for the period 1 April to 8 July 1990.

	Total days lost April 1989-March 1990	Total days lost 1 April 1990-8 July 1990
London	3,538	828
Liverpool	5,749	1,399
Peterborough	2,997	918
Newport	3,782	1,140
Glasgow	4,876	1,305
Belfast	347	199

Passport Office, London

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has taken to make the passport office waiting room in Petty France more congenial.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A comprehensive refurbishment of the passport office waiting room in Petty France is now almost complete. The work has included redecoration and the replacement of floor covering, seating and lighting. Improved toilet facilities and other amenities have also been provided, and consideration is being given to some pictorial displays.

Child Care

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the ministerial group on women's issues, 1989 and 1990 five-point plans on child care.

Mr. John Patten: In April 1989 the ministerial group on women's issues discussed and agreed the following five-point plan designed to encourage the development of a range of high-quality child care options:

1. to amend the then Children Bill so as to improve the registration and enforcement arrangements for day nurseries, child minders and playgroups;
2. to encourage the providers of child care and employers to consider the need for a voluntary accreditation scheme, which would provide information about the availability of child care facilities and guarantee the quality of the provision;
3. to issue guidance to local education authorities and school governors in England, encouraging the use of school premises for after school and holiday play schemes;
4. to give further support to the voluntary sector through pump-priming of projects and encouragement of partnerships between employers and the voluntary sector;
5. to give further encouragement to employers to use the tax reliefs available to provide child care facilities.

Having implemented the April 1989 plan, the group approved a follow-up programme of action in February 1990:

1. to issue new guidelines and regulations to local authorities on day care services for children under eight years, as part of the implementation of the Children Act 1989;
2. the Department of Health to work with local authorities to help them improve their practice on the registration of day care services;
3. to encourage the development of information services on child care for both parents and employers;
4. to continue to encourage employers to become involved in providing help with child care for their staff;
5. to continue to set an example to employers, by developing a range of flexible working patterns and child care facilities to assist civil servants who choose to combine paid work and family responsibility.

Domestic Fires

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is planned by the Government to reduce the risk to human life caused by fires in domestic property.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Department regards fire prevention publicity and education as an important element in helping to reduce and minimise the risk to human life in domestic fires. Our proposals for fire prevention activity were described in the reply I gave to a Question from the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 11 June at column 17. In addition, a mobile information unit for the elderly on fire prevention and fire safety will be used to tour major urban retail market areas. A television filler film dealing with fire safety for young children will be produced later this year.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of complaints received by the Police Complaints Authority originating from Newham in the last two years; and how many (a) were investigated and (b) are being investigated.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 July 1990]: We have no such information. Under the provisions of part IX of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, there are matters for the Police Complaints Authority and the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I understand from the commissioner that this information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A, category B, and category C inmates were serving their sentence in each prison region in England and Wales for the latest date available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 5 July 1990]: The latest information readily available centrally is given in the table.

Population[1] of adult male sentenced prisoners in local and training prisons in England and Wales on 31 December 1989: by Prison Service region and security category of prisoner.

Prison Service Region	[2]A	B	C	D	Not recorded	Total population
Midland	62	422	3,284	1,126	413	5,307
North	209	1,859	4,242	1,361	1,218	8,889
South East	125	1,947	3,820	1,445	2,136	9,473

All regions	461	5,089	13,497	4,798	4,605	28,450

[1] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate: detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.
[2] Including prisoners provisionally placed in category A.

Pregnant Prisoners

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women who have been known to be pregnant have been sentenced to prison in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 9 May 1990, c. 142]: I regret that incorrect information was contained in that answer. The reply should have read as follows:

The information requested is not available. However, the annual reports on the work of the prison service record the number of pregnant females temporarily removed to outside hospitals for delivery and returning to establishments afterwards. The figures are:

	Numbers
1988-89	63
1987-88	75
1986-87	62
1985-86	71
1984-85	[1]70
1983	70
1982	51
1981	74
1980	75
1979	74

[1] Covers 15-month period.

Additionally, there were eight deliveries within prison service establishments between 1 January 1979 and 31 March 1989:

	Numbers
1988-89	2
1987-88	1
1985-86	1
1984-85	1
1983	1
1982	1
1979	1

Child Emigrants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about child emigrants; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 9 July at columns 209-10.

ENVIRONMENT

Owner-occupation

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of owner-occupation in Britain and in each European Community country.

Mr. Chope: The available information is as follows:

	Percentage of owner-occupied housing	Year
Belgium	61	1981
Denmark	56	1987
France	51	1984
Germany	41	1985
Greece	72	1982
Ireland	76	1981
Italy	64	1986
Luxembourg	60	1982
Netherlands	44	1985
Portugal	56	1981
Spain	76	1980

Corresponding estimates for Great Britain are 58 per cent. for 1982 and 66 per cent. for 1989. Figures for the various countries are not all compiled on a comparable basis and should be interpreted with caution.

Homelessness

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest available figure for homelessness; and what the figure was in 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 27 June, Official Report column 276.

Housing (Young People)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has undertaken of the availability of affordable housing for young people.

Mr. Micheal Spicer: Various projects in my Department's research programme bear on aspects of availability and affordability.

Rights of Way

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the director of the Ramblers Association to discuss rights of way in the countryside.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside last met representatives of the Ramblers Association, including the director, on 8 February, when they had a useful and productive discussion on a wide range of access issues.

Beaches

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the present standard of cleanliness of the beaches in Britain.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In 1989 a total of 76 per cent. of our bathing waters met the standards set in the EEC bathing water directive compared with only 51 per cent. in 1986. Over the next 10 years, around £2·9 billion will be invested to bring all of our bathing waters up to standard and to treat all significant discharges of sewage.

Common Land

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to come to a decision on common land before the summer recess.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend still hopes to make an announcement soon on the Government's intentions on common land legislation but cannot commit himself to do so before the summer recess.

Ancient Monuments

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to amend the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979 so as to make it an offence to remove, without consent, any item of historical or archaeological interest from the site of a scheduled ancient monument; and if he will consider less formal measures relating to finds made on an unscheduled site.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment proposes to amend the 1979 Act when a suitable legislative opportunity arises. He is also considering the most appropriate measures for finds made on unscheduled sites.

Wetlands Conservation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 25 June, Official Report, column 39, he will raise at the special session of the United Nations Environmental Programme the problem of wetlands conservation as a priority evolving environmental issue, in relation to Halvergate marshes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I see no need to raise the subject of wetlands conservation at the UNEP governing council since such issues were recently discussed in some depth at the fourth conference of the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance in Montreux, Switzerland.

Since 1987 Halvergate marshes have been afforded the protection provided by designation of the Broads as an environmentally sensitive area under article 19 of EC regulation 797/85. In 1989 a substantial proportion of the marshes was given additional protection by inclusion in the second tier of the ESA scheme, which imposes more restrictions on operations by participating farmers.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a table listing all buildings which are protected by grades I and II status.

Mr. Trippier: Local planning authorities hold copies of the lists of buildings of special architectural or historic interest in their areas and are required to make them available for public inspection free of charge. A complete set of lists is similarly available for inspection at the Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England, Fortress house, Savile row, London W1. Since there are now over 435,000 listed buildings in England, with the lists being constantly added to or amended, the hon. Member will understand that publication of a single table listing all such buildings is not a practical proposition.

Quarry Dust Emissions

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those statutory functions presently discharged by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in respect of quarry dust emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Health and Safety (Emissions to the Atmosphere) Regulations 1983 prescribes certain classes of mineral works as requiring registration under section 9 of the Alkali Works etc. Regulation Act 1906. In these cases, the operator of the process must make an application to the Secretary of State in accordance with the Health and Safety (Emissions to the Atmosphere) Regulations 1989 for a registration. The regulations provide for the advertising of the application and for both it and any subsequent registration granted to be available on a public register maintained by the relevant local authority. These registrations are granted, on behalf of the Secretary of State for the Environment, by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Before granting a registration, the operator of the process must, by virtue of section 5(1) of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 demonstrate that he is using best practicable means for preventing the emission into the atmosphere from the premises of noxious or offensive substances and for rendering harmless and inoffensive such substances as may be so emitted.

Part I of the 1974 Act also provides the necessary powers for the appointment by the Secretary of State of inspectors and inspection of registered processes. It also provides for the serving of improvement notices where operators are failing to comply with the terms of their registration and for subsequent legal action for failure to comply with the terms of such a notice. The pursuit of formal legal remedies would normally only be undertaken when discussions between the operator and the inspectorate had failed to secure the necessary improvements.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the National Rivers Authority to discuss progress on implementing anti-pollution measures.

Mr. Trippier: I met the chairman of the National Rivers Authority on 9 July to discuss a range of issues relating to the water environment. Since then I have announced that an additional £11 million will be made available to the authority this financial year, if required, over and above the £93 million grant-in-aid already agreed. This decision will enable the authority to continue its planned capital programme and to carry out its pollution control and other functions, in line with the Government's commitment to maintaining the quality of the water environment.

Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was paid by the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation in redundancy payments to the general manager, the estates officer (Warrington), and heads of the architecture, marketing, landscaping and interior design departments.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 July 1990]: In accordance with its contractual obligations Warrington and Runcorn development corporation made the following redundancy payments:

General Manager	78,955
Chief Architect and Planner	44,433
Sales Manager	32,354
Marketing Manager	25,248
Chief Landscape Architect	34,390

The estates officer (Warrington) did not receive a redundancy payment. The development corporation did not have an interior design department.

Recycling

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities that have made written submissions on the subject of recycling credits; and if he will make those submissions available to the public on request.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The information requested is given in the table. The submissions cannot be made available without the agreement of the individual authorities concerned since they were not sought on the basis that they would be published.

European Football Competitions

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the text of the memoranda sent to the European Football Association by the Minister for Sport recommending the return of English clubs to European football.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 July 1990]: I am arranging for copies of my letter to the president of UEFA and the report which accompanied it to be placed in the Library of the House. As the report indicates, the information contained in annexes A and B was provided by the police to the Home Office. The information in annex C was provided by the Italian authorities.

River Mersey (Waste Discharges)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in encouraging industries which discharge waste into the River Mersey to establish treatment facilities.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 16 July 1990]: Encouraging the proper discharge of waste into the Mersey by private industry is a key aim of the Government's Mersey Basin campaign. The campaign is making good progress and many of the known major dischargers have programmes of remedial work and effluent management plans. As an example my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside opened the third and final phase of an effluent treatment programme at Bridgewater Paper Company in Ellesmere Port on 2 July. At the national level the National Rivers Authority is already the regulatory body and watchdog to safeguard water resources; and the Environmental Protection Bill when enacted will provide for continuing improvements in emission standards as techniques and technology improve.

River Mersey (Oil Spillage)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning the oil spillage on the River Mersey on 12 July.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the financial help he will be awarding to Wirral council following the clean-up operation of oil which leaked from a Kuwait Petroleum Company tanker on 12 July;

(2) if, following the major spillage of oil from a Kuwait Petroleum Company tanker, he will set up an inquiry to consider the question of responsibility and compensation.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 16 July 1990]: On Thursday 12 July, an estimated 30 tonnes or so of Kuwaiti crude oil was spilled into the River Mersey at the Tranmere oil terminal of Shell Ltd. during tank cleaning operations on the United Kingdom registered MV Tonbridge owned by the Kuwaiti Oil Tanker Company. The marine pollution control unit—MPCU—of the Department of Transport were informed immediately and carried out an aerial reconnaissance of the scene. Under the terms of the Mersey oil spill plan, Mersey and Cheshire fire brigades directed operations to contain the spill and Wirral borough council prepared to carry out a beach cleaning operation using equipment made available by MPCU and on the basis of advice provided by an MPCU expert at the scene. Shell UK Ltd. also commissioned oil recovery and containment operations by specialists from the commercial oil spill service centre at Southampton. Other relevant agencies such as the Nature Conservancy Council and National Rivers Authority were informed and advised on remedial action as appropriate.

As a result of this action, some oil has been recovered and the remainder widely dispersed, partly as a result of wind and tides. By the weekend, only small quantities were being deposited on the shoreline mainly in the Rock Ferry area close to the tanker terminal on the south bank of the river. Remaining slicks of oil in the river contained mainly a light sheen which was expected to disperse rapidly. No significant impact on areas of importance to wildlife has been reported. The clean-up operations have been scaled down and I applaud the rapid response of all the parties concerned to minimise the impact of this incident.

Meeting the costs of the clean up operation is a matter for the vessel owners and insurers under the 1969 international convention on civil liability for oil pollution damage. Liability for this accident has been accepted by the Kuwaiti Oil Tanker Company and the clean-up action taken has been approved by the International Tanker Owners Pollution Federation. It is for local authorities and other parties seeking to recover costs to submit claims accordingly.

Housing

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take to reverse the fall in dwellings started in Great Britain between May 1989 and May 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 17 July 1990]: My right hon. Friend's responsibilities extend only to England. We have nearly doubled public expenditure provision for the Housing Corporation, and enabled housing associations to use private finance; this will make possible a near-doubling of their output over the next three years. Output of dwellings by private builders is determined by the market; there has been a temporary downturn in response to tight monetary policy, which is the only way to get on top of inflation.

City Grants

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria his Department uses for awarding city grants within the private sector.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 17 July 1990]: The criteria used in awarding city grants to the private sector are set out in section two of my Department's city grant guidance notes, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the methods used by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to monitor the disposal of radioactive waste; and what is the current level of monitoring staff in post and the number at the same date in each of the past three years.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 July 1990]: Details of methods used for monitoring radioactivity in the environment including those employed by HMIP, are contained in the following HMSO publications which are available in the Library:

1. "Sampling and Measurement of Radionuclides in the Environment". (Details of the HMIP monitoring programme are shown in the Appendix headed "Establishment F" on page 119).
2. "Monitoring of Radioactivity in the UK Environment".
3. "The Assurance of Quality in Environmental Radionuclide Analyses".

Available information on professional staffing levels in HMIP and prior to that in HM radiochemical inspectorate over the past three years is contained in the Department's management information system returns—MINIS 8-10—also available in the Library. The MINIS 11 report covering 1989-90 will be placed in the Library in due course.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his latest estimates of the numbers of people who have been exempted from the poll tax for each category of exempt persons.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 17 July 1990]: Estimates of numbers of exempt persons were published in the Population Report (England) laid before the House on 11 January 1990. I shall publish further estimates when data are available from local authority returns.

Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that the guidance notes being prepared by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution for part A and B processes of the Environment Protection Bill are comprehensive in respect of what constitutes excessive cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 July 1990]: These notes will not address what constitutes excessive cost. A draft of the guidance setting out the Government's interpretation of the concept of best available techniques not entailing excessive cost—BATNEEC—was placed in the Library on 26 April 1990.

Tenants' Incentive Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many local authorities are participating in the tenants' incentive scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list, for each local authority participating in the tenants' incentive scheme (a) the amount offered to tenants, (b) how many council houses have been vacated and (c) the total number of tenants applying to take part in the scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has to increase the participation rate in the tenants' incentive scheme.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 21 June 1990, c. 639]: The table sets out details of 89 local authorities which have been given approval to operate cash incentive schemes in 1990-91, the maximum expenditure to be incurred, and the grants to be made available to households. Details of vacancies created by these schemes and of grant applications will be supplied to my Department by the local authorities concerned at the end of the year.

Cash incentive schemes can be very valuable in helping existing tenants to move into homes of their own while releasing vacancies for reletting to homeless families. The Department encourages local authorities whose areas would benefit from a cash incentive scheme to bring forward proposals for approval. Once a scheme has been approved, details are published by the local authority and tenants are invited to make applications for grant.

HEALTH

Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what income the agreement between his Department and Porton International Ltd. involving the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research has generated in each full year of its existence.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no agreements between the Department and Porton International plc but there are various agreements between the public health laboratory service board and companies in the Porton International group concerning the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, one of which is an agreement on distributorship and marketing of certain products. The amount of income directly generated by this agreement cannot be separately identified, but total receipts from companies in the Porton International group are as follows:

Year ending	£
March
1985	6,300
1986	165,644
1987	824,525
1988	1,404,613
1989	1,647,370
1990	2,719,150
Total	6,767,602

Porton International

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account he will be taking in considering the bid from Porton International Ltd for the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, Porton of any previous advice offered by his Department to companies in the Porton International group about the centre.

Mr. Dorrell: We will naturally bear in mind the content of earlier discussions.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings have been held between representatives of the Department and representatives of Porton products Ltd or Porton International Ltd since January 1984; and whether any of these meetings were attended by Ministers in the Department.

Mr. Dorrell: There have been a number of meetings between representatives of the Department and representatives of Porton International plc and its associated companies since January 1984. Ministers were present when appropriate.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects a new fermentation unit to be installed at the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research; and what has been the cause of the delay in its installation.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 17 July 1990]: The arrangements for the installation of a new fermentation unit at the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research depend primarily on the centre's future functions and ownership. Until these matters are determined, it would not be sensible to proceed with the installation of a new unit.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central of 5 July, Official Report, column 672, on current licences held by the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, now many of the licences are covered by the right of marketing and distributorship agreement between Porton Products and the public health laboratory service.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 17 July 1990]: Eighteen of the licences relate directly to products or procedures in the distributorship and marketing agreement.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what valuations of plant, equipment, collections and good will have been carried out at, or on behalf of, the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research; and on what dates.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 17 July 1990]: A valuation of the land, buildings, plant and fixed equipment at the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research was completed on 14 March 1990. A valuation of other equipment is currently in hand.

In-patients

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of in-patients treated in (a) 1982 and (b) 1988-89 for all the district health authorities in the northern region, giving the percentage change in each case.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table.

Salmonella

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many outbreaks of salmonella have occurred in national health service hospitals in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The provisional totals for 1989 and to the week ending 13 July 1990 for reports to the public health laboratory service communicable disease surveillance centre of outbreaks of salmonellosis in national health service hospitals in England and Wales are nine and three respectively. Totals for previous years for comparison are 1986 = 19; 1987 = 11; 1988 = 11.

Alzheimer's Disease

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of (a) men and (b) women who are suffering from Alzheimer's disease and other dementia who are aged (a) under 40 years, (b) 50 to 60 years, (c) 60 to 70 years, (d) 70 to 80 years, (e) 80 to 90 years and (f) over 90 years; and what proportion that figure is per 1,000 of the population in each band.

Mr. Dorrell: The only information available centrally is the number of hospital episodes. The table shows estimated number of finished consultant episodes—ordinary and day case—in National Health Service hospitals and units in England, for the 1988-89 financial year where the diagnosis was senile and presenile dementia —ICD 290—and the corresponding rates per 1,000 population.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the mental illness specific grant, respite care and Alzheimer's disease and other dementias.

Mr. Dorrell: It is the Government's policy that all people suffering from mental illness, including Alzheimer's disease and similar dementias, should benefit from an appropriate range of services, including respite care. The Government will introduce a specific grant to social services authorities from 1 April 1991 to encourage them to increase the level of social care available to this group of clients.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what methodology is used to assess the incidence of Alzheimer's disease and related dementia.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government are not aware of any studies to assess the incidence of Alzheimer's disease and related dementia.

Bracken

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the letter of 22 May, POH 3/2342/31, to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what has been the response to the recommendation made by his Department's independent advisory committee on the carcinogenicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment for long-term research into bracken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has commissioned research to study the possible transmission of carcinogens from bracken into the human food chain. It is hoped that the results of the study will be available next year. The Department of the Environment is funding research into the distribution, growth and spread of bracken in the United Kingdom.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available to him on the adequacy of interpreter services provided by local authorities for people with disabilities who are unable to speak English and, in particular, for those who have additional communication handicaps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Comprehensive information about interpreter services provided by individual local authorities is not held centrally, but it is unlikely that interpreters are appointed solely to help disabled people. A number of local authorities have interpreter and translator posts, to deal with a wide range of business, funded under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966. Departmental guidance encourages social services departments to consider the use of professional interpreters where appropriate and the departmentally-funded race equality unit compiled a list last year of some 30 translation and interpretation units run or funded by local authorities. People with additional communication problems tend to look for help to health authorities, a few of which have appointed either multilingual staff to work with speech therapists or speech therapists who themselves speak other languages.

World Health Organisation Food Agency

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the circulars issued by the World Health Organisation food agency in Geneva since 1983; and what action has been taken on the basis of each one by his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: The World Health Organisation has no single agency with sole responsibility for food. However, through a variety of routes the World Health Organisation issues advice and information from time to time on matters related to food. In each case this is carefully considered, in the light of specialist scientific opinion, for its implications for food and food safety policy in this country.

Etidronate

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there are any plans to license prescription of the drug Etidronate; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Product licences for Sodium Etidronate were granted in 1987 for use in the treatment of Pagets disease and hypercalcaemia.

Welfare Milk Scheme

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effect of the implementation of the revised welfare milk scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has kept the effects of the amendments to the welfare milk reimbursement scheme under constant review since their implementation in January. My noble Friend Baroness Hooper has been in correspondence with the main organisations in the dairy and retail trade and has met representatives of the milk marketing boards and the Dairy Trade Federation—DTF. Departmental officials have also had a number of meetings with the DTF branches of the National Dairymen's Association and other interested bodies.

Arrangements to share the cost of discounted reimbursement prices are already in operation between most processors and distributors. Similar arrangements between processors and producers have yet to be agreed between the Dairy Trade Federations and the milk marketing boards. The boards have indicated that the effect of the Welfare Food (Amendment) Regulations January 1990, can be taken into account under the established joint committee procedure for negotiating changes in the board's selling price.

Most recently, the Dairy Trade Federation made formal proposals to the Department for future discounted reimbursement arrangements for welfare milk supplies. We have now authorised negotiations to proceed on the basis of these proposals. The first meeting took place this week.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table for each of the district health authorities in England showing the cost of administrative and clerical staff as a proportion of net revenue expenditure, respectively, for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 8 June 1990]: Information derived from the 1988-89 annual accounts of district health authorities in England has been placed in the Library.

The administrative and clerical staff group within the national health service covers a diversity of grades including catering, laundry and other managers and certain ambulance officers as well as administrative, clerical and secretarial staff as such. A number of hospital staff are employed at local levels on clerical and secretarial grades but in fact provide essential support in various departments and without them patient treatment cannot effectively take place. Some such staff work in direct support of clinicians and as ward clerks, releasing qualified staff to carry out tasks for which they are trained.

Private Patients (Bad Debts)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give, for each district health authority, regional health authority and special health authority, the amount written off in respect of bad debts from (a) private in-patients and (b) private out-patients for the latest available year.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 14 June 1990]: The information requested derived from the 1988-89 annual accounts—the latest available—of regional and district health authorities in England together with those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals has been placed in the Library. Sums written off in a particular financial year may include amounts due from earlier years.

We expect health authorities to take all reasonable action to collect their debts. For 1988-89 the total sums written off in respect of private patient debts—£575,819 in-patients and £157,206 out-patients—represented approximately 1 per cent. of the equivalent income figures —£62,422,151 and £14,473,125 net of sums written off—for that year and which represented a valuable resource for the health authorities concerned.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about progress on the proposed amendments to the Food Hygiene Regulations.

Mr. Dorrell: I have today laid before Parliament the Food Hygiene (Amendment) Regulations 1990—S.I. 1431. These will introduce for the first time a system of temperature controls throughout the food chain, and especially during storage, distribution and retail sale in order to minimise the opportunity for growth of pathogenic micro-organisms such as listeria and salmonella. There will be a phased implementation of the provisions to allow all businesses time to ensure that their refrigeration equipment can keep food at the required temperatures.

From 1 April 1991 all foods covered by the Regulations must be kept at or below 8 deg. Centigrade. The foods concerned include all ready prepared meals, soft cheeses, cooked meats, pates and prepared salads.

From 1 April 1993, the foods which are most at risk of contamination with listeria must be kept at or below 5 deg. Centigrade. These foods include soft cheeses, pates and other prepared foods which are to be eaten without further cooking.

From 1 April 1992, small delivery vehicles—less than 7·5 tonnes gross weight—will be required to deliver foods in the controlled categories within the 8 deg. Centigrade limit but the regulations as laid will exempt small delivery vehicles making local deliveries from complying with the 5 deg. Centigrade requirement. This provision will be kept under review as the technology develops which would allow small delivery vehicles to comply.

In all cases there is a 2 deg. Centigrade tolerance to the specified temperatures to allow for the defrost cycle or for the temporary breakdown of the equipment, movement of the food or a step in processing.

There are exemptions from these temperature provisions for example for canned food and dehydrated foods. Freshly prepared foods do not have to comply with the temperature requirements for limited periods of time.

The regulations also require foods which are to be served hot to be kept at or above 63 deg. Centigrade.

The regulations contain detailed provisions, so that everyone affected will know what is required of them, including manufacturers, retailers, caterers, distributors and enforcement officers, the Department of Health is consulting on guidelines for that purpose. These will give details of the foods which are subject to the temperature controls and suggest ways of monitoring refrigeration equipment to ensure that the temperatures are being met. Copies of the draft guidelines will be made available in the Library of the House.

The temperature control provisions introduced by these regulations are a further step forward in ensuring the safety of our food. They are the first statutory temperature controls for most food businesses. We intend to keep their operation and effectiveness under review in the light of experience and any related European Community measures subsequently introduced.

Hospitals

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of (a) hospital beds, (b) nurses, (c) consultants and (d) all administrative staff in the national health service hospitals in (i) England and (ii) the Basildon and Thurrock health authority or its predecessor for each of the years 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980, 1985 and the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell [pursuant to the reply, 6 July 1990, c. 710-12]: I regret that one of the tables published contained an error. The corrected table for Basildon and Thurrock DHA is as follows:

Basildon and Thurrock DHA[1]

Year	Average daily number of available hospital beds[2]	Discharges and deaths[2]	Hospital nursing and midwifery staff (WTE)[3]	Hospital medical and dental consultants (WTE)[4]	Administration and clerical staff (WTE)
1960	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a
1966	2,360	14,930	n/a	n/a	n/a
1970	2,430	19,010	n/a	n/a	n/a

Year	Average daily number of available hospital beds[2]	Discharges and deaths[2]	Hospital nursing and midwifery staff (WTE)[3]	Hospital medical and dental consultants (WTE)[4]	Administration and clerical staff (WTE)
1975	1,860	22,920	n/a	n/a	n/a
1980	1,880	29,450	[5]1,820	n/a	[5]310

1988	1,720	33,710	1,970	n/a	520

[1] All figures are rounded to the nearest ten (10).
[2] For years 1966 and 1970 the data is for Tilbury and South East Essex and South Ockenden hospital management committee.
[3] There was a change in nurses' working hours in 1980-81 from 40 to 37·5 hours per week. This has not been taken account of in the calculations.
[4] Figures are not available as consultant's contracts ae not directly held by non-teaching district health authorities.
[5] Due to reorganisation of district boundaries in 1982, 1980 district data is not directly comparable to later years.
n/a = not available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Offences

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give separately for magistrates courts and Crown courts for (a) 1988 and (b) for 1989 the number of cases involving non-scheduled offences in which pleas of not guilty were entered; in how many of these cases verdicts of not guilty were returned; and in how many of these cases trial was by jury.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: (a) Figures for 1988 are:

	Magistrates courts	Crown courts
Plea: Not guilty	4,696	188
Verdict: Not guilty	3,209	91

(b) Figures for 1989 are:

	Magistrates courts	Crown courts
Plea: Not guilty	4,006	144
Verdict: Not guilty	3,072	91

All Crown court cases involving non-scheduled offences where not guilty pleas were entered were tried by jury. Figures for magistrates courts include all offences with a plea of not guilty and therefore include a small number of 'terrorist-type' offences.

Prison Population

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the size of the prison population in Northern Ireland at the end of 1989, divided into terrorist-type offenders and other offenders categorised by sex in the groups: under 18 years old, 18 to 25 years, 25 to 30 years, 30 to 40 years, 40 to 50 years, 50 to 60 years and over 60 years; and if he will give a breakdown of the length of sentence being served by each age group under the headings (i) up to three months, (ii) over three months and up to six months, (iii) over six months and under 12 months, (iv) over 12 months and under 18 months, (v) over 18 months and up to four years, (vi) over four years and up to eight years, (vii) over eight years, and (viii) life.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: The size of the prison population at 28 December 1989 was 1,371, including 16 female prisoners.

The statistical tables detail the breakdown by sex and age. Statistical information is given for scheduled and non-scheduled offences, information on terrorist-type offenders is not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

School Closures

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many schools in Northern Ireland of less than 50 pupils closed in (a) 1975, (b) 1980, (c) 1985 and (d) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The information requested is as follows:-

	Number
1975	16
1980	10
1985	10
1989	2

Our policy remains to support the rationalisation of small schools since this is in the best educational interests of pupils. However, in considering proposals for rationalisation we take into account the likely effects on local communities, particularly in isolated areas.

Fair Employment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list in the Official Report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each district council in the county of Tyrone; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each district council in the county of Fermanagh; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees;

(3) if he will list in the Official Report, those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each district council in County Londonderry; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees;

(4) if he will list in the Official Report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each district council in County Down; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees;

(5) if he will list in the Official Report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Commission for each district council in County Antrim; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees;

(6) if he will list in the Official Report those firms and employers which are registered with the Northern Ireland

Fair Employment Commission for each district council in the county of Armagh; and if he will indicate for each such firm and employer the number of employees.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 July 1990]: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. I am advised, however, that the Fair Employment Commission has provided all Northern Ireland Members of Parliament with a draft of its alphabetical register of concerns indicating the number of employees in each concern.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the Fair Employment Commission to release information on community composition from individual monitoring returns from employers.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 July 1990]: The commission has not yet announced its intentions in relation to releasing such information.

ACE Project (Londonderry)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the ACE project sponsored by the Inner City Trust in Londonderry falls within the Northern Ireland fair employment legislation.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 July 1990]: As a sponsor under the Action for Community Employment programme the Inner City Trust, Londonderry is the employer of ACE workers. Consequently the trust's ACE project falls within the Fair Employment (NI) Acts 1976 and 1989.

Housing (Repairs and Improvements)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of (a) repair and (b) improvement grant applications (i) approved and (ii) refused by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, in each district council area in each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The matters raised are for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. Information on the individual grant types or of approvals and refusals of grant in district council areas is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Employment Training

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has received a report by Camden training centre on long-term savings in the social security budgets arising from their training provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have not, as yet, received a copy of the report.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research has been done on the savings for social security budgets arising from the employment training and other Government training schemes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The monitoring of the employment training and of other Government training schemes, including all aspects of expenditure on them, is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Independent Living foundation grants were made to people (a) under 75 years and (b) 75 years or over in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security pursuant to his answer on 4 July, Official Report, column 607, what increases in national insurance contribution rates would be needed to pay for a basic retirement pension of £58·65 for a single person and £94·05 for a couple if the Treasury supplement to the national insurance fund were reintroduced at the same rate as in 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There would be no increase needed in national insurance contributions were the Treasury supplement to the national insurance fund to be reintroduced at its 1979 level. However a supplement at that level is equivalent to, for example, nearly 5p in the pound on basic rate income tax in 1990-91.

TRANSPORT

Trading Standards Officers

145. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from trading standards officers on the need for further legislation to tackle unroadworthy vehicles.

146. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from trading standards officers on the need for further legislation to tackle unroadworthy vehicles.

Mr. Atkins: Trading standards officers want us to strengthen that part of the Road Traffic Act 1988 which makes it an offence to sell unroadworthy vehicles. We agree and propose to amend the Act at the earliest legislative opportunity.

They have also asked for powers to inspect used cars on dealers' premises. This requires special expertise and we have pointed out that these powers are already available to authorised examiners including examiners from the vehicle inspectorate. The vehicle inspectorate is keen to respond to any requests from individual trading standards officers.

M2 Motorway

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about proposals for widening the M2 motorway; and when consideration will be given to making it three lanes each way as far as Faversham.

Mr. Atkins: The scheme to widen the M2 between junctions 1 and 3 was extended earlier this year to include the section between junctions 3 and 4. In the light of this the programme for the whole scheme is being reviewed.

Meanwhile my Department's consultants are continuing to investigate possible options for carrying out proposed widening.

My Department has no plans at present to widen the M2 beyond junction 4 to Faversham but the need to do so will be kept under review.

Newport Docks (Traffic Controls)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the safety implications of Associated British Ports' intermittent discontinuing of traffic controls on Newport docks and the River Usk estuary.

Mr. McLoughlin: The operation from Newport pierhead of a radio information service for vessels is a matter for Associated British Ports. I understand that this information service is at present operated for 24 hours a day on weekdays, and also at the weekend whenever vessels are using Newport docks. During the periods of operation the service is available at the request of Newport harbour commissioners also to vessels using the River Usk. Vessels are in any event obliged to comply with the Collision Regulations as modified by harbour byelaws relating to navigation within the area of the relevant harbour authority.

Car Telephones

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he i as on regulations prevailing in other European Community countries to restrict the use of car telephones by drivers of moving vehicles.

Mr. Atkins: I deplore the use of hand-held telephones by drivers while their vehicle is moving. A survey conducted last year by the European Commission found that no member country had specific legislation controlling the use of in-car telephones. Like the United Kingdom, our European partners found that their general offences of driving without proper control or attention gave police adequate powers for dealing with irresponsible drivers.

A249 (Improvements)

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest forecast for the programme for the improvement of the A249 from the M2 to the Kingsferry bridge.

Mr. Atkins: Draft proposals for the Iwade bypass—Bobbing-Kingsferry—were published in March. They will need to be considered at a public inquiry—we hope towards the end of the year. Thereafter, the programme will depend on the progress that can be made with the statutory procedures, but subject to that I hope it will be possible to start work in 1993 for completion by about 1995. The present programme for the improvement of the adjoining section of A249 between the A2 and M2 is about six months behind that for the Iwade bypass.

DVLC (Information)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list (a) the persons or types of persons that may obtain names and addresses from Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre files in Swansea and (b) the number of disclosures of names and addresses that they have received over the last year; what action his Department takes if it discovers that a recipient of information should not have received the name and address; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: (a) Regulation 15 of the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations 1971 requires the Secretary of State to provide, free of charge from the vehicle register, names and addresses of vehicle keepers to the police and to local authorities for use in connection with an offence. This information must also be made available to those who can show "reasonable cause" for their inquiry—generally matters relating directly to the use of the vehicle—and pay the prescribed fee.

Information from the drivers' register at DVLC is provided to the driver, a third party who has the driver's consent, the police, other law enforcement agencies and others registered for disclosure under the Data Protection Act 1984. Names and addresses alone are rarely disclosed.

(b) In the financial year 1989-90, there were about 13 million disclosures from the vehicles register and about 1·3 million from the drivers register. A complete breakdown is not readily available but the tables attached show an estimated breakdown of disclosures from both the vehicles and drivers registers.

Name and address disclosures—Financial year 1989-90

	Number
VEHICLES REGISTER
Inquiries by tape interchange
Metropolitan Police Central Ticket Office	1,687,789
Police, Ticket Offices, Local Authorities	3,493,634
Vehicle Manufacturers' Safety Recalls	6,031,531
Manual inquiries
Police	166,263
Local Authorities and Government Departments	1,385,469
Public/insurance companies and finance houses	252,696
TOTAL	13,017,382
DRIVERS REGISTER
Police and Courts	1,000,000
Internal DVLC enquiries which, inter alia, are used to provide information to drivers, third parties (with the driver's consent) and other Government Departments including Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue	295,000
Other parts of the Department of Transport and the statutory licensing authorities in the traffic areas	40,000
TOTAL	1,335,000

If the Department discovers that there has been an invalid disclosure of information the action it takes depends on the circumstances of the case. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind perhaps he will let me have details.

Rear Seat Belts

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy with regard to the compulsory wearing of seat belts in the rear of cars; and what are the latest figures for deaths of, and serious injuries to, unrestrained rear seat passengers.

Mr. Atkins: In 1988, a total of 307 rear seat passengers who were unrestrained or not reported as having been restrained were killed and 3,756 seriously injured. Research shows that some two-thirds of these casualties could have been saved if all rear seat passengers wore seat belts.

Mandatory wearing by children was introduced in September 1989. Now that the majority of cars have rear belts fitted, the time is approaching when it would be reasonable to consider the introduction of mandatory wearing by adults.

Newbury Bypass

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is now able to give the likely route for the Newbury bypass.

Mr. Atkins: Following a public inquiry between June and November 1988 into the draft proposals for a bypass of the A34 at Newbury, my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Transport and the Secretary of State for the Environment are announcing their joint decision tomorrow. I have arranged for my hon. Friend to receive a copy of the decision which is being sent to all those who submitted objections and representations to the draft proposals and to those who attended or were represented at the inquiries.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Between 11 November 1987 and 1 July 1990 the Department received 18,145 subject access inquiries, of which 18,122 were inquiries made of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's 86 million driver and vehicle licence records held there on computer; 303,400 transactions are handled each day at the Agency. No prior estimate had been made of the number of subject access inquiries. We have no plans to reconsider the levels of fees charged.

London Underground

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of station staff on London Underground by category, for each of the years 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter which falls within the day-to-day management responsibility of London Underground Limited.

Congestion (London)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what immediate steps his Department will be taking to alleviate London's congestion problems;

(2) if he will make a statement on London's congestion problems.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are determined to ensure that London has the transport system it needs to remain a pre-eminent financial and business centre.

The number of people commuting to work in central London has increased over the last eight years, reflecting the success of the Government's overall economic policies and the transformation of Docklands. This has sharply increased demand for rail and underground services. There has been a slight increase in road traffic.

To meet this demand, we have backed a £2·2 billion programme of investment by London Transport over the next three years—nearly double in real terms investment for the last three years.

British Rail plan to invest £1·2 billion in their Network SouthEast sector over the next three years, a 30 per cent. increase in real terms over the previous three years.

It is not our policy to make it easier for commuters to drive to work in central London. Our priorities for the road system are to improve the north circular road and provide better access to east London and docklands, to tackle accident blackspots and bottlenecks, to support more effective parking controls and to get traffic out of environmentally sensitive areas. This work is estimated to cost nearly £3 billion over the next 10 years.

We shall shortly be consulting on detailed proposals for priority routes and other measures to enable traffic in London to flow more freely and safely. Particular attention will be given to measures to make bus travel more attractive.

M40

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details in the Official Report of the problems which have arisen on the unopened section of the M40 motorway between Gaydon and Banbury; whose financial responsibility the rectification of these problems will be; whether rectification of the problems will delay the opening of this particular section of the motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We have identified a problem of heave in the lime stabilised capping layer at some location on the M40 Banbury IV contract under construction between Gaydon and Banbury. Investigations are being carried out into the cause and extent of the problem. Financial responsibility for any necessary remedial works will be for determination under the contract in the light of the ongoing investigations. Any remedial works which may be necessary are not expected to delay the opening of the scheme.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Industrial Investment

147. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the per capita level of industrial investment in 1989 in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on the comparable figures for West Germany, France, the Netherlands and Italy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Following are the relevant data:

	Industrial[1] investment in 1989 $ per capita
United Kingdom	1,987
United States	2,057
Germany	2,474
France	2,096

	Industrial[1] investment in 1989 $ per capita

Balance of Trade

148. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of trade in (a) the first quarter of 1990 and (b) the first quarter of 1979.

149. Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of trade in (a) the first quarter of 1990 and (b) the first quarter of 1979.

150. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of trade in (a) the first quarter of 1990 and (b) the first quarter of 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information may be found in table A3 of the Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics and its 1989 mid-year supplement available from the Library of the House, or on the Central Statistical Office database which may be accessed through the Library.

Earnings

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many taxpayers he estimates earned more than £18,200 and less than £23,705 in 1989-90; and how much revenue his Department derived from taxing this band;

(2) how many taxpayers he estimates earned between (a) £16,000 and £17,000, (b) £17,000 and £18,200 and (c) £20,000 and £23,705 in 1989-90; and how much revenue his Department derived from taxing each band.

Mr. Ryder: Estimates for 1990-91 are as follows:

Earnings from employment, 1990-91

Earnings band	Numbers of taxpayers[1] with: earnings in the band	earnings above the band	Liability to income tax on earnings in the band[2]
£ pa	thousands	thousands	£ billion
£16,001-£17,000	800	4,050	1·1
£17,001-£18,200	750	3,300	1·1
£18,201-£20,000	600	2,700	1·3
£20,001-£23,705	1,150	1,550	1·8

[1] Taxpayers aged under 65, husbands and wives counted separately.
[2] Treated earnings as the lowest slice of income.

The estimates are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are provisional.

Taxation

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will restore immediately the tax incentive for ship owners placing new orders.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no plans to do so. The present capital allowances regime is already more generous for ships than commercial depreciation. Ships have an economic life of 15-20 years, but for tax purposes they can be substantially written off within eight years.

Shipping

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government will take steps to provide the British shipping industry with assistance equal to that provided by other nations for their tonnage.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no present plans to do so. Many of the countries who assist shipping have rates of corporation tax which are higher than the United Kingdom's.

Mortgage Finance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the median mortgage qualifying for MIRAS and the current annual cost of servicing it.

Mr. Ryder: In 1990-91 the estimated median outstanding mortgage is £25,500. At an interest rate of 15·3 per cent. The interest payment net of basic rate tax relief on an endowment mortgage of this size would amount to £2,926 per year.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount of mortgage finance raised each year since 1979 on the security of dwellings for purposes other than buying that dwelling.

Mr. Ryder: Full information is not available in the form requested. However, information for 1985 and subsequent years on net advances by building societies secured on residential property is published by the Central Statistical Office in Financial Statistics, June 1990, table 6.9. Information on building society advances secured on dwellings is also contained in Table 7 of the annual report of the Building Societies' Commission for 1987-88 and corresponding tables in previous reports of the commission and the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies. Corresponding information is not published for banks and other mortgage lenders.

Privatisation

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his target for privatisation proceeds in 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Treasury has this morning sold 68 million ordinary shares in British Gas plc, realising a total of £149,727,500.

Of those 68 million shares, 54 million Ordinary Shares were sold to SG Warburg and Co, Ltd. at a price of 219·75p per share. This price was the result of a competitive tender amongst selected market makers, and represented the highest unconditional bid in that tender. Separately, 14 million ordinary shares were sold to British Gas Employee Shares Trustees Ltd. at a price of 221·875p per share. Stamp duty/stamp duty reserve tax will be paid by the purchasers.

Under the terms of the 1986 British Gas offer for sale the Government retained a number of shares to meet bonus share entitlements. The bonus shares issue took place in January 1990. The shares sold today represented that part of those originally retained which proved surplus to requirements. The Government stated, in the prospectus for the 1986 Offer, that it would sell any surplus shares.

The Treasury consulted British Gas plc prior to the sale. The Treasury was advised on this sale by NM Rothschild & Sons Ltd.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy continues to hold a special share in British Gas. His Department also retains a small number of ordinary shares in order to meet any unresolved bonus share entitlements.

The almost £150 million raised by this sale will contribute to the £5 billion target for privatisation proceeds this year.

GCSE Examinations

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, in rank order, the percentage of all pupils gaining a GCSE pass A to C in (a) mathematics, (b) English, (c) a modern European language and (d) Welsh for each education authority.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the percentages of all pupils in schools gaining GCSE grades A to C in the given subjects is contained in the tables.

In order to avoid double counting of pupils sitting more than one foreign language examination the percentages of those taking French and German are given separately.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each family practitioner committee in Wales the budget his Department has allocated to it for the current financial year.

Mr. Grist: About 90 per cent. of the financial provision for family practitioner services is not cash limited and not subject to allocation. However, each family practitioner committee is responsible for managing two separate cash allocations. Each has an allocation to meet their current revenue administration costs. A further cash allocation has been delegated to FPCs towards the costs of practice staff employed, and premises improvements undertaken, by general medical practitioners.

The cash limits issued to FPCs at the outset of this financial year are detailed in the tables.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has received two requests for subject access under the terms of the Data Protection Act. It did not attempt to estimate the number of requests which might be received, and at present there are no plans to reconsider the level of subject access fees.

Health Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to require health authorities in Wales to provide full information and to consult local communities on (a) planning of services and (b) financial planning on an annual basis.

Mr. Grist: No. The Community Health Council Regulations 1985—SI 1985 No. 304—require health authorities to consult community health councils on any substantial development of, or variation in, the services provided in the district. In addition, the regulations require health authorities to provide such information about the planning and operation of health services in the district as a CHC may reasonably need in order to carry out its duties.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the individuals and bodies which have commented on his proposal to reduce the number of community health councils in Wales; and how many were for a reduction and how many against a reduction.

Mr. Grist: The table lists the individuals and bodies who responded to the consultation paper "Review of Community Health Councils in Wales". Of those who expressed an opinion on the matter, 184 were against the proposed reduction in the number of community health councils and 14 were in favour.

Myodil

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement setting out the history of the use of Myodil in hospitals in Wales, the symptoms that have arisen for some patients, the steps taken by the national health service in Wales to tackle and alleviate such problems and his latest assessment of continuing problems for individuals and families in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my letter of 27 April, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, to which there is nothing I can usefully add.

Older Housing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sum of money his Department is to make available for environmental landscaping in areas of older housing in Wales (a) in the present financial year and (b) in the 1991-92 financial year; and whether such sums are included in his Department's budget for the renewal areas scheme.

Mr. Grist: Environmental works promoted by local authorities in general improvement areas and housing action areas have attracted exchequer support of £274,375 in the current financial year. In addition, credit approvals of £26 million have been made available for enveloping and group repair schemes both in the statutory action areas and in the new renewal areas. A further £1 million is available to supplement financial commitments made by local authorities on particular activities in renewal areas. It is not at this stage possible to anticipate the level of resources which may be available in future years.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been provided to each local authority in Wales in order to develop the renewal areas scheme for older housing in Wales (a) so far this financial year and (b) prior to April; and for what purposes this money was provided.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 17 July 1990.

Community Care

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the implementation in Wales of the proposals in the White Paper, "Caring for People".

Mr. David Hunt: The Government are committed to the policies set out in the White Paper "Caring for People" which are designed to improve social care and related health services by ensuring that they are properly targeted to meet the needs of individual people. Nonetheless, in the light of the disappointing failure of many local authorities to budget for reasonable increases in expenditure, it would be unwise, and contrary to the interests of community chargepayers, to implement all the proposals of "Caring for People" simultaneously on 1 April 1991.

Our wholehearted commitment to the implementation of the proposals in the White Paper will be maintained through a programme of phased implementation, the full details of which will be discussed with the social services and health authorities and other interests in Wales, within the following framework.

We have well established and widely respected all-Wales strategies to secure the development of new patterns of services for people with mental handicaps and mental illnesses. We have already announced record levels of additional expenditure in support of those developments. Under the mental handicap strategy, grants from the Welsh Office will total £26·1 million in the current year, an increase of some £7·5 million compared with 1989-90. Under the mental illness strategy we are making available additional grant of over £2 million, on top of recurrent specific allocations for this purpose made since 1978-79 of over £13 million. These strategies will continue.

To combat drug misuse, we have made available £1·6 million this year to local statutory and voluntary agencies and £350,000 for the central prevention campaign and for needle and syringe exchange schemes. We are providing £150,000 of additional revenue this year for local projects to combat alcohol misuse. These initiatives will be maintained and will continue to support prevention, treatment and rehabilitation in residential and non-residential settings.

We have also already announced expenditure of some £300,000 this year and next to support demonstration projects in each county on the development of assessment and case management for individuals in need of care. In addition, my Department is making available £163,000 under a support programme for management development and post-qualifying training in personal social services. We are reviewing with the local authorities and the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work how this can be strengthened in the light of policy developments including the "Caring for People" White Paper.

As announced in the White Paper, from 1 April 1991 carefully targeted grants will be available to encourage the development of more flexible forms of domiciliary care for elderly people and those with physical or sensory disabilities. These will replace the current range of grants that the Welsh Office makes available for these and related purposes under the elderly initiative, the urban programme and the joint finance arrangements. Details will be announced shortly.

Also from next April, we propose that social services authorities will be required to establish the new inspection units and complaints procedures. Development work will continue on the new planning arrangements, assessment and case management procedures, and the realignment of commissioning and providing responsibilities within social services departments.

From 1 April 1992 we intend to implement the new planning arrangements and to continue with the remaining development work.

From 1 April 1993 we intend to introduce generally the new arrangements for assessment and case management, together with the changes in the financial arrangements for people needing public support for care. These will require the social services authorities to meet the costs of care whether in people's own homes or in residential care and nursing homes, where they decide that such care would be appropriate, and will involve the transfer of the relevant resources from the social security programme. Also from 1 April 1993 the tests of resources and personal allowances for people in local authority and independently run homes will be brought into line, and the White Paper proposals on preservation of benefit rights for people already in homes will be implemented.

Magnificent strides have been made over recent years by local agencies working with the Welsh Office on our existing strategies and initiatives, and in development work since the publication of the White Paper, to ensure a coherent framework and arrangements on the ground for the delivery of quality health and social care for those in need. That work will continue and be enhanced under the phased programme for development which I have outlined. I am confident that the local and health authorities and other interests in Wales, including representatives of the voluntary and private sectors and of users and carers, will continue to work closely with the Welsh Office to ensure its successful implementation.

Toxic Waste Disposal

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is now in a position to respond to the Welsh Affairs Committee's report "Toxic Waste Disposal in Wales", published on 28 March.

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to announce that the response has been published today.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Fees Office

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission what was the total cost of running the Fees Office for the last three years for which figures are available, indicating separately staff salaries and use of 3 Dean's yard.

Mr. Beith: It is not possible to separate the costs of running the Fees Office from the Administration Department of which it is a constituent part. Expenditure in respect of the Administration Department made from sub-head A5 of the House of Commons administration vote in each of the years in question was as follows:

	Salary etc costs	General administration expenses[1]
1987-88	1,259,350·40	21,083·67
1988-89	1,420,115·92	29,593·47
1989-90	1,571,996·78	59,527·02

[1] Excluding premium for Members' group personal accident insurance

Payments in respect of common services, for example, telephones, are made from other sub-heads of the vote and these costs cannot be apportioned between users.

Expenditure in respect of rent, fuel utilities and maintenance of No. 3 Dean's yard, which also accommodates Members and their staff was £320,000 in 1987-88, £380,000 in 1988-89 and £360,000 in 1989-90. Costs related to the Fees Office cannot be separately identified.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Merit Awards

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council, further to his reply of 5 July to the hon. Member for Falkirk, East (Mr. Ewing), Official Report, column 1131, what consideration he has now given to the provision of merit awards for right hon. and hon. Members.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have no plans to implement a scheme of merit awards for Members, but the hon. Member's interesting suggestion poses the question of how the parameters of such a scheme would be defined and who would decide whether or not a Member qualified for such an award. It has been suggested that quality of performance is in inverse proportion to quantity.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Contracts (Value-for-money Inquiries)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ensure that no contractual relationship exists between Messrs Biwaters and any firms of consultants Her Majesty's Government have employed on value-for-money inquiries, checks or audits on contracts assisted by the Overseas Development Administration.

Mrs. Chalker: At the time of commissioning the value-for-money checks on the two ODA-supported projects in which Biwater is involved, there were no contractual relationships between Biwater and either the firms or the individual specialist carrying out the VFM checks.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what value-for-money inquiry or checks have been carried out by which consultants acting for Her Majesty's Government on contracts between Thailand and Biwaters which have been assisted by the Overseas Development Administration;

(2) which firm or firms have been contracted to carry out the value-for-money inquiry audit or check required by the Overseas Development Adminstration on the British bid for the Green E'Sarn irrigation and forestry project in Thailand.

Mrs. Chalker: No firm offers of aid have been made in support of contracts between Biwaters and the Government of Thailand. Her Majesty's Government have been approached for concessional finance for the Green E'Sarn programme. We have indicated to the Government of Thailand our readiness in principle to consider this. Commercial negotiations have not reached the stage where a value for money investigation will be required.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date Sir William Halcrow and Partners were employed by Her Majesty's Government to carry out a value-for-money inquiry into contracts between Biwaters and Malaysia which received assistance from the Overseas Development Administration.

Mrs. Chalker: The value-for-money inquiry was commissioned by the Department of Trade and Industry on 2 December 1985.

Third-world Debt

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to alleviate the debt burden on sub-Saharan Africa and Latin America.

Mrs. Chalker: The Houston economic summit reaffirmed the international debt strategy under which Governments provide financial assistance to those indebted countries who are pursuing agreed programmes of economic reform. This assistance is available through the IMF and World bank, bilateral donors such as the United Kingdom, and the rescheduling of official debts in the Paris Club. The United Kingdom has taken the lead in developing additional measures for the poorest countries, mostly in sub-Saharan Africa, whose debt is mainly owned to official creditors. These measures include the cancellation of old aid debts, and the rescheduling of other official debt on concessional terms.

For middle-income countries, mostly in Latin America, whose debt is mainly owed to commercial banks, these banks are increasingly ready to allow a measure of debt reduction in the financing packages which they negotiate with these countries. A further incentive for such voluntary market-based debt reduction has been provided by last year's decision of the IMF and World bank to allow some of their resources to be used in support of such deals.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table listing gross British bilateral aid to sub-Saharan Africa from 1979 to 1989, in constant 1989 prices.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

Gross bilateral aid to sub-Saharan Africa

£ thousands

Year	Current prices	Constant (1989) prices
1979	214,572	441,869
1980	243,894	420,176

SCOTLAND

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all bathing beaches nominated by each of the river purification boards and the number and location of those which were subsequently approved as designated beaches by his Department.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that non-designated bathing beaches are monitored regularly and conform to the coliform bacteria standards of the European Community bathing water directive applied to designated bathing beaches.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is responsible for implementation of the bathing waters directive in Scotland (76/160/EEC) and therefore for ensuring that Scottish waters identified in terms of the directive are monitored regularly. Monitoring of non-identified waters is carried out by the river purification authorities as part of their statutory responsibilities to control aquatic pollution. Such monitoring is generally in line with that required by the directive for identified waters. Results of monitoring are published in the annual reports of the river purification boards, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of designated bathing beaches in Scotland which met the recommended guideline standards as well as the minimum mandatory standards for coliform bacteria set by the European Community bathing water directive.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1989, Cullen and Pease bay met the guideline (G) and mandatory (I) quality requirements specified in the bathing waters directive (76/160/EEC) for total coliforms. Pease bay met the G and I quality requirements for faecal coliforms.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department informed the European Commission of the results of the monitoring carried out by river purification boards in 1989 which showed the number of bathing waters which conformed to the mandatory standards for coliform bacteria set by the European Community bathing water directive.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scotland's bathing water monitoring results for 1989 were reported to the European Commission by the office of the United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Communities on 8 February 1990, along with the results for England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what criteria are applied in deciding which bathing beaches are designated; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to extend the number of designated bathing beaches in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for identifying Scottish bathing waters in terms of directive 76/160/EC lies with the Secretary of State for Scotland. The directive defines bathing waters as fresh or sea water where (a) bathing is explicitly authorised or (b) bathing is not prohibited, and is traditionally practised by a large number of bathers. The list of 23 bathing waters currently identified in Scotland was drawn up from nominations made by the river purification boards after consultation with district councils and was finalised following discussion with the European Commission.

There are no plans at present to amend the current list. The position is, however, kept under review and any future amendments would be made by my right hon. and learned Friend taking account of, amongst others, the following objective criteria suggested for this purpose by the European Commission:

(1) facilities for access to the beach
(2) sanitary equipment
(3) facilities for changing
(4) parking space for cars
(5) lifeguards on the beach
(6) first aid service
(7) kiosks and shops (mobile shops)
(8) water sports facilities (boats, surfing, swimming lessons)

Sewage Outfalls

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the numbers, percentages and locations of long sea sewage outfalls; and what are the quantities of treated and untreated sewage discharged at each location;

(2) if he will list the numbers, percentages and locations of sewage outfalls which discharge at or above the low water mark; and what are the quantities of treated and untreated sewage discharged at each location.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are approximately 800 local authority sewage outfalls in Scotland which discharge directly to estuaries or coastal waters. The detail sought is too lengthy for inclusion in the Official Report. A summary is, however, contained in the technical report "Sewage Works and Discharges Archive Report 1987" produced by the Scottish Development Department, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures showing the total quantities of treated and untreated sewage discharged into the sea off the Scottish coast.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1985, the latest year for which published information is available, approximately 755,000 cu m per day of sewage was discharged to Scottish estuarine and coastal waters. Of this, around 290,000 cu m per day was untreated and around 146,000 cu m per day received preliminary treatment. The balance received at least primary treatment.

Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers he has to enforce stricter emission standards for car exhausts; and whether he intends to use them.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The enforcement of emission standards is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. Plans for reductions of emissions are contained in the written answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Transport on 8 June 1990, at column 722.

Lochinver Harbour

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what decision he has now reached about the financing of the planned improvement works at Lochinver harbour.

Mr. Lang: This is a major and expensive project, the detail of which my Department is still considering. I or my noble Friend will write to the hon. Member when a decision is taken. I hope that will be very soon.

Youth Training

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations took place with Shetland islands council and Orkney islands council prior to the announcement of reductions in youth training funding for 1990-91 and the introduction of the new youth training contracts.

Mr. Lang: There has been a regular on-going dialogue between officials of the Training Agency and officials of Shetland islands council and Orkney islands council. In the period from January to May 1990 this included formal and informal consultations between officials about youth training funding for 1990-91 and the introduction of the new youth training contract.

Under-age Drinking

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many off-sales licensees lost their licences or had their licences temporarily suspended in connection with the sale of alcohol to persons under age in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children appeared before children's panels in each of the past five years in connection with under-age drinking.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally.

Reading Standards

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many 10-year-old children in Scottish state schools were recorded as experiencing reading difficulties in the school sessions (a) 1979-80 and (b) 1989-90.

Mr. Lang: This information is not available.

Nurses

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that central records are kept detailing the numbers of state registered nurses who, on completion of their training, find employment within national health service hospitals, in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The cost of compiling meaningful figures could not be justified as student nurses on completion of their training often find employment outwith the area of the health board in which they have trained.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to increase facilities for the profoundly mentally handicapped in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The provision of facilities for the care and support of mentally handicapped people in the community is the responsibility of local authorities. Since 1980 the total number of day centre places has increased from 5,096 to 7,242 (provisional) and the number of residential places from 1,093 to 1878 (provisional). Separate figures on the limited amount of provision made specifically for persons who are profoundly handicapped are not available centrally.

It is for local authorities to seek to expand provision as necessary in this and other areas of their responsibilities in accordance with the resources available to them. The proposals in the White Paper "Caring for People" indicate the need to work for an increasing proportion of facilities and other services in the community.

Casualty Departments

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that staffing levels within casualty departments in national health service hospitals in Scotland are increased; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A variety of factors must be taken into account in determining appropriate staffing levels. The Government encourage health boards to ensure that staffing levels in all hospital departments including accident and emergency departments are established through the application of structured assessment methods.

Birch Point

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made in his investigations into the reasons for the movement of dumped materials outwith the Birch Point explosives disposal ground in the Firth of Clyde.

Mr. Lang: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland fisheries research vessel Clupea was diverted from her programmed duties to undertake an underwater survey in and around the Birch Point disposal ground between 14 and 18 May 1990. As investigation of the dumping operations and fishing activity at the site has also been undertaken.

Following consultations with the various regulatory bodies and other interested parties, including local fishermen's representatives, a report of the investigation and the findings of the survey is being finalised this week. The report will be published before the parliamentary recess and copies of the published report will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The initial investigation has confirmed that a further, closer survey of the dump site is needed. This will be undertaken by DAFS from 21 July to 5 August inclusive. In order for the survey to proceed all fishing activity in the area concerned will be prohibited for the duration of the survey. An order to this effect has been made under the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984 and the fishermen have been advised.

Further guidance for fishermen in the Clyde area on what to do if explosive material is encountered in fishing gear is also in preparation in the light of the investigation and will be issued directly.

Community Care

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his plans for the implementation of the community care policies set out in the White Paper, "Caring for People".

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to advise islands and regional councils of the level of funding likely to be made available to them for 1991-92 for the implementation of their community care responsibilities under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Mr. Rifkind: We are fully committed to the policies set out in the White Paper "Caring for People" which are designed to improve social care services for vulnerable people. However, we have decided that it has become necessary to phase in the proposals in the White Paper. This is to allow a fuller preparation for the major shift in financial responsibility and the organisational changes required and in particular to allow local authorities time to accommodate the change without any need to impose an excessive burden on their community charge payers. The arrangements for Scotland will be as follows.

On 1 April 1991 I will introduce the requirements for local authorities to set up the new arm's length inspection units for residential homes and the new complaints procedures. I will also introduce the new specific grant to accelerate the development of community services for people with a mental illness. The development of better services in the community for this group in particular is an important objective of our community care policy. In the first year I propose grant at 70 per cent. in relation to total costs of £3 million in order to provide increased community services for the mentally ill. We are already providing grants under existing powers for voluntary bodies providing services in the important field of drug and alcohol abuse and this will continue.

Local authorities and health boards have already made a valuable start on the planning and development work required for community care and I would want this momentum to be maintained. I would also want authorities to continue with the important task of staff training, which the new course on community care at Dundee university is designed to meet. This will lead to the next phase of implementation on 1 April 1992 when I intend to implement the new community care planning arrangements. Development work will continue in 1992 and the final phase will be the implementation of the new income support and housing benefit arrangements on 1 April 1993 together with preservation of benefit rights for people already in homes at that date. Until then the present income support payments for those in private and voluntary residential and nursing homes will continue.

I will have regard to the financial implications of these proposals in announcing the local authority settlement, which I intend to announce next week.

The changes set out in the White Paper involve a substantial and complex task for local authorities. I am sure that phasing in the arrangements give more time to all concerned—local authorities, health boards, the voluntary and private sectors—to co-operate in preparation. It will enable the process to be more effectively managed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Industry

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will provide separate details of landings of cod from area VIIa by east coast Scottish, west coast Scottish, English, Welsh and Northern Irish vessels, in length bands, for the months of June 1990 and June 1989, indicating within each category the numbers of vessels and tonnages landed;

(2) whether he will provide separate details of landings of other area VII species by Scottish, English, Welsh and Northern Irish vessels, in length bands, for the months of June 1990 and June 1989, indicating within each category the numbers of vessels and tonnages landed;

(3) how many vessels declaring catches in area VII in June were spotted by the Royal Navy or by the fisheries inspection service in area VII; and how many of these vessels were witnessed fishing in areas IV and VI;

(4) whether he will provide a breakdown of the landings in area VII for all species during the month of June by the respective producer organisations and the non-sectors.

Mr. Curry: I regret that it would be too expensive to give a detailed response to the questions posed by the hon. Member. I will however make a general statement about the alleged misreporting of cod in the Irish sea and off the west coast of Ireland.

The non-sector's quota of cod in the Irish sea for 1990 is 1,858 tonnes. Approximately half of this quota was apparently taken by Scottish vessels and landed into Scotland during June and early July. In addition, landings into Scotland of cod reported as taken from the west of Ireland (areas VIIb and VIIc), have shown a marked increase in the second half of June. The Irish sea cod fishery has had to be closed to the non-sector as its quota for the year has already been exhausted.

The industry has stated its view that some Scottish vessels have been misreporting fish caught in the North sea or off the west coast of Scotland as coming from the Irish sea or off the west coast of Ireland, and has asked that catches should be reallocated from the latter to the former areas.

Fisheries Department accept that the circumstantial evidence points to some misreporting having taken place. The Irish sea cod fishery is traditionally a spring and winter fishery and high catches in summer are unusual. The pattern of landings this year is very different from past experience. Moreover the rate of uptake by the non-sector has not been paralleled by the sector. However, Departments cannot act to penalise a particular group of vessels or to compensate Irish sea fishermen affected on the basis of rumour or circumstantial evidence; they can act only following successful prosecution of offenders. Departments are examining all fishing documents and, if they can secure hard evidence of misreporting, they will prosecute.

In the meantime, Departments are looking ugently at ways of limiting misreporting in future, and hope to be able to set up a system later this year. I know that the industry has in the past rejected tougher enforcement measures in view of their cost and inconvenience, but if it is serious about limiting misreporting, I hope that it will now accept the need for firm action.

If a system to limit misreporting can be established quickly, Departments will try to obtain more quota from another member state with the aim of reopening the Irish sea cod fishery to the non-sector later this year. However, such a swap would depend on the successful identification of another United Kingdom stock to offer in exchange.

Pesticides

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy in respect of the safety in respect to foodstuffs of the products alachlor, aldicarb and pyrethrin, and aflatoxin: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Advisory Committee on Pesticides is currently reviewing alachlor and aldicarb. The pyrethrins are included in the routine review programme.

Aflatoxin is a naturally occurring food contaminant; the Food Advisory Committee is considering the statutory limit which should be set for nuts and nut products.

EC Grants

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list the recipients in the United Kingdom who have received grants from the European Community to the value of £8 million.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom has been awarded grants of £9·2 million by the European Commission under regulation 355/77 for 43 projects designed to improve the marketing and processing of agricultural and fisheries produce. A further £300,000 has been awarded for five projects to improve fishing port facilities.

Full details on these grants were issued in a press release on 6 July 1990. A copy was lodged in the Library of the House at that time and sent to Members directly concerned including my hon. Friend the Member for Holland with Boston (Sir R. Body).

Organic Fruit and Vegetables

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he plans to take to reduce dependency on imports to satisfy demand for organically produced fruit and vegetables.

Mr. Curry: I am keen that British farmers should claim as large a share as possible of the small but growing market for organic produce. The hon. Member will know from the answer that he received to an earlier question, on 16 January, at column 215, that the Department already offers a wider range of support for organic production.

Hens

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to implement the recommendations of the draft of the European convention published by the Council of Europe in 1971 in respect of minimum space requirements for hens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have no such plans. This draft has been overtaken by the final convention for the protection of animals kept for farming purposes, published in 1976, and the recommendation made under it on 21 November for laying hens.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has conducted any research to establish how much space a caged hen requires in order to perform all her natural functions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There has been much research into the space requirements of laying hens both in this country and in other member states of the European Community. This work is continuing. During the review of the battery hens directive, we will be pressing the Commission to take account of this research which indicates that a significant increase in the minimum space allowance for caged birds is required.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to seek to bring poultry within the provisions of the Protection of Birds Act 1954; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The provisions of this Act have been superseded by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. Provisions for laying hens kept in battery cages are covered by Community law. It is my intention that all laying hens should be so covered. The battery hens directive requires the Commission to report on all systems of keeping laying hens by the end of 1992 and to bring forward appropriate proposals.

Protection of Farm Animals

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to implement the 1976 convention on the protection of animals kept for farming purposes, in respect of poultry, pigs, and veal calves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The specific recommendations made under the convention with respect to poultry and pigs have been implemented in this country by means of the appropriate codes of recommendations for the welfare of livestock. There is as yet no recommendation for veal calves but our ban on the traditional veal crate came into force at the beginning of this year.

Yucca Plant

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the use of products of the yucca plant on livestock farms.

Mr. Curry: Our technical advisers inform us that yucca extract is used in animal feed as a natural flavour enhancer. It is also reported to have a beneficial effect on protein utilisation. When included in feed it has the effect of deodorising slurry.

Bees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to ensure that the health of bees in maintained.

Mr. Curry: The Importation of Bees Order 1980 prohibits imports of honey bees except under licence from countries of high bee health status. In addition Ministry bees officers inspect colonies in this country which have a history of disease or where disease is suspected. From 1992 the European Community Commission has proposed that national bee health measures should be replaced by European Community controls. Discussions are at an early stage and we shall continue to press for the best possible safeguards.

Field Drainage Grants

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been paid by way of field drainage grants for each year since 1981.

Mr. Curry: Grant paid on field drainage in England under the main capital grant schemes for the years 1981 to 1989 inclusive was as shown in the table:

Year	£ million
1981	17·8
1982	28·7
1983	29·2
1984	32·0
1985	18·1
1986	9·5
1987	3·7
1988	2·5
1989	2·0

Livestock Holdings

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many field officers there are currently in the state veterinary service to inspect livestock holdings and to advise on animal welfare matters.

Mr. Maclean: There are currently 259·5 veterinary officers in the state veterinary service whose duties include animal welfare.

Fur Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific welfare inspections are made by state veterinary officers during October and November of each year to ensure that the killing of mink and arctic fox on fur farms is humane.

Mr. Maclean: Ten welfare visits to fur farms were made during October and November last year. These were carried out to check on welfare standards generally and were not specifically directed to slaughter methods.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fur farms received animal welfare inspections by state veterinary officers in 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Maclean: The total number of welfare inspections of fur farms undertaken by state veterinary officers in each of these years was:

Year	Inspections
1987	25
1988	18
1989	18

Mink Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many mink farms are sited within (a) 10, (b) 20, (c) 30, (d) 40 and (e) 50 miles of environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Maclean: It is not possible to answer this without incurring disproportionate cost.

Registered Holdings

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many registered holdings in England are eligible for less-favoured area payments.

Mr. Curry: All 21,500 holdings in the LFA are eligible for enhanced rates of investment grant. A total of 14,400 claims for payment of HLCAs were submitted in 1989.

Farm Animal Welfare Council

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make Farm Animal Welfare Council publications available to hon. Members through the form entitled "Demand for HMSO non-Parliamentary Publications".

Mr. Gummer: This is already the case.

Implementation Committee

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the national implementation committee; what is its remit; and if he will list the members and their qualifications.

Mr. Gummer: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the Implementation Advisory Committee. As announced by my hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell) during the report stage of the Food Safety Bill on 7 June at column 893, its terms of reference are

"To advise Departments on draft codes of practice to be issued for consultation under Section 40 of the Food Safety Act 1990, covering the execution and enforcement of the Act and regulations and orders made under it."

The members of the committee are:

Mr. C. Cockbill
Food Standards Division, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

Mr. M. Corbally
Principal Environmental Health Officer, Institution of Environmental Health Officers

Mr. E. Davison
Capital Grants and Animal Health and Food Standards Division, Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland

Mr. M. Dimambro
City Environmental Health Officer, Cambridge

Mr. H. Farrand
Director Environmental Services, Coventry

Mr. B. Curtis
Environmental Health Officer, Department of Health

Mr. B. Kelly
Director of Environmental Health, Glasgow

Mr. D. Lord
Public Analyst, Lancashire

Miss L. Neville-Rolfe
Food Legislation Division, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

Mr. J. Parker
Environmental Health and Food Safety Division, Department of Health

Mr. E. Ramsden
Director Environmental Services, Swansea

Mr. D. Walker
Deputy Chief Trading Standards Officer, Shropshire

Mr. B. Williams
Chief Trading Standards Officer, Gloucester

Mr. R. Wright
Director Consumer and Environmental Services, Barnsley

Extensification Schemes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why Morvern and Ardnamurchan are excluded from the areas eligible to participate in the pilot extensification schemes for beef and sheep.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

The pilot extensification schemes are being limited to areas served by the Borders and Highland area offices of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. Morvern and Ardnamurchan, although within the Highland region, are covered by a different area office.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what overall reduction in Royal Air Force flying hours resulted from changes in navigator training syllabuses in each of the last three years; and what impact this has had on the amount of low flying conducted by the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what areas of the United Kingdom are specifically designated for nap of the earth flying by Army helicopters.

Mr. Neubert: No areas of the United Kingdom are specifically designated for nap of the earth flying by Army helicopters; such flights are conducted in designated low-flying areas in accordance with the relevant military regulations.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many air misses have occurred between two military aircraft in low-flying area 7 in each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: The number of air misses between two military aircraft in low-flying area 7 in each year since 1979 is as follows:

1979	0
1980	1
1981	0
1982	2
1983	1
1984	1
1985	0
1986	1
1987	0
1989	0

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if pilots booking into and out of low flying areas are permitted any leeway in meeting their booked entry and exit times.

Mr. Neubert: Yes, in most cases.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if United States air force pilots certified to fly at 300 ft are permitted to fly at 250 ft in the United Kingdom low-flying system without additional low level stepdown training.

Mr. Neubert: United States air force pilots who need to train at 250 ft in the United Kingdom low-flying system are trained as necessary to certify them to fly at under 300 ft.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date that part of the Glamorgan transit area in the vicinity of Usk was abolished; what was the specific reason for its abolition; and if he will list the parliamentary constituencies over which low flying is newly permitted, or within which the area available for low flying is extended, as a result of this measure.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our practice to release detailed information on flying restrictions in individual areas. As part of the continuous monitoring of the United Kingdom low-flying system, however, a programme of reviews of avoidance areas is carried out and changes made when necessary, reflecting changes on the ground, and aimed at spreading low flying more evenly and enhancing flight safety, while at the same time reducing, where possible, the disturbance to those on the ground.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the regulations concerning the height at which low-flying aircraft should cross coastlines in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 12 June 1990 at column 139.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist to permit automatic terrain-following radar flying in areas of the United Kingdom other than the highlands restricted area.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 20 July 1989 at column 317.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those areas of the United Kingdom which have newly been made available for military low flying since 1979; and if he will specify the date on which each area was made available.

Mr. Neubert: I regret that the information requested could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the criteria used by the military low flying management group in determining which special rules zones or special rules areas around civil airports should be designated as avoidance areas for military low flying and which should not.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing further to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 20 July 1989 at column 317.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if pilots are permitted to make bookings into low-flying areas by radio, while airborne.

Mr. Neubert: Pilots are not generally permitted to book into low-flying areas by radio whilst airborne.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the regulations concerning overflight by low-flying military aircraft of assemblies of large numbers of people.

Mr. Neubert: Aircrew are generally instructed to avoid overflying such assemblies at low level.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what level in his Department approval must be sought for low-flying by jet aircraft between the hours of 11 pm and 7 am; what records are kept of such applications for approval, and decisions thereon; what criteria are used to grant or refuse permission for such flying; and if permission for such flying activity has ever been refused.

Mr. Neubert: The level at which approval is given and the records kept will depend on the activity concerned. Every effort is made to keep such flying to the minimum necessary to meet essential training requirements and permission is refused if this condition is not met.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the stipulated vertical and horizontal distances by which military aircraft are required to avoid sites notified under the civil aircraft notification procedure.

Mr. Neubert: The avoidance criteria adopted will depend on the type of aircraft, its conspicuity and its indicated air speed.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce one-way flow control of low-flying aircraft in the Bwlch Llyn Bach valley between Minffordd and Cross Foxes.

Mr. Neubert: A one-way flow control system already exists in the Bwlch Llyn Bach valley.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any Royal Air Force stations in Britain are permitted to operate their own aircraft in local low-flying areas without notifying RAF West Drayton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: For certain low flying areas, the functions of the tactical booking cell at RAF West Drayton in respect of either all or part of the low-flying activity in these areas are delegated to a local centre, which may be an RAF station.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions are in force concerning the transit of large formations of aircraft through choke points in the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Neubert: Large formations of aircraft are instructed to avoid flying through recognised choke points in the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are in force to ensure that locations which are in use as simulated targets for toss or dive attack are not selected as simulated targets for level pass attacks.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what date the minimum vertical separation from cloud for visual flying operations in the United Kingdom low-flying system was reduced from 1,000 ft. to 500 ft.

Mr. Neubert: The present rules for vertical separation from cloud were introduced in June 1982.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum number of aircraft permitted to operate at low level at any one time in the hilly areas of the Lake District; to what parts of low-flying area 17, this applies; and if he will list any changes made to this maximum number since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: No more than 20 aircraft (excluding helicopters) are permitted to book into low-flying area 17 at any one time during the period 07.00 to 18.00 local time Monday to Friday. No changes have been made to this figure since its introduction in 1987.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those range danger areas within which military aircraft are permitted to descend below 250 ft minimum separation distance during the run-in to a simulated target; and if he will list the minimum permitted height in each case.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to my letter to him of 28 July 1989, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the measures taken to ensure that the regulations of the United Kingdom low-flying system are properly understood, briefed, and adhered to by United Kingdom-based United States air force air crews.

Mr. Neubert: No. I am satisfied that United Kingdom-based United States air force air crews, like their Royal Air Force counterparts, are made fully aware of the relevant regulations and of the importance of adhering to them.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the regulations concerning emergency climb-outs from low level when below controlled or regulated airspace; and what records are kept of resulting unauthorised penetrations of such airspace by military aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: Air crew are instructed to report any unauthorised penetrations of regulated or controlled airspace that may occur during climb-out from the United Kingdom low-flying system but very few occur. Separate statistics for such incidents are not maintained.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum period of notice required by RAF West Drayton of pilots intending to book into a low-flying area.

Mr. Neubert: There is no specified period of notice but advance bookings must be confirmed on the day of the flight.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the regulations concerning the maximum number of aircraft in a formation in the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Neubert: The number of aircraft in a tactical formation at low level is determined by aircraft role and the type of exercise being carried out. However, formations do not normally consist of more than eight aircraft.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those areas of the United Kingdom where attacks on simulated targets are prohibited.

Mr. Neubert: No. All aspects of sorties, including simulated attacks, must however be planned in accordance with the general regulations applying to the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the standard radius of lateral avoidance for avoidance sites marked on low flying charts and listed in the United Kingdom military low-flying handbook.

Mr. Neubert: Avoidance criteria adopted in any case will depend on the site concerned.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if towns and villages which carry low-flying avoidance status, other than those located within avoidance areas, are marked as sites to be avoided on the printed low flying charts supplied to pilots.

Mr. Neubert: All significant built-up areas, whether or not carrying formal avoidance status, are marked on low-flying charts.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the areas of the United Kingdom that are designated as data link areas for United States Air Force training with the GBU-15 missile system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is classified.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the regulations concerning inverted flying at low level.

Mr. Neubert: I am not aware of any regulations which specifically refer to inverted flying at low level.

Inspectorate of Air Safety

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States Air Force officers have served in exchange postings at the Royal Air Force inspectorate of air safety in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Royal Air Force records show that no USAF officers have served on exchange postings with the RAF inspectorate of flight safety in the last 10 years.

Lasers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the areas of the United Kingdom where the use of aircraft-borne laser designators, rangers or markers is permitted; what regulations govern their use; and what changes have been made in these regulations since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following ranges in the United Kingdom are cleared for use by aircraft-borne laser designators, rangers or markers: RAF Tain, RAF Cowden, RAF Rosehearty, RAF Donna Nook, RAF Holbeach, RAF Pembrey Sands, RAF Jurby Head, RAF Wainfleet, the Royal Navy ranges at Cape Wrath and Garvie Island, the Army range at Otterburn and the MOD(PE) ranges at West Freugh and Larkhill.

A number of joint and single-service publications, together with air weapons range orders, cover the use of laser designators, rangers and markers at ranges in the United Kingdom. These regulations are regularly updated.

Norton Air Force Base, California

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force officers served in exchange postings at the directorate of aerospace safety, United States force inspection and safety centre, Norton air force base, California, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Royal Air Force records show that no officers have served in exchange postings with the directorate of aerospace safety at the United States force inspection and safety centre, Norton air force base, California in the last 10 years.

MOD Hospitals

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by country and region the Ministry of Defence hospitals in the United Kingdom which had consultant obstetric and/or general practitioner maternity beds in 1980, 1985 or the most recent year for which figures are available and give the numbers of beds of each type in each hospital and in each year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Of the eight service hospitals in the United Kingdom, four have consultant-led obstetric units. There are no general practitioner maternity beds in United Kingdom service hospitals.

The statistical historical information on available bed numbers for 1980 and 1985 relates only to the overall number of beds for each hospital and is not broken into specialties. The details of the current allocation of service hospital beds to obstetrics, based on 1989 figures, are shown in brackets:

NHS region and hospital	Number of beds			Obstetric beds
	1980	1985	1989	1989
South West Thames
Cambridge Military Hospital, Aldershot (Army)	[1]220+65	256	265	(66)
East Anglia
The Princess of Wales Royal Air Force Hospital Ely	142	174	176	(22)
Wessex
Princess Alexandra Royal Air Force Hospital Wroughton	170	154	182	(16)
Oxford
Princess Mary's Royal Air Force Hospital Halton	280	271	231	(10)

[1] The 65 bed Louise Margaret Maternity Hospital Aldershot was amalgamated into the CMH Aldershot in 1984.

Army Costs

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total annual cost of (a) the regiments listed in his reply of 14 June, Official Report, column 326, in total and (b) the British Army as a whole.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A figure for the total cost of the regiments and corps listed in my reply to the hon. Gentleman of 14 June is not held in the form requested and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost. The Ministry of Defence does not plan or account for its expenditure on a service basis and a figure giving the cost of the Army as a whole could, again, be obtained only with disproportionate effort. However, tables 2.2 and 2.3 in volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" provided information concerning the cost of key elements of the British Army.

Surplus Materials (Destruction)

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by item and value, surplus stocks of clothing and other non-armament and weapon materials currently or recently ordered to be destroyed rather than offered for public sale.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of the fight against terrorism all surplus clothing with the exception of non-camouflage foul weather gear and footwear is now mutilated and sold as rags. Annual receipts are about £50,000. We estimate that the market value of the clothing before mutilation would be about £700,000 per annum.

In compliance with health and safety and control of pollution legislation the majority of hazardous materials are also destroyed, although under guidelines specified by the Health and Safety Executive and local authorities some materials classed as hazardous are sold.

It would not be possible to give the detailed information requested without disproportionate cost.

Radar Installation (Pembrokeshire)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received since 1 June about the allegations of a causal relationship between certain forms of cancer and exposure to magnetic fields and any implications for the siting of an over-the-horizon radar installation at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 69, if he will give details of the proposed safety exclusion zone for the over-the-horizon radar installation at St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire, including security fencing, lighting and staffing costs.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our current plans are that the proposed safety exclusion zone should be delineated by a wire-mesh fence, about 4 ft high, at a distance of about 1,100 ft to the front and sides of the transmitter aerials. It will be prominently signed in both Welsh and English, and will be contained well within the MOD boundary of the site. There are no plans to illuminate it. I regret that the costs of maintaining the safety exclusion zone and fence cannot be isolated from the estimated costs of maintaining the installation as a whole.

Frigates

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he is having with other NATO countries about a replacement frigate programme.

Mr. Neubert: Discussions are proceeding at official level with France to determine the potential for collaboration. We plan to broaden these discussions to include those other nations that are members of the family of anti-missile systems programme, currently Italy and Spain, should they wish to do so.

"Options for Change"

32. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given in his "Options for Change" review to the amount of low flying carried out by Royal Air Force fast jets.

63. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given in his "Options for Change" review to the amount of low flying carried out by RAF fast jets.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 17 July 1990]: The amount of low-flying training carried out by the RAF will continue to reflect operational requirements.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

House Buyers (Protection)

12. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to protect house buyers from misleading property descriptions following his review of the Trade Descriptions Act.

Mr. Forth: As I indicated to the House in a written answer on 19 April, it is the Government's intention to proceed with a package of measures in this area, including the amendment of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 to apply its provisions to descriptions of real property. My Department consulted widely on a review of the 1968 Act as a whole, and are now considering the responses.

102. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to protect house buyers from misleading property descriptions following his review of the Trade Descriptions Act.

105. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to protect housebuyers from misleading property descriptions, following his review of the Trade Description Act.

Mr. Forth: As I indicated to the House in a written answer on 19 April, it is the Government's intention to proceed with a package of measures in this area, including the amendment of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 to apply its provisions to descriptions of real property. My Department recently consulted widely on a review of the 1968 Act as a whole, and consultees were asked to comment particularly on the range of characteristics of such property which should be included in its scope. The responses are currently being studied.

Steel Industry

16. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the chairman of British Steel to discuss the future of the steel industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend's predecessor met the chairman of British Steel on 5 June. He has no plans at present for a further meeting.

110. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Steel to discuss the future of steel production in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend's predecessor met the chairman of British Steel on 5 June. He has no plans at present for a further meeting.

128. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has met the chairman of the British Steel Corporation to discuss the future of the steel industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend's predecessor last met the chairman of British Steel on 5 June.

Business Grants, West Midlands

22. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of his Department's grants to businesses in the west midlands to date in the current year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Up to the end of June, my Department had made payments of grant to businesses in the west midlands of £15·84 million, mainly in the form of regional selective assistance, support to research and development and assisted consultancy under the enterprise initiative.

CBI

23. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry.

28. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the Confederation of British Industry to discuss levels of economic growth.

95. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the Confederation of British Industry to discuss levels of manufacturing investment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a wide range of business matters.

45. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to meet the secretary general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the expansion of British exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a range of issues relevant to business.

Girobank

24. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on the sale of Girobank to the Alliance and Leicester Building Society.

115. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on the sale of Girobank to the Alliance and Leicester Building Society.

Mr. Forth: I have nothing to add to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 2 July at column 427.

Environmentally Friendly Goods

25. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take action to prevent firms misrepresenting goods as environmentally friendly.

87. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take action to prevent firms misrepresenting goods as environmentally friendly.

Mr. Forth: On 9 January in response to a question on environmental labelling, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment said that we would be looking at the possibility of a code of practice on environmental claims and of amending the provisions of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968. My Department went to consultation on 10 January inviting the views of consultees on the most appropriate measures which might be taken to control environmental claims.

The representations received during the consultations are still under consideration.

Unsafe Garden Equipment

26. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consider measures to protect consumers from unsafe garden tools and machinery.

37. Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consider measures to protect consumers from unsafe garden tools and machinery.

Mr. Forth: The existing Consumer Protection Act 1987 already provides a general duty on suppliers to ensure that products, including garden tools and machinery, are safe. Where these products are electrically powered, they would also be subject to the Low Voltage Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1989 which implement the EC Low Voltage Directive, covering the basic safety requirements of electrical equipment traded throughout the European Community. In addition, the EC Machinery Safety Directive, which provides more detailed requirements on the guarding and safety of all mechanised equipment, will be implemented into United Kingdom legislation by the end of 1991, coming into force on 31 December 1992.

Timeshare

27. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what policy changes he intends to make as a result of the Office of Fair Trading report on timeshare.

Mr. Forth: The Director General of Fair Trading's report on timeshare was published on 3 July. I shall be looking very carefully at his recommendations for legislation.

Eastern Europe

29. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives he is taking to encourage trade with eastern Europe.

64. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any new proposals to develop trade between the United Kingdom and the countries of eastern Europe, including the Soviet Union.

71. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any new proposals to develop trade between the United Kingdom and the countries of eastern Europe, including the Soviet Union.

96. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to encourage exports to east European countries; whether he plans any increase in his Department's activity in this sphere; and if he will make a statement.

124. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any new proposals to develop trade between the United Kingdom and the countries of eastern Europe, including the Soviet Union.

Mr. Redwood: My Department is taking active measures to develop commercial opportunities in east Europe through direct contact with east European trade authorities, data dissemination and publicity.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's predecessor last week headed a trade mission to Czechoslovakia and then travelled on to Hungary for top level meetings. In recent months, I and DTI Ministerial colleagues have led parties of businessmen to these countries as well as to the USSR, Poland, Romania and the GDR. We have also received several incoming delegations and been in close touch with the FCO about the use of their know-how fund for eastern Europe.

Public Houses

30. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total number of public houses in the United Kingdom of each of the six major brewing companies.

51. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total number of public houses in the United Kingdom of each of the six major brewing companies.

63. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total number of public houses in the United Kingdom of each of the six major brewing companies.

93. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total number of public houses in the United Kingdom of each of the six major brewing companies.

Mr. Redwood: At the end of 1988, according to the MMC, the figures were:

	Number
Allied Breweries Limited	6,678
Bass plc	7,190
Courage Limited	5,002
Grant Metropolitan plc	6,419
Scottish and Newcastle Breweries plc	2,287
Whitbread and Company plc	6,483

Under the Supply of Beer Orders by November 1992 brewers owning more than 2,000 pubs must release from ties at least 50 per cent. of those in excess of 2,000. The Director General of Fair Trading will be monitoring progress towards this requirement.

66. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received from (a) tenants of national brewers, (b) small independent brewers and (c) others since 1 May regarding the operation of the new system giving tenants greater freedom to buy products outside the tie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Since 1 May I have received three representations on behalf of tenants of national brewers, one letter on behalf of small independent brewers, and five letters from others, of which four were from or on behalf of a large brewer.

Office of Fair Trading

31. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the investigations currently being conducted by the Office of Fair Trading.

34. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the investigations currently being conducted by the Office of Fair Trading.

130. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the investigations currently being conducted by the Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Mr. Graham) on 10 July at column 138.

Kingfisher/Dixon Takeover Report

32. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much compensation he estimates his Department paying in the wake of the early release of the Kingfisher/Dixon takeover report.

35. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much compensation he estimates his Department paying in the wake of the early release of the Kingfisher/Dixon takeover report.

Mr. Redwood: I will continue to consider claims received before the end of this month for losses incurred on the morning of 23 May by those buying Dixons shares, selling Kingfisher shares or dealing in traded options. I will then be able to estimate more accurately the cost. Payments will be on the basis of one half of the differences between the price at which the shares or options were bought or sold on Wednesday morning 23 May, and the prices ruling when trading was resumed shortly after 1 pm. I will take into account corresponding gains from selling Dixons shares or buying Kingfisher shares, or from hedging positions in the options market.

European Single Market

33. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the proportion of total European single market trade which will be British-originated in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Given the changes which will follow the completion of the single European market, I cannot make a useful estimate of the proportion of total single European market trade which will be British-originated in 1992. The United Kingdom's share of EC trade was 8·9 per cent. in 1973, the year of our accession. It has risen to 13·1 per cent. in 1983 and stood at 11·4 per cent. in 1988. These figures assume current membership of the EC at each date.

Footwear and Textile Industries

36. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on the current state of the footwear and textile industries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Both industries continue to experience mixed fortunes with varying performance in different product areas. I am pleased to note, however, that exports of footwear reached record levels in volume terms in the 12 months to March 1990, with exports of 25 million pairs of footwear, an increase of over 10 per cent. in volume and 12 per cent. in value terms. Exports of textiles and clothing products also rose by 14 per cent. by volume and 18 per cent. by value between the first quarters of 1989 and 1990.

55. Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet his European counterparts to discuss the textile industry.

61. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet his European counterparts to discuss the textile industry.

69. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet his European counterparts to discuss the textile industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to meet his EC colleagues on several occasions during the course of this year to discuss progress in the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations, which cover the future of trade in textiles and clothing.

108. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current state of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade textiles talks on the future of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Redwood: The chairman of the GATT negotiating group on textiles and clothing has produced a chairman's report for consideration by the trade negotiations committee in Geneva next week. This is designed to take into account various negotiating positions and therefore contains a significant number of alternative options. Many of these differences of view are unlikely to be resolved until nearer the end of the negotiations in December, but the European Community will continue to press for a progressive phaseout of the MFA over a transitional period and on the basis of strengthened GATT rules and disciplines.

112. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the level of imports of footwear from the far east.

Mr. Redwood: Figures for the first four months of the year show an increase of 5 per cent. in imports of footwear from the far east compared with the same period in 1989. The footwear industry, as my hon. Friend is aware, has been seeking action by the European Community to restrict imports from Korea and Taiwan. In regulation 1735/90 published on 27 June the European Commission introduced prior surveillance of most footwear imports from these sources. The Regulation also refers to undertakings by Korea and Taiwan to limit their exports to traditional trade flows within specified quantitative limits. The licensing system will provide early warning of the level of imports.

142. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ensure that no unilateral concessions will be made by the European Economic Community without agreement by the other countries on strengthening of General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade rules and disciplines in relation to the multi-fibre arrangement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The European Community, with United Kingdom support, is continuing to press strongly for the liberalisation of trade in textiles to be accompanied by the strengthening of GATT rules and disciplines and the opening of producer markets. The Community will need to take a view before the end of the Round on the acceptability of the likely final package. In the meantime the Community needs to play an active part in shaping the framework agreement on trade in textiles and the Government will work to ensure that any proposals put forward properly reflect United Kingdom and Community interests.

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received from the textile and clothing industries about barriers to United Kingdom exports; if he will pursue the reduction of such barriers in the Uruguay round negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Ministers in my Department frequently receive representations from the textile industry about foreign barriers to United Kingdom exports, both directly and through hon. Members. It is one of the EC's main aims in the Uruguay round to achieve a reduction by all parties in their tariff and non-tariff barriers and we are pursuing this vigorously in the negotiations.

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet his counterparts from other European Community countries to discuss trade in textiles and clothing; if he will take steps to ensure that integration of this trade into the normal rules of the general agreement on tariffs and trade takes place only on the basis of strengthened rules and disciplines; and if he will press for a transition period for such integration sufficiently long to demonstrate the effectiveness of these strengthened rules and disciplines in removing distorted conditions of trade.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to meet his EC colleagues on several occasions during this year to discuss progress in the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations. The EC, while committed to returning trade in textiles and clothing to GATT rules, is continuing with United Kingdom support to press strongly for this liberalisation to be accompanied by the strengthening of GATT rules and disciplines. The idea of a transitional period for returning textiles trade to GATT is accepted in the negotiations. Its length has yet to be determined and in any discussions the United Kingdom will have regard to the arrangements for strengthening rules and disciplines as well as the need to ensure that the benefits of liberalisation are not unduly delayed.

38. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in the past three months about the export of electronic equipment.

127. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in the past three months about the export of electronic equipment.

Mr. Redwood: My officials have had frequent contact with Trade Associations and companies in the electronic equipment sector during the past three months and a number of representations have been received. It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on individual licensing matters.

123. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of electronic equipment sold in the United Kingdom comes from overseas.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) earlier today.

68. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of trading standards officers to discuss consumer matters.

90. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from trading standards officers on the safety of retail goods.

42. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the National Enterprise Board cost in (a) 1975, (b) 1979 and (c) 1989; and whether he will make a statement about its future.

94. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the National Enterprise Board cost in (a) 1975, (b) 1979 and (c) 1989; and whether he will make a statement about its future.

135. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the National Enterprise Board cost in (a) 1975, (b) 1979 and (c) 1989; and whether he will make a statement about its future.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The National Enterprise Board was formed in late 1975 and there are therefore no figures for this year. In 1979 the net cost to the Exchequer was £222·4 million made up of £253·8 million of public dividend capital, subsequently repaid, repayment of loans and interest totalling £30·6 million and £0·8 million of taxes paid. In 1989 the Board remitted £1·3 million in taxes and £2 million in dividends to Her Majesty's Government.

Since 1981 the board has, with the National Research Development Corporation, operated as the British Technology Group. The Government consider that it would be appropriate for the British Technology Group to be transferred to the private sector when suitable arrangements can be made.

Independent Financial Advisers

43. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received about the draft European community rules on capital adequacy of independent financial advisers.

Mr. Redwood: I have received a number of representations from organisations and firms in the independent financial intermediaries sector about capital adequacy requirements, including the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association, the British Insurance and Investment Brokers Association, the Insurance Brokers Registration Council, the Life Insurance Association, and IFA Promotion Ltd. These representations have been helpful in clarifying their members' concerns that the proposed EC Capital Adequacy Directive may impose inappropriate minimum capital requirements. I share this concern. The United Kingdom will continue to press for capital requirements to be related to risk, and for levels of initial capital that do not act as barriers to market entry.

NRDC

46. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the National Research and Development Corporation cost in (a) 1975, (b) 1979 and (c) 1989; and whether he will make a statement about its future.

57. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the National Research and Development Corporation cost in (a) 1975, (b) 1979 and (c) 1989; and whether he will make a statement about its future.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The National Research Development Corporation does not represent a cost to the Exchequer. In 1975 the Corporation remitted £3·9 million to Her Majesty's Government; in 1979, £9·4 million and in 1989 £9·6 million.

Since 1981 the corporation has, with the National Enterprise Board, operated as the British Technology Group. The Government consider that it would be appropriate for the British Technology Group to be transferred to the private sector when suitable arrangements can be made.

Mr. Lilley: Like my right hon. predecessor, to whom I pay tribute, I recognise the importance of this. Companies' ability to invest for the long term is a function of their profitability. The profitability of British industry has returned of late to the highest levels for 20 years and business investment has reached record levels.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have no immediate plans to do so.

88. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will examine the records of previous privatisations to determine whether any arrangements similar to those recently vetoed by the European Economic Community in the case of the sale of Rover to British Aerospace have been made in relation to any other company.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The National Audit Office investigates all significant privatisations and decides whether it is necessary to report to the Public Accounts Committee as it did in the case of the Rover Group.

141. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to respond to the European Community's recent communication on the sale of the Rover Group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave the Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones).

113. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the cost of creating a national fibre optic network.

Mr. Forth: The study by the PA Consulting Group, "Evolution of the United Kingdom Communications Infrastructure" (HMSO 1988), which was commissioned by my Department, contains estimates comparing the costs of development of the communications infrastructure under various scenarios. The report includes an estimate that over the period 1991-2010 the creation and maintenance of a national fibre optic grid would cost approximately £82 billion, compared to £61 billion for a network that might be expected to result from a continuation of what the study describes as the current system of lightly regulated competition.

EC Industry Ministers

53. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which meetings of the European Community's Industry Ministers he has not attended in the past year.

118. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in the setting up of Link projects in the current financial year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the beginning of the current financial year 10 more Link projects have been announced, bringing the total number of active projects to 65. In addition by 29 May 1990 another 12 projects were through all stages of technical approval, bringing the total number of projects having gained technical approval to 57, and a further 50 full proposals are at the technical approval stage. There are many more projects in the pipeline.

131. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new proposals to encourage British industry to take further measures to protect the environment.

Mr. Forth: I shall continue to encourage British industry to respond positively to the challenges and opportunities presented by environmental issues. My Department's environmental unit offers advice, and where appropriate assistance, on such issues including the development of improved environmental technology, waste management and recycling. It also keeps fully abreast of the impact of all environmental issues on business efficiency and competitiveness and contributes accordingly to the development of environmental policy and regulation.

134. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications for export licences for transputers have been refused in the past six months.

Mr. Redwood: A licence is required to export transputers to any destination under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989, as amended. An export licence has been refused for transputers during the last six months and several export licence applications have been withdrawn.

126. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of local authorities to discuss progress with RECHAR; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Officials of my own and other Departments have been in close touch with local authorities and other local interests in the preparation first of the United Kingdom's list of proposed areas to be included in RECHAR and now of the operational programmes for the areas selected by the European Commission. During the course of my regional visits I have also met local authority representatives and RECHAR has been one of several issues raised by them. I have made representations to the European Commission about areas it has not selected and will do so in regard to programmes as may be necessary.

116. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the regulatory system since the collapse of Dunsdale Securities.

Mr. Redwood: I receive a considerable number of representations on a variety of topics relating to the regulation of financial services. The volume and type of representations have not changed since the collapse of Dunsdale Securities. We consider very carefully those which relate to the scope or framework of the regulatory system or to the powers under the Financial Services Act which the Government retain. Those which relate to matters which are the responsibility of the SIB or another regulatory authority are passed to the appropriate body.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the audited returns of Dunsdale Securities submitted to his Department between 1983 and 1988 included a source and application of funds statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: accounts filed at Companies House by Dunsdale Securities Ltd. for the years 1984 to 1988 include a source and application of funds statement; the accounts for 1983 do not.

92. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the most recent estimate by his Department of the number of cars which are clocked.

Mr. Forth: My Department does not produce such estimates.

Insurance

80. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, under the relevant European Community directives, British insurance companies will be able to canvas for life insurance and for the insuring of cars, houses and other items of individual property insurance within the European Economic Community after 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: There is already freedom of establishment for insurance within the European Community, and United Kingdom insurers established in other member states may advertise there on the same basis as local insurers. The Commission's aim which we strongly support, is also to achieve full freedom for companies to sell insurance on a service basis. The Commission have therefore announced their intention of proposing two further directives, one for life and one for non-life insurance, which will allow insurers to advertise and sell their products anywhere in the Community either on a services basis or from a local branch, on the basis of a single authorisation from their home state supervisor. These directives are however unlikely to come into force until after 1992.

125. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he is making towards the establishment of a free market for the sale by British companies of (a) general insurance and (b) life assurance products within the European Community.

Mr. Redwood: As regards general insurance, three single market directives came into force on 1 July and a common position on a fourth (on motor insurance services) was agreed at the internal Market Council on 20 June. The most important of these directives, on Non-Life Insurance Services, established freedom to sell most forms of commercial insurance across frontiers in the Community.

As regards life assurance, a common position was adopted on 29 June on the draft life assurance services directive, which will allow the sale of life insurance across frontiers in cases where the policyholder has taken the initiative in seeking insurance, either directly or through a broker, from a company in another member state.

These directives are important steps towards a free market, but many restrictions remain. I therefore strongly support the announced intention of the Commission to produce two further directives, one each on general insurance and life assurance. These will allow insurers to advertise and sell their products anywhere in the Community, either on a services basis or from a local branch, on the basis of a single authorisation from their home state supervisor.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to publish the names of the companies that have notified him of their intention to take control of insurance companies; when he expects to announce the decision he reaches on whether they are fit and proper to take such control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: No. The Department's consideration of cases under section 61 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 which deals with changes of control of insurance companies is confined entirely to the regulatory issue of whether the proposed controller is fit and proper. In order to form a view on that question, the Department considers all relevant information, much of which is confidential. It would be inappropriate for the Department to disclose that the procedures had been launched or to reveal the stage which they had reached.

Where a change of control involves a public bid, it would be normal for any necessary regulatory consent to be a condition of the offer, and for that fact to be disclosed when a firm intention to make an offer is announced, and in the offer document. If the course taken by the regulatory procedures gave rise to price-sensitive information, it would be for the bidder to disclose the relevant facts. The Department must concentrate on its task of judging fit and properness under the law; the bidder or target company on any legal or other requirements which may apply to them to make available all necessary information.

Provided that all the necessary regulatory consents are available, the market should determine the outcome of a proposed takeover.

Departmental Expenditure

82. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the expenditure of his Department in 1989; and what is the planned expenditure for the current year, in real terms.

99. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the expenditure of his Department in 1989; and what is the planned expenditure for the current year, in real terms.

Mr. Forth: The expenditure of my Department in 1989-90 was £1,275·9 million. The planned expenditure for 1990-91 is £1,088·0 million at 1989-90 prices.

109. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much his Department spent in 1989-90 expressed as a percentage of gross domestic product; and what was the comparable figure for the Japanese Ministry for International Trade.

Mr. Lilley: Expenditure by the Department of Trade and Industry last year was 0·24 per cent. of gross domestic product whereas general expenditure by Japan's Ministry of International Trade was equivalent to only 0·17 per cent. of Japanese gross domestic product even though its responsibilities are wider.

85. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received regarding the trade sale of the Insurance Services Group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

136. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further representations he has received on the Consumer Guarantees Bill.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 17 May 1990 at column 459. Since then my Department has received a number of further representations about the Consumer Guarantees Bill, from both individuals and various organisations. It would not be appropriate to give details of those representations without the permission of the individuals and organisations concerned.

Departmental Staff

98. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to reduce the number of staff in his Department.

133. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to reduce the number of staff in his Department.

Mr. Forth: Manpower projection for my Department to 1992-93 were set out in chapter 4 of the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 1004) published in January 1990. These envisaged a fall in total manpower from 11,933 in 1990-91 to 11,876 in 1992-93. The then Secretary of State subsequently announced, in his written reply of 21 February, a reduction of some 100-150 posts as a result of the reorganisation of the Department's "market" divisions. Final figures for 1991-92 and projections for future years will be settled later this year following the conclusion of the current Public Expenditure Survey round.

Grants to Industry

101. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total cost of grants in aid to industry in the last financial year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The whole of my Department's programme expenditure is aimed at encouraging wealth creation by British industry and commerce, partly through the provision of grants and services to the private sector.

Grants paid direct to private sector firms in 1989-90 totalled some £520 millions net of relevant receipts. They included regional development grants, regional enterprise grants, selective assistance, support for the aerospace and shipbuilding industries and support for research and development.

In addition, my Department spent some £105 millions on export promotion and consultancy initiatives, which provide services direct to the private sector.

Departmental Structure

103. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for the future structure of his Department.

Mr. Lilley: I am proud to have been given responsibility for this great Department of State. I plan to consolidate recent changes in the Department's structure, building on the fine traditions which the DTI and its precursor Departments have established over two centuries in helping markets work and promoting enterprise.

117. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet his European counterparts to discuss Britain's trade with the rest of Europe.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ministers meet their European counterparts on a regular basis to discuss a range of issues of common interest.

Taiwan

106. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received regarding access for British exporters to the Taiwanese market.

Mr. Redwood: My Department receives frequent representations from individual companies and trade associations about the few remaining obstacles to access to the Taiwanese market for British exporters.

The most frequent complaints have been about protectionist duties on Scotch whisky, about the favour shown to United States suppliers for public sector projects, and about the difference between the exhaust emission standards applied to domestic and imported vehicles.

The authorities in Taiwan are well aware of United Kingdom concerns. Her Majesty's Government themselves have no formal dealings with the authorities there but the British Overseas Trade Board's area advisory group for Taiwan, the Anglo-Taiwan Trade Committee, takes every opportunity to draw our concerns on these matters to their attention, both in Taipei and London.

Money Advice Funding Working Party

107. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further representations he has received on implementing the recommendations of the Money Advice Funding Working Party.

Mr. Forth: I have received no such representations. The Money Advice Funding Working Party, under the chairmanship of Lord Ezra, did not make any specific recommendations addressed to Government. I have however welcomed the report, in particular its main conclusion, that the private sector could and should make a greater contribution to the funding of money advice.

Exhibition, Kiev

119. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effects of the British exhibition in Kiev in terms of the promotion of United Kingdom trade and exports.

Mr. Redwood: British exports to the Soviet Union are up 35 per cent. so far this year but we believe this largely reflects orders taken some 18 months to two years ago. Given that such time lags are normal in trade with the Soviet Union, it would obviously be premature to assess the effects of last month's British trade exhibition in Kiev.

The trade exhibition was part of a month-long British presence in Kiev comprising more than 25 different events, the centrepiece being an FCO exhibition depicting life in modern Britain. More than 40 British companies took part in the trade exhibition and accompanying seminar programme, which ran from 4-14 June and demonstrated British expertise in areas of major potential for business in the Ukraine.

I can assure my hon. Friend that the trade exhibition, like the British month as a whole was a considerable success. Participating companies were delighted with the attention which they received from business visitors and I am confident that they will follow this up vigorously to convert these leads into the basis for increased economic co-operation, including British exports to the Soviet Union.

Exporters (Assistance)

121. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new proposals to help British exporters.

Mr. Redwood: My Department offers a wide range of advice and support to assist United Kingdom exporters which many firms make use of. We continue to monitor the performance and relevance of our services to ensure they fully meet the needs of our customers.

The continuing growth of the volume of our exports, reflecting the strong position of United Kingdom industry, is encouraging.

81. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new proposals to help British exporters.

Mr. Redwood: My Department offers a wide range of advice and support to assist United Kingdom exporters which many firms make use of. We continue to monitor the performance and relevance of our services to ensure they fully meet the needs of our customers.

The continuing growth of the volume of our exports, reflecting the strong position of United Kingdom industry, is encouraging.

140. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that the British system of hallmarking is safeguarded when legislation to harmonise hallmarking is introduced.

Mr. Forth: The EC Commission has recently indicated that it intends to put forward proposals on the control and marking of precious metals. We shall seek to maintain an adequate level of protection for the consumer in the United Kingdom in discussion on any proposals which are put forward.

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ensure the continued mandatory hallmarking of silver cutlery made in Britain following the creation of the single European market.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 17 July 1990]: The European Community Commission has recently indicated that it intends to put forward proposals on the control and marking of precious metals. We shall seek to maintain an adequate level of protection for the consumer in the United Kingdom in discussions on any proposals which are put forward.

Shipbuilding

138. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the prospects of the shipbuilding industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The future of the United Kingdom's shipbuilding industry depends on its ability to win orders in the face of international competition. Substantial support is provided by the Government to assist the industry to return to normal competitive conditions.

Innovation Advisory Board

139. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement about the report entitled, "Innovation: City Attitudes and Practices" by the Innovation Advisory Board of his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The report "Innovation: City Attitudes and Practices" was prepared by the Innovation Advisory Board as a discussion paper for the conference on innovation and short-termism held in London on 25 June. The proceedings of that conference are due to be published shortly.

I understand that the Innovation Advisory Board is considering follow-up action from the conference and I am at present awaiting its recommendations.

Investment

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on short-termism in British finance and industry.

Mr. Lilley: Like my right hon. predecessor, to whom I pay tribute, I recognise the importance of this issue. Companies' ability to invest in the long term is a function of their profitability. The profitability of British industry has returned of late to the highest levels for 20 years and business investment has consequently reached record levels.

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the individual amounts contributed by accountancy firms criticised by the inspectors towards the establishment and running of the Financial Reporting Council.

Mr. Redwood: The financial contribution of the accountancy profession to the Financial Reporting Council is made by the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies and the source of the funding is a matter for the bodies constituting that committee.

British Airways

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he received any communication from the Commission of the European Community as a result of the visit by its officials to the offices of the chairman and chief executive of British Airways when they examined their private papers and personal bank statements.

Mr. Lilley: No. It is not usual for the Commission to report on visits made in the course of competition investigations.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there was any communication between the Commission of the European Community and his Department before officials of the Commission carried out a search of the offices of the chairman and chief executive of British Airways to examine their private papers and personal bank statements.

Mr. Lilley: In accordance with usual practice, the Commission notified the Office of Fair Trading in advance about the proposed visit to British Airways on 23-24 February, which had already been arranged with the company, and an official from the office accompanied the Commission officials on the visit. So far as we can establish, no personal bank accounts were examined nor were other private papers called for.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department has records of three subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act, all received over the period since November 1987. No prior estimates were made on expected applications.

In view of the small number of requests and the absence of complaints there are no plans to review the subject access fee. The Department does not charge staff for access to their records.

Chinese Bicycles

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the ratio is of Chinese bicycles imported into the European Community to the level envisaged under present generalised system of preferences rules; and what proportion of these imports enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: There are no fixed limits on imports of Chinese bicycles under the generalised system of preferences at the present time.

Full details of Community imports of Chinese bicycles under the GSP for the first half of 1990 are not yet available from the European Commission. My Department will write to my hon. Friend with this information as soon as it becomes available.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will press for a review of (a) general systems of preference status of Chinese bicycle imports and (b) China's undeveloped nation status for trading purposes.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans at present to seek a review of the status of Chinese bicycle imports within the EC, or China's current status as a beneficiary under the GSP. My Department will, however, continue to monitor the situation regarding the imports of Chinese bicycles.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to formulate his response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report of the inquiry at which Mr. Nigel Harris of the AUEW, Mr. Alan Harris, Mr. Bill Menzies and the hon. Member for Linlithgow gave evidence.

Mr. Redwood: The Secretary of State will formulate his response when he receives the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, which is expected by 3 August.

Import Penetration (EC)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish a table showing the latest figure for import penetration from the European Economic Community as a percentage of home demand on the same basis as in table 15.10 of the Monthly Digest of Statistics; and if he will add the figures for 1970 and 1979 on a broadly comparable basis.

Mr. Redwood: My Department does not make regular estimates of import penetration ratios for particular groups of trading partners. However, estimates broadly comparable to those published in the Monthly Digest of Statistics are as follows:

EC imports as a proportion of home demand (manufacturing)

	Percentage
1970	5
1979	12
1988	19

Computers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of United Kingdom exports of computers consists of re-exports.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not readily available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the United Kingdom content of United Kingdom exports of computers in 1973, 1979, 1985 and the latest year for which an estimate is feasible.

Mr. Forth: Information on which to base a reliable estimate is not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has completed his review of the computer industry; and whether he intends to publish his findings.

Mr. Forth: A voluntary exercise has been undertaken to collect figures for the "balance of trade" in electronic and IT goods of some of the larger IT companies in the United Kingdom. The results will be published soon.

Civil Aviation Authority

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the Civil Aviation Authority will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The report is published today. In contrast to its more wide-ranging 1983 report, the commission was asked to focus its attention particularly on the authority's arrangement for managing its investment programme and for identifying and implementing improvements in efficiency.

The commission found that the authority was not pursuing a course of conduct which operated against the public interest.

The commission recognised the authority's achievement in maintaining its excellent safety record in the face of the marked growth of air traffic in recent years. While disappointed that the authority had initially been slow to implement the recommendations of its 1983 report, the commission found that the new management team appointed from 1986 onwards was now tackling the authority's problems. For example, an extensive investment programme is under way and there had been a market recent improvement in the authority's record of project control.

The commission made a number of recommendations, giving particular priority to:

(a) the implementation of effective corporate manpower planning, in particular to address the shortage of air traffic control officers;

(b) the use of corporate planning to illustrate trends in performance;

(c) implementation of improvements in project management to the authority's suggested time-scale;

(d) greater transparency in and explanation of charges.

The authority will be producing a preliminary response to the commission's findings within three to four months, in the light of which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will make a statement.

Company Registers

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has for introducing regulations under section 143 of the Companies Act 1989 on the inspection and copying of company registers; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My Department issued a consultative document today on the issues to be covered by regulations under section 143.

A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. Further copies are available from my Department by telephoning 071-215 3093 or writing to DTI, room G07, 10-18 Victoria street, London, SW1H 0NN.

The deadline for comments is 14 September 1990.

Industry Council

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what matters will be discussed at the European Community Industry Council to be held on 21 September.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 17 July 1990]: At the moment, no agenda has been formally agreed for the 21 September meeting of the Industry Council.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to attend the European Community Industry Council proposed for 21 September.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 17 July 1990]: At the moment, it is my intention to attend the 21 September meeting of the Industry Council.

Companies Act Investigations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1980 the number of reports under the Companies Acts completed, the number published after completion and the cost of such investigations, showing separately the costs of those reports published from the costs of reports not published.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 16 July 1990]: Following is the information:

[1]Costs of investigations to interim report stage are not readily available.

[2]The cost of investigations by Departmental officers and in one case by outside inspectors is not readily available. The number of reports completed each year for which cost of investigations are available is shown in brackets after the cost.

[3]The decision whether to publish 13 of the unpublished reports completed since 1985 remains under consideration.

[4]Reports were not necessarily published in the same year they were completed.

143. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board to discuss the other self-regulatory organisations.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board to discuss a range of topics concerning the regulation of financial services as frequently as is necessary. No date has been fixed for the next meeting of this sort.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the ministerial meetings with officials of (1) the Securities and Investments Board, (2) the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association, (3) the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation, (4) the Securities Association and (5) the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: During the past year I have met officials from the Securities and Investments Board on five occasions; from the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association five times; from the Securities Association three times; from the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation twice and from the investment Management Regulatory Organisation once. Over the same period my right hon. Friend the previous Secretary of State met officials from the Securities and Investments Board and the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association each on one occasion, and the Securities Association twice.

Bankruptcies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies entered into receivership in each year since 1980; and what information he has on the number of such cases in which the previous annual audit statement was unqualified.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: The number of companies in Great Britain notified to Companies House as entering receivership since 1980 were:

	Number
1980	1,498
1981	1,741
1982	2,949
1983	3,063
1984	2,322
1985	2,130
1986	2,141
1987	1,466
1988	2,037
1989	1,841

No information is available on the number of receivership cases where the previous annual audit statement was unqualified.

Vietnam

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many British companies trade with Vietnam; and what information he has on the position in other European Community member states.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: The DTI does not maintain a comprehensive list of individual British or EC companies which trade with Vietnam. The table compares the United Kingdom's share of exports from OECD countries to Vietnam with those of the rest of the European Community.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what cover the Export Credits Guarantee Department gives to British companies wishing to trade with Vietnam; what information he has on export credits provided by other European Community states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: Cover from the Export Credits Guarantee Department is available for short-term business subject to payment being made on terms of cash against documents out of an irrevocable letter of credit confirmed before shipment by a bank in the United Kingdom. Some other member states provide similar support.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support Her Majesty's Government gives to British companies wishing to trade with Vietnam.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: Financial support from Her Majesty's Government for British companies wishing to trade with Vietnam is limited to short-term (180 days) export credit cover available from the Export Credits Guarantee Department on the basis of payment made on terms of cash against documents out of an irrevocable letter of credit confirmed before shipment by a bank in the United Kingdom. The resumption of medium and long-term cover, withdrawn in 1982 following repayment defaults, will be reviewed when Vietnam has negotiated a debt rescheduling arrangement with the IMF. This policy is broadly in line with other European export credit agencies.

Through the BOTB, the DTI continues to offer a wide range of services to assist United Kingdom companies trading with Vietnam including general market information, briefing seminars and financial support for companies visiting Vietnam as part of DTI-sponsored trade missions or exhibitions.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 19 July 1990

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

EC Officials (Search Warrants)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions in the current year courts have issued warrants to officials of the European Community to search the offices of companies in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There have been no instances during the current year of United Kingdom courts granting orders in connection with the search of company premises by officials of the European Community under the EC rules on competition.

Legal Aid

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list those categories of alleged offence which qualify for international legal aid.

The Attorney-General: International legal aid is available under the provisions of the European agreement on the transmission of legal aid applications for civil, commercial and administrative cases. This agreement provides for the transfer of legal aid applications between signatory states. The treatment of applications is governed by the rules of the legal aid schemes of the recipient states and varies from state to state.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given in his "Options for Change" review to the amount of low flying carried out by RAF fast jets.

Mr. Neubert: The amount of low flying training carried out by the RAF will continue to reflect operational requirements.

Royal Clarence Yard, Gosport

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Royal Clarence yard at Gosport.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In common with the rest of the naval estate, the cost effectiveness of the Royal Clarence yard is continually monitored.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: A total of 21,985 subject access requests have been received by the major pay and personnel database centres in the Ministry of Defence; all were from current, past and potential employees. The figures so far are considered to be roughly in line with the forecast of between 0·01 and 0·1 per cent. of the target population per annum. The subject access fee charged is not being reconsidered.

Al Yamamah Agreement

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the date of the conclusion of the Al Yamamah agreement with Saudi Arabia and the dates of the conclusion of subsequent modifications of that agreement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The original formal understanding and the memorandum of understanding between Her Majesty's Government and the Saudi Arabian Government concerning Project Al Yamamah were concluded, respectively, in 1985 and 1986. A further formal understanding was concluded in 1988.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and places of meetings about the Al Yamamah agreement with Saudi Arabia and officials or representatives of his Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: My officials are in constant touch with representatives of the Saudi Arabian Government during which a wide range of issues concerning the Al Yamamah agreement are reviewed and discussed.

Menwith Hill

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current agreement under which Menwith Hill base is occupied and controlled by the National Security Agency of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Stewart) gave to the hon. Member on 27 April 1988, Official Report, column 203.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Company Taxation

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will identify the provisions by which, if under the proposed pay and file system no assessment has been made on a company within the normal six-year time limit, the tax already paid by the company under the pay rules of pay and file will be repayable to it; within what period from the end of such six-year period such tax will have to be repaid; whether interest will be payable on the repayment by the Revenue; and by what legal process the tax-paying company will be able to enforce such payment.

Mr. Ryder: As I explained in Standing Committee E on 21 June, Official Report, column 383, it would not necessarily be appropriate for tax paid by a company under pay and file to be repaid where an assessment was not made within the normal six-year time limit. But where the company was then able to show that no assessment could be made, it would be entitled to claim repayment of the tax and interest would be due on the tax repaid.

Married Woman's Tax Allowance

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated cost to the Treasury in a full year of making the married woman's tax allowance transferable to (a) working husbands and (b) non-working husbands; and what is his policy on making such a move.

Mr. Ryder: The cost would be a little over £3 billion; some 95 per cent. would result from married women transferring unused personal allowance to husbands in paid employment. These estimates are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are, therefore, provisional.

An arrangement of this kind would have some similarity to the system of fully transferable allowances for married couples described in the 1986 Green Paper "The Reform of Personal Taxation". In the light of the response to the Green Paper the Government decided not to go ahead with that proposal, but to introduce the present system of independent taxation incorporating the transferable married couple's allowance.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Customs and Excise officers at ports of entry to the United Kingdom have pay scales designed to reward proficiency in more than one language.

Mr. Ryder: Although pay scales are not designed to reward foreign language proficiency, Customs and Excise officers at ports of entry can be paid allowances in addition to basic salary, normally for a maximum of two languages but exceptionally for three where one language is Finnish, Greek, Arabic, Hungarian, Turkish, or any Asian or Slavonic language.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Customs and Excise officers at ports of entry to the United Kingdom are required to be able to speak foreign languages.

Mr. Ryder: Customs and Excise officers at ports of entry to the United Kingdom are not so required but some are proficient in foreign languages and receive appropriate allowances.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report on eastern European economics entitled "End of the Cycle" by Morgan Stanley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: At present the Treasury and Cabinet Office library does not hold a copy of the report entitled "End of the Cycle" by Morgan Stanley. The library is trying to obtain a copy.

Government Departments (Staff)

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 April.

Mr. Norman Lamont: On 1 April 1990 there were 562,388 staff in post in central Government Departments. Of these 495,233 were non-industrials and 67,155 were classified as being in industrial work.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools, Wandsworth

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what consultations he has had with Wandsworth borough council regarding parental choice of secondary schools;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the closure notices for Chestnut Grove, Walsingham, John Archer and Battersea Park comprehensive schools, issued by Wandsworth borough council;

(3) when he or his colleagues last met (a) the director of education of Wandsworth borough council and (b) the chairman of Wandsworth borough council education committee, regarding the closure of comprehensive schools in Wandsworth and the resulting pattern of school provision in Wandsworth;

(4) when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the Wandsworth education committee to discuss comprehensive school closures in Wandsworth.

Mrs. Rumbold: As part of a cycle of meetings with the inner London councils to discuss the progress they have made since they took over responsibility for education from ILEA on 1 April, I intend soon to meet representatives of Wandsworth local education authority. That meeting will include discussion of the authority's secondary reorganisation proposals, on which it is to issue a public consultation document. If consultation led to the publication of statutory proposals requiring the determination of the Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend would consider these in due course.

Haberdashers' Aske's CTC

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science with what persons he will enter into an agreement under section 105 of the Education Reform Act 1988, for the purposes of establishing and maintaining a Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Secretary of State will enter into an agreement with the Haberdashers' Aske's City Technology College Trust, which has not yet been formed. When it is formed the primary members of the trust will be persons nominated by those organisations including the Haberdashers' Company which intend to sponsor the CTC. Membership will include a nominee of the Secretary of State.

World Literacy Survey

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that the United Kingdom participates in the world literacy survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No proposal on this has been put to the Government, but I understand that the National Foundation for Educational Research—to which it was put—declined to participate on justified grounds. The national curriculum and the equivalent arrangements in Scotland and Northern Ireland, should in due course provide a much sounder platform for international comparisons.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in relation to each city technology college, what amount of earmarked annual grant or related payments were paid by his Department for the school year 1989-90; and for what purposes each element of earmarked annual grant was paid.

Mrs. Rumbold: Earmarked grants are the subject of specific bids for the colleges and relate to specific expenditure on:

a. consumables—the purchase, during the start-up period only, of a basic stock of library and text books, courseware, stationery and other consumable materials;
b. school meals—the provision of free meals for pupils who qualify, a subsidy in respect of those pupils who do not, and supervision costs;
c. pupil support—to cover the costs of school uniforms and school transport for disadvantaged pupils;
d. IT development—software and courseware for the incorporation and exploitation of IT throughout the curriculum and in the administration of the college; and
e. staff development—to provide for in-service training and curriculum development needs arising from the curriculum in CTCs.

The total EAG provision for the three colleges in the academic year 1989-90 is as follows:

Kingshurst	143,000
Djanogly, Nottingham	213,000
Macmillan College, Teesside	204,000

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in respect of each city technology college what amount of annual per capita grant or related revenue costs were paid by his Department for the school year 1989-90; what unit of cost per pupil was used in calculating the amount of such payments; how this was determined; and what enhancement of annual per capita grant was allowed under the terms of paragraph 11 of the model funding agreement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The annual per capita grant—APG—for the academic year 1989-90 for the three CTCs that are open is as follows:

Kingshurst	927,000
Djanogly, Nottingham	871,000
Macmillan College, Teesside	852,000

The APG is determined by taking the unit cost for pupils under school leaving age, which for the academic year 1989-90 works out at £1,929, and for pupils over school leaving age, is £3,086. These are determined by the actual expenditure per secondary pupil in a group of 24 LEAs that maintain schools in similar areas to CTCs with an addition for central administration costs. Furthermore, an allowance is made for diseconomies of scale during the start-up period of a CTC while it works up to full pupil capacity. This provides for more teachers in year one than the overall pupil-teacher ratio would justify; more non-teaching staff in year one than the final target complement would imply pro rata; and an additional sum to reflect premises-related diseconomies.

Management Information Systems

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the criticisms in the report, "Computerised Management Information Systems in Further Education—A Study of Quality Assurance", of the two major suppliers of these systems.

Mr. Jackson: The Department plans to publish the findings of the project in the early autumn.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations his Department has received from suppliers mentioned in the report "Computerised Management Information Systems in Further Education—A Study of Quality Assurance" seeking to have the report modified or changed before its publication.

Mr. Jackson: Before accepting the completion of the project, the Department sought the suppliers' views on the factual accuracy of the project team's findings. The suppliers' replies highlighted some inaccuracies and indicated how they proposed to respond to the team's findings. These responses will be taken into account in the report due to be published in the autumn.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when his Department will publish the report entitled "Computerised Management Information Systems in Further Education—A Study of Quality Assurance", which was presented to his Department in December 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 10 July 1990, Official Report, column 186.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he expects to be available to him, and what studies have been made and are being undertaken relating to governors of grant-maintained schools and proposed grant-maintained schools.

Mr. MacGregor: The views of the governors of grant-maintained schools are sought on a variety of issues. It is clear that they welcome their new status. In particular, governors welcome their greater independence and the freedom to decide their own priorities and to implement policies for achieving their goals. Many governors believe that their increased responsibilities make for a more satisfying and fulfilling role.

Student Loans

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the appointment of an independent person, pursuant to paragraph 3(5) of schedule 2 to the Education (Student Loans) Act 1990.

Mr. MacGregor: The Student Loans Company will appoint an independent assessor, whose function will be to investigate and report on disputes between the company and borrowers or intending borrowers under the loans scheme. The appointment of the assessor will be subject to my approval. The assessor will operate in accordance with an agreed set of procedures and terms of reference, a copy of which I have placed today in the Library of each House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Welfare Inspections

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animal welfare inspections were made by state veterinary officers in each of 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Maclean: The number of visits to farms specifically to carry out animal welfare inspections in each of these years was:

Year	Inspections
1985	6,064
1986	5,804
1987	5,219
1988	5,670
1989	3,902

The reduction in 1989 was due largely to the need to divert the effort of the state veterinary service to tackling the problems of BSE. However, veterinary officers continued to monitor welfare in the course of their visits to farms for other purposes.

Veterinary Investigation Centre, Polwhele

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tests for listeria were carried out at the veterinary investigation centre, Polwhele, Truro, in 1987, 1989 and to the most convenient date in 1990; and what percentage of these tests gave a positive response.

Mr. Maclean: The veterinary investigation service does not routinely carry out tests specifically for listeria. As a disease of animals, listeriosis is considered as a differential diagnosis when pathological material is submitted to a veterinary investigation centre by a practising veterinary surgeon.

In the period 1987 to 9 July 1990 the following diagnoses of listeriosis were made at Truro VIC either by microbiological examination or pathological examination or both:

	1987	1988	1989	[1]1990
Cattle	3	17	14	9
Sheep	7	6	8	10

[1] To 9 July 1990.

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many possible BSE samples were examined at the veterinary investigation centre, Polwhele, Truro, in each of the years 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990 to date; and what percentage of these cases proved positive.

Mr. Maclean: There are two stages in the examination of brain material for BSE carried out in veterinary investigation centres.

(i) The removal of brain material for examination.
(ii) The histopathological preparation and miscroscopic examination of the selected tissues.

In respect of (ii) the VI centre at Polwhele acts as one of 11 designated centres for this purpose and as such the numbers examined do not necessary reflect the situation.

In 1987 to 9 July 1990 the VI centre at Truro carried out the following procedures:

	1987	1988	1989	[1]1990
(i) Removal of brain tissue	44	364·00	611·00	620·00
(ii) Histopathological examination	44	437·00	537·00	730·00
Percentage histopathological examination +ve	100	90·16	89·57	89·18

[1] To 9 July 1990.

Veterinary Investigation Centres

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many veterinary investigation centres are currently operated by his Department; and how many of these are currently under review as to their future retention.

Mr. Maclean: There are 19 veterinary investigation centres in England and Wales. The review of the veterinary investigation service was commissioned by the Minister with a view to improving the quality, efficiency and the cost effectiveness of the services provided by VI centres. As such the review considered the service as a whole. The report of this review has been submitted to Ministers but as yet no decision has been reached on any of the recommendations within the report.

North-East Salmon Review

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the north-east salmon review has been completed; and when he expects to publish the report.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my right hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) on 29 June, Official Report, column 388.

Fishery Protection

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to change the arrangements for fishery protection at sea.

Mr. Curry: Yes. In order to maintain the patrol capability at the level I consider necessary to achieve effective deterrence and proper compliance with United Kingdom and Economic Community fisheries regulations, the Department has arranged to charter the Southella to carry out fishery enforcement duties within British fishery limits. The charter will run from the middle of this month. The ship is already converted for this work, having previously carried out similar duties for the Falkland Islands Government and the Commission of the European Communities. It will supplement the forces of the Royal Navy's fishery protection squadron.

Like the ships of the fishery protection squadron, Southella will operate under the direction of the Ministry's sea fisheries inspectorate. She will carry a team of experienced inspectors who will carry out enforcement checks on both British and foreign fishing boats, mainly though not exclusively in the south-west approaches.

This civilian addition to the fishery enforcement capability is necessary because of a current shortfall in the availability of suitable naval ships this year. The requirements for next year will be reviewed in the light of the availability of Royal Navy vessels.

I commend the fishery protection squadron for the invaluable service it has given and continues to give in carrying out the fishery enforcement duties for the protection of fisheries and the ultimate benefit of all fishermen.

WALES

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 11 July to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, column 199, what was (a) the percentage of polychlorinated biphenyl contaminated material, and (b) the tonnage of other toxic materials that were imported into Newport via the River Usk during the period 1 April 1989 to 31 March.

Mr. Grist: Of the 1,314 tonnes of hazardous waste recorded as imported into Newport via facilities on the River Usk, 479 tonnes or 36·45 per cent. was polychlorinated biphenyl contaminated material, and 835 tonnes was other material.

Hospitals (Salmonella)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he anticipates receiving a report on the cause of the salmonella outbreak at Ely hospital, Cardiff;

(2) when he next expects to meet the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority to discuss the salmonella outbreak at the Ely hospital, Cardiff.

Mr. Grist: Officials at the Welsh Office have already received a preliminary report from the health authority concerning the investigation and control of the salmonella outbreak at Ely hospital and further progress reports are awaited. At the present time my right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the chairman of South Glamorgan health authority to discuss this matter.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to institute better anti-salmonella preventive measures in hospitals and other institutions in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Food Safety Bill, which applies to hospitals and other institutions in Wales, will require higher standards in relation to the preparation and handling of food including the requirement for food handlers to receive a minimum level of training.

NHS Drugs

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the value of national health service drugs administered in Wales (a) in total and (b) in hospitals in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The net ingredient cost of all drugs and dressing administered by the NHS in Wales during 1988-89 was £160,154,164 of which the cost of drugs and dressing administered by district health authorities was £22,618,505 and £3,556,682 respectively.

Young Offenders

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received for the provision of a secure unit for young offenders below the age normally committed to prison; over what time span these representations have been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: We have not received any representations which call for the provision of a secure unit for young offenders. However, we have received representations which draw attention to the availability of secure accommodation in Wales.

Housing Grants

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the arrangements for paying new housing capital grants.

Mr. Grist: New housing capital grants were introduced by part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. The approval of Parliament for expenditure on these new grants is being sought in the main supply estimates for class XVI, vote 6—housing, other environmental services and welfare food, Wales. Pending that approval urgent expenditure, estimated at £22,733 million, will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will announce his proposals arising out of the Government's recent review of the operation of the new system of local government finance in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of a consultation paper which has been produced as a result of the review. The paper, which I shall be distributing shortly to interested bodies and individuals, sets out proposals with respect to the standard community charge, and certain other matters. Views are being sought on a number of changes which we are proposing to make in Wales. Similar consultations will also take place in England and Scotland. Comments on the proposals are invited by 28 September.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

United Nations Conference, Paris

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will be representing Her Majesty's Government at the second United Nations conference on the least-developed countries to be held in Paris in September; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I hope to lead the United Kingdom delegation to the second United Nations conference on the least-developed countries in Paris.

Rihand Power Station, India

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that no further British Government aid will be provided for the Rihand power station project in India, involving British companies, unless flue gas desulphurisation technology is installed.

Mrs. Chalker: A thorough appraisal of the project, including its environmental impact, is a condition for the provision of British aid to the second stage of the Rihand power station in India. The appraisal will examine the impact on the Indian environment of the level of sulphur dioxide emissions from the plant and assess the environmental and economic costs and benefits of flue gas desulphurisation. Because of the low sulphur content of Indian coal, the level of sulphur dioxide emissions would be relatively small. In the light of the appraisal, we will ensure adequate environmental safeguards are taken in consultation with the Government of India.

Developing Countries (Aid)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase support for the least developed countries.

Mrs. Chalker: The British aid programme is focused on the poorest, including those classified as least developed. Within an aid programme that is planned to grow in real terms, the Government will increasingly support least developed countries which are well governed and implement sound economic policies.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the proportion of gross national product given in overseas aid for each year from 1980 to 1989 to (a) the original 31 least developed countries and (b) the current 42 least developed countries.

Mrs. Chalker: The proportion of GNP given as official development assistance to the 31 countries classified as least developed at the time of the first UN conference on the least developed, and the 42 countries currently classified as least developed from 1980 to 1989 was as follows:

Proportion of GNP given as official development assistance to LLDCs from 1980 to 1989

Year	31 original countries Total per cent.	42 current countries Total per cent.
1980	0·09	n/a
1981	0·12	n/a

1986	0·08	0·09
1987	0·08	0·10
1988	n/a	0·10
1989	n/a	n/a

Note: The total is made up of bilateral assistance and imputed multilateral assistance.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accesses were made to each index of the police national computer over the last year; and how many of the access requests could search more than one index.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total number of accesses to each of the indices of the police national computer in the year to 30 June 1990 was as follows:

Mr. D. J. Burrows

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy in respect of compensation for damage done to private property by convicted criminals who abscond from Her Majesty's penal establishments; what factors underlay his refusal to make payments to Mr. D. J. Burrows of Lakenheath, Suffolk, in respect of the damage done to his boat in October 1989 by two persons who had escaped from Hollesley Bay remand centre in Suffolk, and were convicted of breaking-in offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The Home Office does not accept general responsibility for loss or damage caused by absconders from penal establishments. The courts have upheld that Home Office liability applies only where an escape takes place which is attributable to the negligence of staff, when they are under a duty to take steps to prevent an escape. There must be some failure to take proper care on the part of the authorities. In the case of Mr. Burrows there was no evidence of negligence by the staff involved at Hollesley Bay colony and the Department cannot therefore accept any legal liability for the damage to his yacht.

In certain circumstances ex-gratia payments may be made to owners of property stolen or damaged. This ex-gratia scheme is operated regardless of whether the abscond was due to any fault on the part of the staff of the establishment concerned. It simply accepts that in some establishments the conditions are such as to permit absconding if the inmate is so minded and in these circumstances compensation has been paid, for the sake of good will, to members of the public particularly at risk when they suffer loss. The Department makes such payments only where the loss or damage is not covered by insurance.

Mr. Burrows' boat was covered by an insurance policy, but the insurance company declined to meet his claim because, in breach of a policy condition, he failed to notify it until several months after the incident. The Department could have considered an ex-gratia payment to cover uninsured losses, such as an excess charge on the claim or a loss of no claims discount; but not to cover insured losses which Mr. Burrows has had to bear because of his failure to make a timely claim. Mr. Burrows was advised orally of the position on more than one occasion before he finally claimed from the insurance company. I am reviewing the case however to see whether the Department's actions contributed in any way to Mr. Burrows' delay in making a formal claim to his insurance company; and I will write to my hon. Friend.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the period 11 November 1987 to 16 July 1990 the Department received 35 requests for subject access. It was not judged possible, at the time when the provisions came into operation, to make any firm advance estimate of likely take-up, but there was an indication, on the basis of experience in other European countries, that requests might be in the range 0·1 to 1 per cent. per annum of records held—that is, between 5,400 and 54,000 requests per year to be addressed to the Home Office. I have no plans to reconsider the subject access fees charged by the Department.

Asylum

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals and of which nationality have been granted asylum in the United Kingdom since 1 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not yet available. Provisional figures for grants of refugee status in the second quarter of 1990 will shortly be provided to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Isle of Man Bank

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations have been received in connection with the failure of the Isle of Man bank.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since the collapse of the Savings and Investment Bank in the Isle of Man in 1982, a total of 52 representations have been received from, or on behalf of, 18 former investors with the bank. They have been informed that the matter is a domestic one within the jurisdiction of the Isle of Man.

Greater Manchester Police

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the report of the internal police inquiries into Greater Manchester police (a) following the collapse of the court proceedings against Kevin Taylor and (b) following the collapse of the court proceedings against Gerard Corley; and if he intends to publish the report.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Both these investigations are being carried out under the terms of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. The reports will be submitted to the Police Complaints Authority and copied to the chief constable of Greater Manchester.

Young Offenders

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is given to magistrates in deciding whether young offenders under 17 years of age should be confined in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. John Patten: The only juveniles under 17 who may be remanded to prison department establishments are 15 and 16-year-old boys who have been refused bail and certified by a court as being too unruly to be safely remanded to local authority care. The criteria governing the issue of unruliness certificates are laid down in the Certificates of Unruly Character (Conditions) Order 1977. The use of the sentence of detention in a young offender institution, which is available for some juveniles, is governed by the criteria in section 1 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982. Guidance to courts on the use of their powers is given from time to time by the Court of Appeal.

Minority Communities

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings the responsible Minister has held in the last 12 months with members of the minority communities; how many of these meetings were with young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Since 1 July 1989, I have held 30 meetings with individuals and groups from the minority communities, of which 14 have been with young people. The meetings have taken place not only in the Home Office but also in areas such as Birmingham, Bradford, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle and Nottingham.

In addition, I have attended two meetings of the Home Secretary's advisory council on race relations, the formal interdepartmental committee on which individual members of the minority communities can advise the Government on all aspects of race relations in Britain.

All these meetings have been an invaluable opportunity for me to learn about the issues that concern our minority communities. I have also been able to discuss ways of developing Britain as an integrated, multiracial society in which the minority communities can participate fully and freely without fear of prejudice and discrimination.

Forensic Pathology

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce the results of his consideration of the report of the working party on forensic pathology in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I have now carefully considered the report of the working party which had been examining the provision of forensic pathology services to police forces and coroners in England and Wales together with the comments which I have received on it from 23 interested individuals and representative bodies. Without exception, those consulted have endorsed the report's principal findings and recommendations, particularly in relation to funding, accreditation, training and research, and have urged me to implement these urgently in order to reverse the recent decline of the service and ensure an adequate supply of forensic specialists in the future.

The main proposal of the report is that the supply of forensic pathology services should be regulated through the market—that is, the main users of these services, police forces, should contract with the suppliers, the pathologists, for the services they need at prices and on conditions to be agreed between them. The role of the Home Office would be to maintain the high quality of the service through new arrangements for accreditation, training and research.

I have decided to accept the working party's proposals and to introduce the new arrangements straight away, including the establishment of a policy advisory board to oversee the development of this vital part of our criminal justice system.

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the youngest (a) boy and (b) girl being held in a prison in England and Wales on 9 July.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally on 31 May 1990, the latest date for which information is readily available, the youngest boy and girl held in a prison or remand centre were aged 15. Both had been sentenced.

Strangeways Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra financial allowance and additional days' leave were given to prison officers from prisons in England and Wales who were sent to Strangeways prison during the recent riot at that prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Prison officers sent to Her Majesty's prison Manchester during the recent emergency received an ex-gratia payment of £8 per hour in respect of additional hours worked. All staff involved in control and restraint deployment received five days' special leave with pay. Governors were asked also to grant a discretionary five days' special leave to any other staff who suffered particular stress at Manchester.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will be charged the costs of supplying prison officers from prisons in England and Wales for duty at Strangeways prison during the recent riot at that prison; what was the total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The costs of supplying prison officers for duty at Her Majesty's prison Manchester during the recent riot there are borne on the prisons vote—(class XI, 2).

The salaries of prison officers sent to Manchester are already paid by the prison service. The only additional salary costs are payments for additional hours worked in connection with the disturbance. These costs, together with transport and subsistence expenses, amounted to £545,094.

Prison Officers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support is given and by whom, to women prison officers now working in male prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Guidance to line managers in the prison service emphasises the importance of effective induction for staff who are new to an establishment, and line managers at all levels are expected to encourage and support their staff.

Murders

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the police clear-up rates for (a) all murders and (b) murders of gay men for the two most recent years for which he has figures.

Mr. John Patten: In cases of homicide it is not possible in the absence of a court decision to distinguish between offences of murder, manslaughter and infanticide. In England and Wales in 1988 and 1989 the ratio of offences of homicide cleared up to offences of homicide recorded in the same years was 96 and 92 per cent. respectively. Some offences are recorded and cleared up in different years. Statistics of homicide recorded and cleared up in 1988 are published in table 2.8 "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1988"—Cm. 847—and for 1989 in table 6 of "Home Office Statistical Bulletin 10/90". Records available centrally on the sexual status of homicide victims are incomplete. The available information shows six homosexual men to have been victims of homicide in 1988 and 1989; all these cases were cleared up.

Prisons (Incidents)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each of the reported serious incidents that have taken place in prisons in England and Wales between 1 January and 9 July.

Mr. Mellor: The following numbers of incidents between 1 January and 9 July 1990 are recorded as having been reported by prison service establishments under the broad headings shown, excluding incidents under headings categorised as minor.

	Number

Attempted escapes	7

Other miscellaneous incidents	38

To be meaningful, a list would need to include some description of incidents. In view of the number of incidents, such information could be given only at disproportionate cost.

THE ARTS

Regional Film Theatres

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he plans to meet the chairman of the British Film Institute to discuss increased investment in regional film theatres.

Mr. Luce: I regularly meet the chairman of the British Film Institute to discuss current issues.

Works of Art (Resale)

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Minister for the Arts what controls he intends to place on the resale of works of art by those who have purchased under the new regulations recently announced by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mr. Luce: The Government have never had the power to control the sale of privately owned works of art. On 4 May, the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced that, if an owner does not accept an offer from a private individual, the existence of that offer will be taken into account in deciding on the export licence application. If either the original owner, having rejected all offers to purchase, or a new owner, subsequently offer the item for resale, no conditions can be imposed on that sale. Should a resale result in an application for an export licence, the normal procedures for considering it would operate.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish the response he has made to the letter from Dr. Peter Jung and expert colleagues in foraminifera, ammonites and mammals of the naturhistorische museum in Basel about whether a major collection can be actively cared for under proposals such as those for the natural history museum in respect of expert staff; and what action he proposes to take to discharge obligations, in respect of scientists' work in building up collections to the benefit of smaller museums, throughout the world.

Mr. Luce: I have placed a copy of my correspondence with Dr. Peter Jung in the Library of the House. I have asked the Government's chief scientific adviser, who is in discussion with the natural history museum, to keep me informed of the museum's position in relation to the United Kingdom science base. I shall be meeting the chairman and director of the museum to discuss these and other issues.

British Library

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many reader seats were provided in the £2·3 million first phase conversion of the Corn Merchant's Store at the British Library, Boston Spa; and whether the second phase of this conversion has been approved.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: None. Approval has not been sought for a second phase.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will make it his policy to move little used material to stores outside London so that readers may use most of the St. Pancras building.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: This is a matter for the British Library Board.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the cost of repairs at the India Office library and records; and whether the British Library is to use the section vacated some years ago by the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The refurbishment at Orbit house by the British Library includes the area vacated by the Ministry of Defence and the costs are estimated to be £1·1 million excluding VAT.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on details of published surveys relating to readers' characteristics and needs in planning the new building at St. Pancras.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The "Report of the National Libraries Committee" Cm 4028 included several surveys. Further surveys have been undertaken by the British Library for use in planning the new building and have been reported to its advisory committees.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts when readers may inspect plans of the collection allocations and visit the site of the St. Pancras building.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The detailed collection allocations have not been finalised by the British Library although broad plans are being prepared. They will not be available for consideration before the end of this year. A user and staff communication programme has already commenced including a video and the production of leaflets. It is intended to institute site visits for readers towards the new year subject to safety considerations.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the percentage of shelving in phase I of the new St. Pancras building housing science and technology publications.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: Over 40,000 m of shelving, representing 13·8 per cent. of the shelving in the first stage of construction, are destined for science and technology publications. This compares with 27,000 m in the present Holborn and Aldwych buildings. A further 6,500 m are planned for the completion phase.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what are the total costs of the development of the radiation polymer preservation programme and the number of books which have been preserved by this process.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The development costs incurred by the British Library for the polymer preservation programme total £540,000. During the research period which has recently ended the process has been applied to sample volumes only.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the revenue from commercial sales of the British Library archivist book copier.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: Royalties from commercial sales so far total £15,000.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what area in phase I of the new St. Pancras building is to be allocated for book preservation.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: An area of over 1,500 sq m is assigned to book preservation functions in the first stage of construction, in addition to the environmentally controlled storage and consultation facilities and associated plant.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will itemise total investment by the British Library in compact disc with read-only memory.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: This information is not readily obtainable. Increasingly, the British Library's various operations employ equipment which makes some use of CD-ROM technology.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will take steps to ensure that stools, work surfaces and trolleys are part of the brief for the science and technology reading rooms at St. Pancras.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: Work surfaces, chairs and trolleys are included in the brief for the science and technology reading rooms at St. Pancras. Stools are not included.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how it is proposed to manage phase I of the new St. Pancras building so it provides a national centre for reference, study and other information in relation to scientific and technological matters.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The whole of the British Library's London-based scientific, technological and business services currently spread over three buildings will be brought together at the same time at St. Pancras and will provide reference, study and information services in response to users' needs.

PRIME MINISTER

Criminal Proceedings (Children's Evidence)

Q104. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to modify or change the legal procedures concerning the evidence of children on commission in criminal proceedings; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government are giving careful consideration to the recommendations of the Scottish Law Commission in its recent report on the evidence of children and other potentially vulnerable witnesses; and, for England and Wales, to the comments received on the report of Judge Pigot's advisory group on video evidence. We shall announce our proposals as soon as possible.

Westwood Hospital, Bradford

Q109. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Westwood hospital, Bradford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

European Monetary Union

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received any views from member states since the Dublin meeting of the European Council on the United Kingdom proposals to be submitted to the intergovernmental conference on monetary union.

The Prime Minister: The Government's proposals have been welcomed as a constructive contribution to the debate on EMU and are being considered further in ECOFIN and other appropriate bodies.

Wandsworth Director of Education

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met in an official capacity the director of education of Wandsworth borough council.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Education and Science are in regular contact with representatives of all local authorities in England.

Council of Europe/WEU

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will place in the Library a copy of the correspondence received from the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate about the information bulletin on the activities of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of the Western European Union.

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will obtain for her office library a copy of the report on eastern European economics entitled "End of the Cycle" by Morgan Stanley.

The Prime Minister: The Government are obtaining a copy of that report.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister which east European countries have not taken up the credit which is available to them; how much is still available; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Export Credits Guarantee Department cover, subject to varying security requirements, is available for short-term credits for all markets of eastern Europe. Cover for medium-term export credits —that is, credits in excess of two years—is available to Czechoslovakia, GDR, Hungary and the USSR. The position on the availability of ECGD medium-term credit for other countries is under active review.

National Characteristics

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will hold meetings to discuss the national characteristics of peoples of countries other than Germany.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the replies given to the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) on 17 July, Official Report, column 859.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library a copy of the minutes of the meeting on 24 March which discussed what were considered to be the characteristics of Germans.

The Prime Minister: No.

Engagements

Mr. French: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 July.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 July.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I also participated in the deputation from the House which attended on Her Majesty the Queen Mother.

In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Spending

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much his Department spent in 1989-90, expressed as a percentage of gross domestic product; and what comparable information he has on the Japanese Ministry of International Trade.

Mr. Lilley: Expenditure by the DTI last year was one quarter per cent. of GDP whereas general expenditure by Japan's Ministry of International Trade proportionate to GDP was one third lower, even though its responsibilities are wider.

Car Parks

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has plans to amend the Fair Trading Act 1974 to include car park operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: There are no plans to do so at present.

Dixon Takeover Report

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what compensation his Department has so far paid out to investors due to the early release of the price-sensitive Kingfisher-Dixon takeover report.

Mr. Redwood: All claims which are received before the end of the month will be considered for compensation. No payments have yet been made.

Chartered Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will hold a public hearing before granting supervisory status to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

Mr. Redwood: No. But we intend, in considering applications for recognition as a supervisory body, to take account of any views or representations we receive from third parties.

Unlisted Securities

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has introduced since 1982 to protect investors in the unlisted securities market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Since 1 July 1985, the issue of shares other than those to be included on the official list of the stock exchange has been regulated under part III of the Companies Act 1985. Prior to that Act, such issues were primarily regulated by provisions of the Companies Act 1948 of which the 1985 Act provisions are a consolidation. Shares may be offered to the public only by public limited companies, and there must be a prospectus which complies with the requirements set out in schedule 3 to the Act. My Department has recently issued a consultative document on part V of the Financial Services Act 1986 which will complete the replacement of the provisions of the Companies Act relating to the public offers of securities.

The stock exchange, of which the unlisted securities market is part, has been a recognised investment exchange —RIE—within the terms of the Financial Services Act 1986 since the main provisions of that Act came into force in April 1988. Prior to this, the stock exchange was a recognised stock exchange under the terms of the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958. Responsibility for RIEs has been transferred to the Securities and Investments Board, including ensuring their compliance with schedule 4 to the 1986 Act, which sets out the safeguards for investors which RIEs must provide.

Since April 1988 those carrying on investment business in the United Kingdom, including advising investors and dealing or arranging deals in securities for them, have had to be authorised or exempt under the terms of the Financial Services Act.

Al Yamamah Agreement

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the dates and places of meetings about the Al Yamamah agreement with Saudi Arabia that involved officials or representatives of his Department or the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Redwood: Departmental and Export Credits Guarantee Department officials participate when necessary in interdepartmental meetings on the Al Yamamah project. Listing the dates and places of such meetings, which date back to 1985, would involve disproportionate cost.

Insurance Bundling

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will refer the practice of selling cars with free insurance, known as insurance bundling, to the Director General of Fair Trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that the Office of Fair Trading is already examining this practice, following a recent complaint.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to his reply of 18 December 1989, Official Report, columns 23-24, what conclusions have been reached on the future of the Export Credits Guarantee Department, after separation of the insurance services group.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has agreed that ECGD will continue as a separate Government Department, with the chief executive reporting directly to the Minister for Trade and me.

The immediate priority of ECGD's management is to prepare, subject to enabling legislation, for the separation and sale of the insurance services group.

The work of the remaining part of ECGD is essentially an executive function of the Government, and as such falls within the scope of the Prime Minister's statement of February 1988 launching the "next steps" project. The ECGD is engaged in redefining its financial objectives and developing a more consistent methodology for market assessment and underwriting decisions. This is compatible with the "next steps" approach, and agency status will be further considered when we have experience of how the new arrangements are working.

United Kingdom Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the import content, other than fuel, of United Kingdom manufactures other than food and fuel in 1973, 1979, 1985 and 1989.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 July 1990]: Information on which to base a reliable estimate is not available.

Insurance Companies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the persons who have conducted investigations under the Insurance Companies Acts.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 16 July 1990]: Such investigations are usually conducted by those concerned with insurance company regulation. To publish the names of the civil servants concerned would be against usual Government practice, and could lead others to the wrong conclusions if a named official subsequently made a routine visit to a different company which was not being investigated.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the companies investigated since 1979 under the Insurance Companies Act.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The table lists the number of investigations under section 44(2)(b) of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 since 1979.

	Investigated
1979	1
1981	1
1983	2
1984	1
1987	3
1988	3
1989	1

These investigations are confidential. They may find that there is nothing of concern, or they may find problems that can be remedied fairly easily. To publish the name in such circumstances would do unjustified damage to the business.

Compliance Officers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about inadequacies in the performance of compliance officers; and from whom they came.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: The Securities and Investments Board and the self-regulating organisations employ compliance officers to check that investment businesses comply with the regulatory requirements in the financial services sector. This includes assessing the adequacy of compliance procedures in licensed businesses under their regulatory control. These bodies themselves are responsible for the performance of their own officers. I receive complaints about inadequacies from time to time, which are pursued by the relevant bodies in the most appropriate way.

Property Development

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on shortfalls of liquidity in companies involved in property development; and from what source.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: I recently received a letter from an hon. Member enclosing representations about the entry into administrative receivership of a construction company. I am not aware of any other such representations.

FIMBRA

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the effectiveness of the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 July 1990]: My right hon. Friend and I regularly receive a variety of representations on the effectiveness of the Financial Services Act and the self-regulating organisations. Since 3 July we have received two representations about FIMBRA through hon. Members.

Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 26 February, Official Report, column 16, in how many of the unpublished companies inspectors' reports listed there, there were criticisms of the quality of company reports and accounts.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 July 1990]: I cannot disclose details of unpublished reports. The inspector's report on Euroflame Holdings plc was referred to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. The decision whether to publish reports involving 13 of the companies listed in the Official Report on 26 February, at columns 16-17 remains under consideration. The report on House of Fraser Holdings plc was published on 7 March 1990.

Internal Market Council

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) which Minister from his Department is to attend the European Community Internal Market Council on 17 July;

(2) what matters are to be discussed in the European Community Internal Market Council of 17 July.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The Internal Market Council on 17 July was cancelled.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what matters are to be discussed at the European Community Internal Market Council on 17 September.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: I understand that at this stage the matters likely to be discussed at the Internal Market Council on 17 September are transEuropean infrastructure networks, the copyright protection of computer programmes, and spray suppression devices for vehicles and trailers. However, this agenda must be very uncertain. It is some time before the Council, and firm agendas are usually announced in the committee of permanent representatives about two weeks before the Council in question.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Minister from his Department is to attend the European Community Internal Market Council on 17 September.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: Plans have not yet been finalised for ministerial attendance at the 17 September Internal Market Council. It is unlikely that I will be the United Kingdom representative.

Vietnam

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the level of United Kingdom exports to Vietnam has been in both volume and cash terms for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: The only information available is for visible trade at current prices and is as follows:

United Kingdom visible exports to Vietnam

	£,000
1980	15,213
1981	1,180
1982	858

1989	4,108

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the level of United Kingdom imports from Vietnam has been in both volume and cash terms for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 July 1990]: The only information available is for visible trade at current prices and is as follows:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Antarctica

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has received proposals from any Antarctic treaty nation regarding a moratorium on minerals mining in Antarctica.

Mr. Maude: No such proposals have been formally put to us. In respect of other proposals for conservation in Antarctica I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 3 May, at column 626.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects that his Department will finalise proposals which the United Kingdom is to make to the meeting of Antarctic treaty parties in November.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 17 July to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), at column 494.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whom he will be consulting before the special meeting of the Antarctic treaty parties in November to discuss environmental protection for the Antarctic environment.

Mr. Maude: We shall be consulting various Antarctic treaty parties.

Israel

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the extent to which Her Majesty's Government's policies with regard to Israel are influenced by the holocaust.

Mr. Waldegrave: We can never forget the suffering of the Jewish people in the holocaust. We want friendly relations with Israel and a just and lasting settlement of the middle east conflict to enable Israel to live in peace and security with its neighbours, including the Palestinians.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds the Government have made available for the promotion of democratic trade unionism in eastern Europe; and how that money has been allocated.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made available money to assist eastern European countries in their transition to democracy and a market economy. This takes the form of a know-how fund for eastern Europe which is administered by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Any requests from eastern European countries for assistance within the area of democratic trade unionism will be considered on their merit and funds allocated accordingly.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests have been received from trades unions and the Trades Union Congress for funds for the promotion of democratic trade unionism in eastern Europe; and what action has been taken.

Mr. Waldegrave: The joint assistance unit in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office which administers the know-how fund for eastern Europe has not received any proposals for assistance in this area from the United Kingdom trade union movement. In order to keep in touch with trade union views a senior union leader is a member of the know-how fund advisory board.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on the application made to the post in Jedda on 29 May by Mohd Nasir, who was born in 1961 and whose application reference is 7987, to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when entry clearance will be issued by the British High Commission Islamabad to Khalid Mahmood, husband of Mrs. Saeeda Begum of 48 Maple street, Blackburn, following the refusal of leave of appeal to the tribunal against the decision of the adjudicator to grant entry clearance; and why entry clearance has not yet been issued.

Mr. Maude: In accordance with the guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the questions to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Members will receive a reply from the unit as soon as possible.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the promptness with which British posts overseas issue entry clearances after the completion of the appeal process.

Mr. Maude: Posts overseas contact successful appellants immediately on receipt of notification from the Home Office that an appeal has been allowed. How quickly entry clearance can be issued varies according to individual circumstances.

World Cup

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Italian authorities about the treatment of the English football supporters deported from Italy during the world cup.

Mr. Maude: Both Her Majesty's embassy at Rome and Her Majesty's consul at Florence are in touch with the Italian authorities to assist them in the location, identification and return to the United Kingdom of the personal property of those British nationals removed from Italy following the violence at Rimini on 26 June 1990.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 16 and 17 July.

Mr. Hurd: The Foreign Affairs Council met in Brussels on 16 and 17 July. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office and I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council considered the necessary follow-up to the European Council in Dublin, including on preparations for the two intergovernmental conferences, and on development policy and social policy. The Council also took note of the outcome of the Houston economic summit.

The Council further reviewed the Community's relations with central and eastern Europe, including the G24 programme of western assistance and the extension of the Community's PHARE programme to other eastern European countries in addition to Poland and Hungary. The Council endorsed the postponement of signature of the trade and economic and commercial co-operation agreement with Romania and the exclusion of Romania from the proposed extension of the PHARE programme.

The Council considered Commission proposals for additional assistance to Yugoslavia and remitted them for further study. The presidency also presented a proposal for a Mediterranean financial institution, which was similarly remitted for further study.

The Council agreed a negotiating mandate for a trade and economic co-operation agreement with Chile, and conclusions and guidelines for a common position of the Community and member states for the second United Nations conference on the least developed, to be held in Paris in September. The Commission presented proposals for the Community's response to Colombia's special plan to combat drugs, and referred them for further discussion.

On 17 July, the Council discussed the current state of play in the GATT Uruguay round in the light of the outcome of the Houston summit and in advance of the trade negotiations committee in Geneva from 23 July.

A meeting of the European Community/Malta Association Council took place in the margins of the Council on 16 July. Separately, Ministers agreed informally to defer decisions on the referral of the Malta and Cyprus European Community membership applications to the Commission until the September Foreign Affairs Council meeting.

There was also discussion on 16 July in European Political Co-operation of CSCE, eastern Europe—including Albania—South Africa, Vietnam, Kenya and the middle east. Ministers agreed that a Troika ministerial mission will meet separately the Israeli Foreign Ministers and the presidency of the Arab League on 23 and 24 July to follow up the Dublin declaration on the middle east.

Albania

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to encourage the settlement of Albanian refugees in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

Any applications for asylum in this country from Albanian nationals would be considered in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees.

Family Planning

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the centres which offer the kind of comprehensive counselling outlined in Her Majesty's Government's guidelines for unplanned pregnancies in Scotland in the Edinburgh area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Current guidance from the Scottish Home and Health Department about the provision of family planning services draws health boards' attention to the need for counselling facilities, especially for young people. Such counselling is available within Lothian health board's area through general practitioners; obstetric and gynaecological in-patient and out-patient services; the board's community clinics; family planning clinics in central Edinburgh and peripheral locations; and at the Brook advisory centre.

More detailed information about individual centres is not held centrally.

Forestry Commission Land

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the Forestry Commission land announced for disposal on 16 June 1989 has so far been disposed of; on how much of this land has public access been protected; and if he will consider retrospective action to reinstate public access to land sold where access was not protected at the time of the sale.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Just over 7,000 hectares of forest land were sold by the Forestry Commission in the period between April 1989 and June 1990; in addition, some 2,900 hectares of other land were sold in that period. These sales were not subject to special conditions relating to public access and retrospective action to impose such conditions would not be practical or appropriate.

The Government are concerned, however, that the general public should continue to enjoy access to those forests to be disposed of by the Forestry Commission in a way which is compatible with their management for forestry and other purposes. We are giving careful consideration to ways of achieving this objective. In the meantime, the commission is deferring the sale of woodlands that are particularly sensitive from the point of view of public access, except in those cases where the sale is to an environmental body under the sponsorship arrangements.

A68-A697 Junction

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking on proposals for the improvement of the junction between the A68 and the A697.

Mr. Rifkind: Borders regional council, as agent authority, has put forward two sets of proposals for improving the safety of the A68-A697 junction. The first, which involves changes to the side road traffic island and the laying of anti-skid surfacing material has been approved for implementation in this financial year. The second proposal, which was recently submitted, is to substantially alter the geometrical layout of the junction. This is a longer-term solution and will be the subject of further discussions between my Department and Borders regional council.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many deaths in Scotland were as a result of assault with (a) a household axe, (b) a kitchen knife, (c) a Stanley knife and (d) a coal hammer in each year since 1980;

(2) how many convictions for grievous bodily harm in Scotland were as a result of assault with (a) a household axe, (b) a kitchen knife, (c) a Stanley knife and (d) a coal hammer in each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of the exact type of weapon used in cases of homicide and serious assault are not collected centrally, with the exception of firearms.

Trunk Road Improvements

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the cost of the trunk road improvements, road by road, since 1979 in Dumfries and Galloway; and the projected expenditure for the next five years, including reconstructing the A74 into a motorway.

Mr. Rifkind: The total expenditure on new construction and improvements on trunk roads in Dumfries and Galloway region for each year from 1 April 1979 is listed in the table.

Year	Expenditure (£ million)
1979-80	1·2
1980-81	1·4
1981-82	4·0
1982-83	7·2
1983-84	5·6
1984-85	8·1
1985-86	11·1
1986-87	8·8
1987-88	17·9
1988-89	19·9
1989-90	24·2

Information from 1979 on individual schemes costing under £1 million is not available. However, the following table lists all major trunk road schemes costing over £1 million completed since May 1979.

Scheme	Expenditure (£ million)
A7 Canonbie Diversion	5·4
A7 Synton to Mossend	1·3
A74 Johnstone Bridge to Dinwoodie Lodge	1·8
A75 Carsluith Diversion	1·5
A75 Collin Diversion	3·8
A75 Gatehouse of Fleet Bypass	9·0
A75 Creetown Bypass	5·2
A75 Bridge of Dee Diversion	2·6
A75 Castle Douglas Bypass	6·2
A75 Ringlord Bypass	2·5
A75 Annan Bypass	17·0
A75 Glenluce Bypass	6·8

The following table gives the estimated expenditure on major schemes costing over £1 million which started prior to April 1990 but are not yet completed.

Scheme	Cost (£ million)
A701 Ae Bridge	1·4
A75 Dumfries Bypass	20·3

Start dates for future schemes currently in preparation are dependent on the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures, the availability of finance and the relative priorities of the individual improvements. It is not therefore practical to determine individual starts and the associated expenditure in detail beyond the year ahead. Starts have been announced for 1990-91 to the £4 million A74 Carrutherstown-Hetland improvement, which is now under construction, and the £35 million upgrading of the A74 between Gretna and Kirkpatrick Fleming, which is due to commence in the near future. In addition schemes for major trunk road improvements in Dumfries and Galloway costing in excess of £250 million are the subject of studies or are being prepared.

NHS Drugs

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the value of national health service drugs administered in Scotland (a) in total and (b) in hospitals in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the year ending 31 March 1990, the cost of drugs in Scotland was:

	£ million
Hospitals	43·96
Community Pharmacists and dispensing doctors	215·42
Total	259·38

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply of 11 July, Official Report, column 233, if he will take steps to ensure that the Greater Glasgow health board writes immediately to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen about the weekly cost per bed it will pay to Takare plc under the contract for care of the elderly in Rutherglen.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my previous answer of 11 July.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he is proposing to make to the community charge arrangements following the review of those arrangements.

Mr. Rifkind: I am proposing to make the following changes:

Community charge relief

(1) with effect from 1 April 1990 the threshold for relief will be reduced from £3 per week to £2 per week.

(2) the scheme will be extended by two years.

(3) relief paid under the scheme to an individual will not reduce until the fourth and fifth years.

Those proposals will take effect from the beginning of the second year of the scheme in Scotland. The lowering of the threshold for relief will give £52 more relief than would otherwise have been the case to each household that qualified for it, provided they have not moved. Pensioners and the disabled who were not former ratepayers and who qualified for extra relief will also receive an increase of £52 of relief. On top of this, postponing the withdrawal of relief will be worth up to £13 in 1990-91 to everybody already entitled to relief in respect of 1989-90. Many couples will be £78 a year better off than they would otherwise have been as a result of these changes. It is estimated also that the number of people benefiting may increase by more than 50 per cent. as a result. The amount of relief paid out is expected to increase by more than this proportion, reflecting the increase in relief that existing recipients of relief will receive as well as relief being paid for the first time to new recipients. The implementation of these changes will be subject to discussion with local authorities before regulations bringing them into effect are made.

My proposals to exempt small bed-and-breakfast establishments from non-domestic rating have been widely welcomed in Scotland: in consultations, there was general agreement that a limit of six bed spaces would be appropriate, and that it would not be desirable also to extend the exemption to establishments available for 100 days or less. Accordingly, I intend to lay regulations very shortly to exempt bed-and-breakfast establishments providing accommodation for no more than six people from non-domestic rates, by prescribing that they shall be treated as domestic property.

A number of specific classes with maximum multipliers have already been prescribed. These include empty manses, properties empty as a result of a person's death, property whose owner is being cared for elsewhere, empty homes belonging to students, and empty property belonging to prisoners. It is my intention now to prescribe additional classes of premises and the maximum multipliers which will apply to them. I will consult with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and with community charge registration officers with regard to the details before making the appropriate regulations. My intention is to make provisions relating to property owned by people who live in tied accommodation, property which has been repossessed by a mortgage lender and, subject to views which are expressed during consultation, property which forms a self-contained part of either the main residence of a charge payer or of a non-domestic property owned by him.

Compulsory Purchase Orders

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many compulsory purchase orders in each of the last four years were subject to public local inquiry from local authorities, broken down by local authority;

(2) how many compulsory purchase orders have been confirmed by his officials, broken down by local authority, in each of the last four financial years;

(3) how many applications for compulsory purchase orders he has received from local authorities broken down by local authority, in each of the last four financial years.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the applications for compulsory purchase orders he received in each of the last four financial years were in respect of (a) unfit houses which were occupied, (b) empty private sector housing properties, (c) empty private sector industrial properties, (d) poor management of privately rented housing properties and (e) poor management of privately rented industrial properties; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1990]: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Respite Care

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will release additional funds to enable greater respite care facilities to be offered within Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 July 1990]: As regards resources for local authorities, I would refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to his question on 3 July 1990. In addition, my right hon. and learned Friend makes financial assistance directly available to voluntary organisations in the social work field. Grants are currently made to Crossroads (Scotland) and a number of other bodies at national level which promote local respite care services. Support for voluntary organisations providing local caring services is seen as essentially the responsibility of local authorities and in some circumstances, health boards.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the number of accesses made to the police national computer by each constabulary over the last year; and what was the proportion of access requests made to the vehicle indexes of the police national computer.

To indices 6, 7, 8 and 9	8,265,989

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the ministerial review of employment services for disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: The results of the review were published on 29 June in a consultative document, "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities". The document sets out our intentions for the development of services in the 1990s, taking forward the themes established in the 1980s of integration into the work force and the active commitment of employers to good practice in creating employment opportunities for people with disabilities. The document has been widely distributed and the period of consultation lasts until 31 December.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to outlaw discrimination against disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities" was published on 29 June. It invites comments on the merits and demerits of various legislative approaches to securing good practice in the employment of people with disabilities. Anti-discrimination legislation is one of the approaches discussed. Decisions on the best way forward will be taken when we have considered the comments that are received.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the consultation paper "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The consultative document was published on 29 June and only a few comments have so far been received. It is too soon to expect interested parties to make considered responses. The consultative period ends on 31 December 1990.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) on what basis he made his estimate of the savings in the cost of administration staff if the Neasden Health and Safety Executive office were to close;

(2) if he will give details of estimates of (a) the number and (b) the cost of extra inspector hours used in travelling if the Neasden Health and Safety Executive office were to close and of the number of inspections forgone.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available as the Health and Safety Executive has no current plans to close the Neasden office.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the number of inspections performed by Health and Safety Executive offices in (a) Neasden, (b) Barking and (c) Southwark.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available in the form requested. The total number of visits made by Health and Safety Executive inspectors operating from the three locations between 1 April 1989 and 31 March 1990 is as follows:

	Number
Neasden	5,235
Barking	3,085
Southwark	10,558

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the policy of the Health and Safety Executive with respect to advertising job vacancies internally in the London region.

Mr. Nicholls: Jobs are filled by seeking the most suitable people in the most economical way, taking account of the requirements of the post, the capacities and career aspirations of available people, and the possibilities of finding suitable candidates by normal postings action or by promotion. In general, posts are advertised where the HSE has difficulty—or expects to have difficulty—in securing sufficient suitable candidates: not as a matter of course.

Hazardous Substances Regulations

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: The responsibility for the implementation of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 rests with industry.

The Health and Safety Executive has committed substantial resources to promoting awareness and understanding of the regulations through the preparation of a wide range of guidance material, national and trade advertising and extensive use of local TV, radio and press. The HSE has worked closely with employers' organisations and others to encourage them to develop guidance for their members. The HSE and local authority inspectors have given advice and, where appropriate, initiated enforcement action during the course of their visits to employers' premises.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it would cost to increase the maximum poll tax rebate from 80 to 100 per cent. for everyone in Scotland receiving the maximum 80 per cent. rebate in 1990-91, assuming that others in receipt of less than the maximum rebate were not affected by this change.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The estimated cost of increasing the maximum community charge benefit from 80 to 100 per cent. of the community charge set by the local authority, only for those already in receipt of maximum benefit, would be about £35 million in Scotland in 1990-91. (Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1985-86-87 Family Expenditure Survey).

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The total number of subject access requests from the Department's records from October 1987 to 13 July 1990 is 1,420. This includes those made of the then DHSS up to July 1988. The original estimate in 1987 of the number of such requests in DHSS was based on a 0·3 per cent. take-up of requests by data subjects, or 210,000 per annum. No subject access fee is charged by the Department.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the new criteria for eligibility for independent living fund grants were drawn up.

Mr. Scott: In order to make effective use of the fund's resources and to enable the fund to respond positively to the majority of new applications, as well as continuing to provide assistance to those already being helped, the fund's trustees have decided to give priority, for the time being, to those applicants between 16 and 74 years of age and who are also in receipt of the higher rate of attendance allowance.

Social Fund

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many, and what percentage, of income support claimants under 60 years of age are repaying social fund loans by deductions from their benefit payments.

Mr. Scott: At June 1990, the latest date for which data are available, 399,421 social fund loans were being recovered from income support recipients under the age of 60, representing 14·4 per cent. of all such recipients.

Single Parents

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to increase the earnings disregard and slacken the earnings taper for single parents in receipt of benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have already announced that the earnings disregard in housing benefit and community charge benefit for lone parents is to be increased in October of this year from £15 to £25 per week. We have no plans to alter the benefit tapers.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals have been lodged against local adjudication officers who have refused claims for attendance allowance in each of the last five years; and what proportion of those appeals have been successful during the same period.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table.

Attendance allowance appeals lodged with and percentage success rates at Social Security appeal tribunals 1985-89

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
Appeals lodged	237	204	163	402	457
Percentage successful	11·8	13·7	19·6	14·4	14·7

Requests for reviews of the decisions on attendance needs are for the Attendance Allowance Board.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines have been issued in the last two years to local officers to determine eligibility for attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The main adjudicating authority for attendance allowance is the attendance allowance board. The board published its handbook for delegated medical practitioners—the doctors who make decisions on its behalf—in 1988. Amendments to the guidance in the handbook are included in the board's published annual reports. A copy of the last report, which was issued in June 1990, has been put in the Library. I understand that a further three amendments to this guidance—dealing with children under two years of age, children with deafness and blindness, and relevant changes in circumstances—are to be issued shortly.

Staff Shortages, Bootle

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for dealing with staff shortages at his Department's Bootle office.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The current staffing level at the Bootle office is 119·5 including nine fixed-term contract staff. This is above the level assessed as necessary to meet the operational needs of the office from 1 August 1990.

State Pension

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Government's intentions on a common state pension age for men and women, in the light of the recent European Court of Justice ruling in the Barber v. Guardian Royal Exchange group case.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Barber judgment dealt with pensions paid under a contracted-out scheme. It distinguished these from benefits awarded under statutory social security schemes. The Government's position on a common state pension age was set out in our response in April to the report of the Select Committee in another place.

Residential Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has of payments of income support to claimants in residential care whose total additional weekly income from retirement pension, attendance allowance and housing or other benefits exceeds the care fees being charged when the weekly personal allowance is taken into account.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no evidence of such payments.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the number of persons in residential care now eligible to claim housing benefit following the widening of the difference between the capital thresholds for eligibility for income support and housing benefit;

(2) what is his estimate of the annual cost to his Department of additional claims for housing benefit from persons in residential care arising from the widening of the difference between the capital thresholds for income support and housing benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This information is not available.

Community Care

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any information about the results of applications for community care grants for furniture and household goods by pregnant women or women with babies who have been homeless but have been allocated accommodation.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available.

Benefit Subsidy

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he intends to make any change to the benefit subsidy arrangements for housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Mr. Scott: We are today consulting the local authority associations on a proposal to change the basic rate of direct benefit subsidy from 97 to 95 per cent. from April 1991, as an improved incentive to economy. This change would affect all community charge benefit and housing benefit expenditure other than rent rebates in England and Wales covered by the housing revenue account arrangements, which are taken into account at 100 per cent. in calculating subsidy.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland are taking the proposed change into account in drawing up their proposed local authority expenditure settlements for the next financial year.

Income Support

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much he estimates it would cost his Department to extend the full rate of income support to cover all adults, including 16 and 17-year-olds.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The estimated cost for income-related benefits would be around £400 million, based on existing benefit rates and youth training allowances. The actual cost would also depend on the number of people on youth training at the time.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1985-86-87 family expenditure surveys.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer given on 21 June, Official Report, column 714, how many people on income support receiving a transitional addition lost entitlement to maximum housing benefit in a similar way in April.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The estimated number of claimants so affected is 7,500. But an estimated 96 per cent. of all those floated off maximum housing benefit, some 187,500, gained or were no worse off.

Dependants

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures for the numbers of children aged 16 to 18 years claimed for as dependants by parents (a) on income support and (b) on family credit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The latest available information is that, at May 1989, the number of dependants aged 16 to 18 years for whom income support was in payment was 109,000. In the families receiving family credit at the end of April 1990 there were 37,000 dependants who were aged 16, 17 and 18 at the time the awards were made.

ENERGY

United Kingdom Continental Shelf Gas

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the level of gas production this year on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Gas production in the first four months of 1990 was some 7,200 million therms. The level of production in the remainder of the year will depend on many factors, in particular the severity of the forthcoming winter.

Methane

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he intends to decide whether to grant a consent under section 12 of the Energy Act 1976 for the discharge of methane into the atmosphere from the St. Fergus gas terminal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Both operators of the St. Fergus gas terminal currently hold valid venting consents for normal operations. No further venting consents are currently needed because gas which must be disposed of as a result of the fitting of emergency shut-down valves and the depressurisation of the main gas line will be flared.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his policy in respect of the granting of consents under section 12 of the Energy Act 1976 for discharges of methane into the atmosphere; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what environmental factors he takes into consideration before granting consents under section 12 of the Energy Act 1976 for discharge of methane into the atmosphere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government are well aware of the adverse environmental impact of methane as a greenhouse gas. However, provision has to be made for venting for safety reasons. My Department scrutinises venting consent applications carefully and no consents are issued until I am satisfied that they are for the minimum amounts necessary for safe and economic operation.

Global Warming

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of global warming, in so far as this relates to emissions from energy sources.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is essential that all nations play their part in reducing emissions of man-made greenhouse gases. As regards carbon dioxide, the Government have announced that the United Kingdom is prepared, provided that other nations do their share, to set itself the target of stabilising emissions at 1990 levels by 2005. The White Paper on the environment to be published in the autumn will spell out the full range of the Government's policies in relation to global warming, including those in the energy sector.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list his responsibilities (a) as Secretary of State and (b) as sole shareholder in British Nuclear Fuels plc in relation to the company's financial and accounting procedures; and if he will make a statement on the exercise of these responsibilities.

Mr. Baldry: British Nuclear Fuels plc and its directors must comply with the requirements of the Companies Acts on financial, accounting and audit procedures. Under the terms of section 14 of the Atomic Energy Act 1971 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for laying copies of BNFL's report and accounts before both Houses of Parliament.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: This information is not collected by my Department.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the details of the proposed capital structure of National Power and PowerGen; what factors he will take into account; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I shall announce the proposed capital structures at flotation of National Power and PowerGen as soon as possible. All relevant factors will be taken into account.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will call for a report from the Director General of Electricity Supply on the operation of the upper limits on direct sales by National Power and PowerGen to electricity consumers above 1MW.

Mr. Baldry: My officials are in regular contact with the Director General of Electricity Supply's office on all aspects of the regulatory regime.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the answer of 2 July to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, Official Report, column 430, (1) what types of competitive process were used to choose those companies chosen competitively; and what was the smallest number of competitors for any one appointment;

(2) how many valuers were chosen on the basis of an already established association with the company concerned.

Mr. Wakeham: Six of the firms of valuers were appointed on the basis of established relationships with the body concerned. The other nine were chosen following a competitive tender process with the number of competitors ranging from six to two depending on the availability of firms with sufficient resources and suitable local experience. The competitive process involved assessment on all the usual criteria, including price. My Department then carried out an exercise to cross-check prices across all the property advisers and negotiated discounts to fee rates where appropriate.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has received any representations from Kleinwort Benson regarding the selection procedure of items of correspondence between that company and his Department concerning the feasibility of privatising nuclear power to be sent to the Energy Select Committee for the purpose of its inquiry into that subject.

Mr. Baldry: Kleinwort Benson was consulted on the papers released to the Committee.

Electricity Distribution Companies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those electricity distribution companies which have lost more than (a) 15 per cent., (b) 20 per cent., (c) 25 per cent. and (d) 30 per cent. of their supply contract load since the first quarter of the current financial year.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the regional electricity companies.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from the chairmen of the 12 regional electricity distribution companies regarding their investment proposals in new electricity generating stations.

Mr. Baldry: Decisions to invest in independent generation projects are matters for the company concerned.

Natural Gas

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the use of natural gas in electricity generation over the next 10 years, and on the breakdown of its use between different sectors of the supply industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The future use of gas in electricity generation is a matter for the industry.

Fossil Fuel Levy

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest estimate for the annual amount raised by the fossil fuel levy.

Mr. Wakeham: I announced on 12 February that I intended to set the levy rate for 1990-91 at 10·6 per cent. The detailed forecasts underlying this calculation are commercially confidential because they depend, inter alia, on forecasts of the electricity pool price. I shall publish the amount of levy collected in respect of 1990-91 after the end of the year.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has recived the 1989-90 report and accounts of the electricity industry successor companies.

Mr. Wakeham: I have today placed copies of the regional electricity companies' and National Grid Company's accounts in the Library. I will place copies of the accounts of National Power plc, PowerGen plc and Nuclear Electric plc when they are available.

British Coal

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has considered the British Coal Corporation's further response to the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the corporation's capital investment programme.

Mr. Wakeham: In May 1989, at columns 455-47, my predecessor informed the House that the British Coal Corporation had provided its initial response to the MMC report on the corporation's investment programme, and that a copy had been placed in the Library of the House. Under the normal arrangements for the follow-up to MMC recommendations arising from section 11 inquiries British Coal has now provided a second response, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. This second response is intended to give an account of the steps taken over the last 12 months to implement the commission's recommendations. It also ensures the continuing relevance of the report by providing a helpful description of the developments in the corporation's business environment since its initial response and setting out fully the organisational changes that British Coal has made in response to those developments.

The commission's report drew attention to the need for British Coal to commit itself to specific, quantified financial objectives—recommendations 1 and 2. In its initial response, the corporation said that it geared its investment programme to the need to fulfil the overall objectives set by the Government. It also pointed out that it would be able to consider what further objectives should be set only when the new coal supply contracts with the generators had been finalised. In informing the House of that initial statement, my predecessor supported the commission's recommendation, but accepted that new medium-term objectives could not sensibly be finalised before the completion of the new coal supply contracts with the electricity supply industry. I share this view, but I have made it clear that following the financial reconstruction provided for in the Coal Industry Act 1990 I expect the corporation at least to break even this financial year and to remain profitable thereafter. We also expect the corporation within the next two years to have made sufficient progress towards self-financing that it can start to reduce the oustanding borrowings remaining after the financial reconstruction. We have therefore told the European Commission that apart from restructuring and social costs it is not our intention to make any financial support available to the corporation in respect of 1990-91 and subsequent years under the terms of the current state aids decision. Once the full implications of the coal contracts have been digested I hope to announce firm and precise targets for the corporation.

The MMC report pointed to the major changes in its business environment facing British Coal, and expressed the view (recommendation 3) that the corporation's board will need to ensure "that the systems and organisation are conducive to systematic and rigorous review of future prospects in British Coal's business environment."

In his statement last year my predecessor emphasised the importance of a fully articulated and co-ordinated business planning system, and indicated that he expected the corporation to set out in detail its response to this. British Coal has separately told me that in its view the business planning system continues to be

"well constructed to meet the requirements of the main planks of British Coal's strategy since the strike"

(MMC report, paragraph 4.75). It appreciates that business planning in the future, given the privatisation of the electricity supply industry, will need to allow for the prediction of and timely response to significant changes in the commercial environment. It considers that flexible response amid uncertainty will need to go together with setting a firm overall direction towards a state of sustained viability. In particular, greater emphasis will be placed on the cash-generating ability of individual collieries. In future, where a colliery has no hope of achieving a positive cash flow it cannot be regarded as having much chance of surviving. I welcome this general approach, and in particular I would expect the level of sales projected beyond the transitional period ahead to be based on those supply sources able to show a positive cash contribution, not on those units which represent a cash drain on the corporation's finances.

I have indicated that its future business strategy needs to be based on a thorough and co-ordinated examination of all aspects of the corporation's operations. It will be particularly important to ensure that specific loss-making sales of coal are identified and addressed, and that new commitments, particularly in the industrial and domestic sectors, are not taken on, unless realisations generate an adequate return. There also needs to be a firm co-ordination of the marketing and financial strategies.

I have asked British Coal to provide a further response to this MMC recommendation in 12 months' time setting out the detailed steps that have been taken to strengthen its business planning.

The MMC report highlighted the need for British Coal to adapt its organisation and systems in the light of developments and changes in its business environment (recommendation 5). British Coal's response reports the progress made in adapting its management organisation since the MMC report was first published. I therefore welcome the changes the corporation has made to the way its production management is organised. This is important not only in terms of cost savings, but in respect of matching British Coal's management structure to the market and business environment in which it has to operate. The corporation is right to draw attention to this in its response, and also to the changes it has made to its industrial relations and staff departments. This should help it to develop a more integrated approach in the key area of employee relations. The changes in the marketing department, too, are welcome evidence that British Coal is making real and significant efforts to adapt its organisational and management structure to meet the challenge of a new market place. In this context, I welcome the corporation's recent decision to end the arrangement whereby each colliery is attributed with a share of the average proceeds nationally. From the beginning of 1990-91 regional groupings of supplying units will be credited with the average proceeds available to that region for coal of the qualities produced, thereby aiding the identification of the profitability of coal flows on a local basis.

Apart from the specific response on business planning which I have asked for next year, British Coal will, under the normal arrangements for the follow-up to MMC recommendations arising from section 11 inquiries, be reporting to me in two years' time on its implementation of the MMC's recommendations. I shall inform the House when these further responses have been made.

Energy and Carbon Dioxide Modelling

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy during the period from December 1989 to May 1990, how many staff in his Department were employed on energy and carbon dioxide modelling; and what assessment he has made as to whether his Department has sufficient internal capability to review the energy and carbon dioxide projections as outlined in energy paper 58 and to carry out approximate additional modelling exercises.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Contributions to work on energy and carbon dioxide modelling are made by several staff involving different fields of expertise, as appropriate. The Department's model is kept under general review. I am confident that the Department has the necessary expertise to do this and carry out any review of energy paper No. 58, as required.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Sitting Times

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what estimates he has made of the costs of keeping the House open for sittings which go beyond 10 pm.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The costs of keeping the House open for sittings which go beyond 10 pm are diverse and many are not at present separately identified. I shall be giving consideration to methods for improving this position.

Members' Remuneration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what changes are proposed to the way in which hon. Members are remunerated.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No changes are proposed to the way in which hon. Members are remunerated.

HEALTH

Maternity Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has funded to assess the safety or the comparative costs of delivery in (a) district general hospitals, (b) general practitioner maternity units and (c) at home; and if he will give the conclusions of each project funded.

Mr. Dorrell: "Place of delivery: a review" by Rona Campbell and Alison Macfarlane; British Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology (1986) volume 93 pages 675-83 a copy of which is available in the Library, is the most recent refereed publication arising from work funded by the Department. Alison Macfarlane is employed by the national perinatal epidemiology unit at Oxford which has conducted considerable work in this field with departmental funding since 1978.

Accident Prevention

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what grants he intends to make available for the purpose of funding regional accident prevention groups and home and water safety councils, in the light of the report by the National Association of Health Authorities on "Action on Accidents: The Unique Role of the Health Service."

Mr. Dorrell: The Department does not make grants for this purpose. Regional and district health authorities may decide, in taking account of local priorities, whether to make funding available to such groups.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given to regional health authorities and district health authorities on accident prevention in the areas of home and water safety.

Mr. Dorrell: No specific advice has been given to health authorities on these issues.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics he requires district and regional health authorities to collect on home and water safety accidents.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of Health does not require health authorities to collect specific statistics in these areas.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce his proposals to clarify the new role of the community health councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State laid regulations on 6 July which amended the Community Health Councils Regulations 1985. The Department will be issuing revised guidance on these and related matters to the health service shortly.

Medway Health District

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the figures for the number of doctors, dentists, nurses and midwives in the South East Thames region, and separately, in the Medway health district, 1979-80, 1982-83 and 1988-89.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The available information is shown in the table. Our census data are collected every year at 30 September. Therefore, figures in the table relate to staff in post at 30 September for the years 1979, 1982 and 1988.

Notes:

[1] Figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole-time equivalent.

[2] Includes permanent paid, honorary and locum staff.

[3] Includes agency staff.

[4] Excludes all Consultants and Senior Registrars whose contracts are held by the Regional Health Authority. There will therefore be more doctors and dentists actually working in Medway DHA than are accounted for.

[5] Due to reorganisation of District Health Authorities in 1982, district data for 1979 are not directly comparable to later years.

[6] Not adjusted for reduction in nurses' working hours during 1980-81 (from 40 to 37·5 hours per week).

Elderly People

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities which have partnership arrangements with the private sector for the care of the elderly and give in each case the company concerned.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally. However, we welcome cost-effective collaboration between the national health service and the independent sector to make services available to all patients including elderly people and expect health authorities to consider appropriate opportunities as part of their regular reviews of performance.

Health Care

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to achieve a reduction in inequalities in access to health care between regions and socio-economic groups.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 26 June at column 165.

Family Planning

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve family planning services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 19 June at column 508 and on 27 June at columns 249-50.

Census

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to the statement made by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health in the debate on the draft census order on 19 December 1989 in the Fourth Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c., whether a decision has been made on the request from the Economic and Social Research Council for output from the 1991 census in the form of samples of anonymous records for people and households.

Mr. Dorrell: Under the authority provided by section 4(2) of the Census Act 1920, the Registrars-General for England and Wales and for Scotland have agreed, in principle, to the Economic and Social Research Council's request to prepare two separate samples of anonymous records from the 1991 census at the cost of the Council. One sample, for people, would consist of extracts from census data about two individuals in every hundred; and the other, for households, would consist of extracts from census data about one household in every hundred. The Registrars-General are confident that these samples would not disclose any information about identifiable individuals.

The samples of anonymous records would complement the information available from the traditional type of tabulated census statistics. They would provide a flexible sample database for statistical research and would also help users assess which extra tables it would be cost effective to commission from the full census database. They would make a significant contribution towards ensuring that the country gains as much benefit as possible from the taxpayers' investment in the census.

Confidentiality would be safeguarded both by not identifying any geographic areas smaller than a large local authority district and by omitting data categories which apply to small groups in the population. Furthermore, there would be some blurring of data so that not all records would represent actual individuals exactly. In addition, the possibility is being investigated of setting up a body of independent experts to advise Ministers on the confidentiality arrangements for the samples of anonymised records.

The Registrars-General's decision follows consultation with the Office of the Data Protection Registrar, which has confirmed that it has no objection in principle to the issue of samples of anonymous records. The Registrars-General are continuing discussions with the Economic and Social Research Council on the detailed arrangements.

Novopen

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to add Novopen pens and needles used by diabetics to the drug tariff list of prescribable appliances.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no present plans to make this equipment available on general practitioner prescription although the matter will be kept under review. We believe that the existing range of disposable and reusable syringe equipment fully meets the needs of most insulin dependent diabetics.

Wakefield Health Authority

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total interest-bearing capital debt for Wakefield health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: Wakefield health authority does not have an interest-bearing debt. In common with all district health authorities, it is required to value its capital assets in order to introduce capital charging from April 1991-92. All directly managed units will include capital charges—equivalent to interest and depreciation—in their revenue costs, and consequently in the prices charged to purchasers of services.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued by his Department to local authorities with regard to the format, content and consistency of their community care plans.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Draft guidance on community care plans was issued by the Department on 15 June. The guidance will be finalised in the light of responses to formal consultation.

Care Villages

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy with regard to the establishment of large-scale care villages accommodating on a residential basis several hundred or more individuals who all require some form of social or nursing care.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no reason in principle why large-scale care villages should not meet the registration requirements of the Registered Homes Act 1984. The decision in individual cases, however, is a matter for the local registration authority.

Cornwall Air Ambulance

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his meeting with hon. Members representing constituencies in Cornwall, if he will now make a statement on the funding of the Cornwall air ambulance.

Mr. Dorrell: Discussions with Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority are continuing. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Youth Treatment Service

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has reached a decision on the future management of the youth treatment service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The findings of a social services inspectorate inspection of the two youth treatment centres managed by the Department of Health were published in May 1989. Copies of the report had been placed in the Library.

A key recommendation was that, while a national service of the kind provided by the YTCs was still needed, their management was not most appropriately placed within the Department, but should be brought more within the framework of mainstream child care. The findings were made available to providers and users of the service and other interests.

Having carefully considered the views expressed on the findings and visited both centres, we concluded that there remains a need for a nationally based YTC service to deal with a small but very difficult group of disturbed young people who cannot be catered for elsewhere in the child care system.

Direct management by the Department is not the most effective way to run the service.

We are assessing the benefits which might be obtained from establishing a "next steps" agency to run this service. A feasibility study on this will be completed by the end of this year.

The study will need to consider how best to involve those in the voluntary and local authority sectors with experience of developments in mainstream child care. The views of local authority, voluntary bodies, YTC staff and other interests will inform the study.

We want the resources deployed in the YTCs to be better used to provide a higher quality and more cost-effective service. This might be achieved by unifying the service at its current level of 70 available places on the Birmingham site. Conclusions will be made public by the end of the year.

Blood Supplies

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give for each region the units of blood supplied to private hospitals for each year since 1979;

(2) how many units were handled by the blood transfusion service in each year since 1979 by regional transfusion service.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 26 June 1990]: The available information is given in the tables. Data giving units of blood supplied to private hospitals were not collected prior to 1982. Figures essentially for years before 1987, are likely to be incomplete because regional transfusion centres were not always informed of issues from hospital blood banks.

TRANSPORT

Railway Inspectorate

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has reached conclusions on the future location of the railway inspectorate.

Mr. Parkinson: I have now completed my consultations with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment and the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission. It has been agreed that an agency agreement should be made with the commission for the discharge of my railway safety functions and for the transfer of the railway inspectorate to the Health and Safety Executive, where its identity would be maintained. These arrangements will come into effect in the autumn.

Bicycles

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what practical steps he has introduced to encourage the use of bicycles as an alternative to cars in urban areas.

Mr. Atkins: Both car use and cycling are matters of personal choice. Cycling remains one of the least safe modes of transport, so our main role must be to help make it safer. People will then feel freer to cycle and will be more prepared to allow their children to do so.

My Department continues to promote safer cycling through the publication of technical advice and guidance based on our research and application studies. We have announced recently changes in the criteria for transport supplementary grant under which local highway authorities will be able to bid for grants for local safety schemes, which can include cycling provision. This is in addition to the cycle elements of major highway and traffic management schemes which will still be eligible for grant.

Car Journeys

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact on traffic speeds in London and other urban areas if the number of car journeys were to decrease by 10 per cent.

Mr. Atkins: Traffic speeds in urban areas are influenced by a number of factors such as road and junction capacity, parked vehicles, signal timings, roadworks, time of day and weather conditions. Other things being equal, a reduction of 10 per cent. in car traffic might lead to an increase in peak-hour speeds of between 5 and 20 per cent.

Northolt Airport

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if, pursuant to his answer of 13 July, Official Report, column 347, he will estimate the implications of increased use of Northolt airport for aircraft noise in the area of the airport and increased road congestion to, from and around the airport; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will meet a deputation of local residents and the hon. Member for Ealing, North to discuss the future of Northolt airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have no proposals to increase the use of Northolt by civil aircraft, so estimates of possible effects would be speculative. A civil enclave is a separate issue. I am, of course, always willing to meet my hon. Friend.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the annual expenditure of his Department on public local inquiries in each of the last 10 years, indicating the date, the cost and the duration of each inquiry.

Mr. Atkins: In 1989, the last full year for which information is available, 30 inquiries into trunk road schemes were held. Details available are as follows:

A41 Chester improvement	17 January	2

Accurate costs to the Department of these inquiries, including consultants' fees and costs, are not identified separately from total scheme preparation cost. Costs of the elements such as inspectors' costs, which can be identified, and details of previous years' inquiries could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

River Thames (Accident Procedure)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the emergency accident procedure known as POLACAP was immediately put into effect on the night of 20 August 1989 after the collision of the Bowbelle and the Marchioness on the River Thames.

Mr. McLoughlin: The conduct of emergency procedures following the accident was examined in the investigation carried out by the marine accident investigation branch, and will be covered in the chief inspector's report when it is published.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the emergency exercises carried out under the Port of London authority combined accident procedure in recent years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The emergency exercises carried out under the Port of London authority combined accident procedure in recent years were:

June 1986—PLAFIRE
October 1987—PLAFIRE
May 1988—NEPTUNE

Marine Craft

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many Government inspectors there have been, in each of the last 10 years, inspecting (a) pleasure craft and (b) non-pleasure craft for seaworthiness.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of Department of Transport surveyors in marine offices available to carry out such inspections in each of the last 10 years was as follows:

Date	Number
1 April 1981	168
1 April 1982	165
1 April 1983	171
1 April 1984	172
1 April 1985	157
1 April 1986	146
1 April 1987	138
1 April 1988	127
1 April 1989	122
1 April 1990	122

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) pleasure craft and (b) non-pleasure craft using the River Thames have had their seaworthy licences withdrawn in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Some 135 passenger vessels operating on the River Thames are required to be periodically surveyed and certificated by the Department of Transport to ensure compliance with relevant safety provisions. Any serious deficiencies detected during random inspections must be corrected before the vessel is allowed to operate. In the past 12 months four vessels have had their certificates temporarily invalidated.

Larger non-passenger vessels are also subject to periodic survey and certification as well as random inspections. It is normal practice to detain a vessel found to have serious deficiencies until they are corrected rather than withdraw certificates. In the past 12 months four vessels were detained.

Detailed information for earlier years is not readily available.

Airline Regulations

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the international regulations that govern the actions of police on a national airline or in national airspace.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Tokyo convention of 14 September 1963 sets out the powers of the commander of an aircraft to protect the safety of the aircraft and its passengers and to maintain order on board, whilst the aircraft is in flight. It is a matter for the commander, and the law of the aircraft's state of registry, to regulate the use of the police for this purpose.

Investment

Sir William Shelton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, year by year from 1974 to the present, with estimates for the next five years, the total investment by central Government in roads and London Underground in the Greater London area, and roads and British Rail countrywide.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible to provide all the figures requested. No planning figures have been agreed for the period after 1992-93 and allocations for investment in roads in London are made only one year ahead. It would be possible to identify the total investment by central Government in roads in Greater London before 1982-83 only at disproportionate cost.

[1] Central Government expenditure on new construction and the improvement of motorways and trunk roads in Greater London. Includes costs of works, land and design supervision but excludes maintenance expenditure.

[2] Funds for investment in London Underground Limited are allocated by London Transport (LT). Prior to 1984-85, the Greater London Council were responsible for funding LT. Figures up to and including 1983 are for calendar years. Expenditure on Jubilee Extension and Dockland Light Railway is included.

[3] Gross capital spend by central Government on national roads in England only.

Includes investment in BR Engineering Ltd., BR Maintenance Ltd., Freightliner, Road Transport Organisation and BR Property Board but excludes expenditure on continuously welded rail which is now classified as maintenance. Figures up to and including 1983 are for calendar years. The figure for 1984-85 covers a 15-month period; the 12-month equivalent was £323 million.

Merchant Ships

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the increase in United Kingdom merchant shipping tonnage for 1989.

Mr. McLoughlin: There was no increase.

Unroadworthy Vehicles

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many deaths and serious injuries each year can be attributed to the use of unroadworthy vehicles.

Mr. Atkins: The police complete a standard accident report form called STATS19 for each personal injury accident that occurs on public roads. The information requested is not recorded on the STATS19 accident report form and is therefore not available.

Road Safety

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the number of (i) deaths, (ii) serious injuries and (iii) slight injuries relating to passengers on (a) stage carriage services and (b) other bus and coach services which occurred in the last three years for which figures are available, expressed in terms of number per million passenger miles.

Mr. Atkins: The police complete a standard accident report form called STATS19 for each personal injury accident that occurs on public roads. The information requested—subdividing buses and coaches into stage carriage services and others—is not recorded on the STATS19 accident report form and is, therefore, not available.

Casualty rates for all public service vehicles, whether or not in stage operation, are given in table 26 in "Road Accidents Great Britain", a copy of which is in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Colin Wallace

13. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he has sent to the letters about Kincora which he has recently received from Colin Wallace.

Mr. Cope: The letters will be replied to shortly.

Investment

14. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on inward investment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Northern Ireland has achieved its best-ever year for inward investment since the Industrial Development Board was formed in 1982. A total of 14 projects were secured promoting almost 2,000 new jobs.

38. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of inward investment in the Londonderry area and the jobs created.

Mr. Needham: Of the 14 new inward investment projects secured by the Industrial Development Board in 1989-90, three have chosen to locate in Londonderry, promoting 620 new jobs.

43. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current levels of private sector investment in Belfast.

Mr. Needham: I am pleased to report that private investment in Belfast has increased dramatically in recent years. In the city centre alone, major projects completed in the past five years, under way or programmed total £573 million. In addition, during the past five years the Industrial Development Board has backed industrial projects with a total planned investment of £177 million.

Government

15. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for the better government of the Province.

Mr. Brooke: The Government would consider any proposals likely to prove stable and durable which would command widespread support and provide an appropriate role for both sides of the community.

Local Government

16. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to introduce local government structures and responsibilities in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: Local government structures and responsibilities already exist in Northern Ireland. The Government would give serious consideration to any workable proposals for more local involvement in the government of Northern Ireland, if they seemed likely to command widespread acceptance. However, in their talks with us, the Northern Ireland parties have indicated their support for the establishment of a form of locally accountable administration for Northern Ireland as a whole.

Legislation (Amendment)

17. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to extend to Northern Ireland legislation the same provisions in respect of amendment as exist for Great Britain and United Kingdom legislation.

Mr. Brooke: If the right hon. Gentleman has any proposals, he knows that I should be happy to discuss them with him.

UK-Irish Relations

18. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he expects to discuss United Kingdom-Irish relations at his next meeting with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: At my next meeting under the Anglo-Irish Agreement with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland, I expect to discuss the range of issues which normally arises at such meetings, just as I did on 17 July.

Labour Statistics

19. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current levels of employment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At March 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, there were an estimated 524,840 employees in employment. This is the highest figure for March since 1980.

32. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At 14 June 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 95,055 unemployed claimants in the Province, representing 13·6 per cent. of the work force. Seasonally adjusted unemployment has fallen for 17 consecutive months and is at its lowest level for over eight years.

Blood Transfusion Service

20. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his plans for the development of the blood transfusion service.

Mr. Needham: Final approval has now been given to a new £7·7 million blood transfusion centre on the Belfast city hospital site. Construction of the new centre, which will be purpose built and will provide the most modern and up-to-date facilities, is expected to start early in 1992 and should be completed within two years.

Multiple-handicap Young People

21. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision is being made in Northern Ireland for the education of children and young people with visual and audio multiple handicap.

Dr. Mawhinney: At the pre-school stage, support from the education sector can take the form of assistance to parents at home by teachers from special schools or from the peripatetic teaching service, or by attendance of the child at a nursery school or unit. Toy and book libraries are also available.

Provision for children of compulsory school age is made at primary or secondary schools or in special units attached to such schools, or in special schools. In addition, a support service based in the Jordanstown school advises schools in the field of visual impairment and this is supplemented by the board's peripatetic service which provides a support and counselling service for children with hearing difficulties.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

22. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

34. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to amend the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

25. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement concerning the discussions to find an agreement for transcending the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the trilateral talks to find an agreement to transcend the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the talks he is holding with various political parties in Northern Ireland and the Eire Government.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Members and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay).

40. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next hopes to meet the Foreign Secretary of Ireland to discuss the workings of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

45. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next expects to meet the Foreign Secretary of the Republic of Ireland to discuss the workings of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: I expect to meet the Irish Minister of Foreign Affairs at the next meeting of the intergovernmental conference which is likely to take place within the next few weeks. We are likely to discuss the normal range of issues falling under the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Security

23. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

41. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member and the right hon. Member to the answer which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton).

General Practitioners' Lists

24. Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals the Government are considering to give patients the right of appeal when removed from general practitioners' lists.

Mr. Needham: None.

Integrated Education

26. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the development of integrated education.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since the coming into effect last February of the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989, a number of schools have approached the Department of Education for advice about integrated status.

The Department of Education has received proposals for the establishment of two new grant-maintained integrated schools and three existing independent integrated schools are also seeking that status. In addition, seven existing grant-aided schools have begun the procedures to achieve either grant-maintained or controlled integrated status.

Devolution

27. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding the devolution of powers to the Province from Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have been engaged in discussions since January with the main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland. These discussions have, in part, considered how progress might be made towards a transfer of powers from Westminster to locally elected representatives. I have also received, from time to time, representations from various organisations and individual members of the public.

"Making Belfast Work"

28. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress being made under his Department's "Making Belfast Work" initiative; and what resources have so far been committed to it.

Mr. Needham: The "Making Belfast Work" initiative was launched in July 1988 to reinforce, through specifically targeted programmes, the efforts being made to address the economic, educational, social and environmental problems in the most disadvantaged areas of Belfast. The initiative is delivered under a strategy published in January 1989, which is designed to address problems of unemployment, lack of skills, low educational achievement, poor health and a bad environment.

More than 100 separate projects—large and small—were operational during 1989-90; of these, more than 80 are being continued or expanded in the current financial year in addition to 40 new projects which have been introduced. There are encouraging signs of progress; for example in 1989-90 LEDU, the Local Enterprise Development Unit—Northern Ireland's small business development agency—promoted 1,100 jobs in the "Making Belfast Work" areas, a trebling of its performance prior to the initiative; almost 3,000 people were placed in jobs or training by eight local job clubs and new job markets in the Falls and Shankill areas; the Whiterock further education centre had around 2,000 people enrolled on 80 different courses; almost 1,000 people undertook open learning training; and there were significant improvements in immunisation uptake rates, particularly in north and west Belfast. Particularly encouraging is the fact that during 1989-90 unemployment fell in virtually every ward in the initiative area, and the recently announced Springvale project is an exciting opportunity for a major economic regeneration initiative in the heart of north and west Belfast.

A total of £92·5 million has been provided for the initiative for the period 1988-89 to 1992-93, of which £10 million was spent in 1988-89, £15 million in 1989-90 and for which £22·5 million is available in each of the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93. This is in addition to the extensive resources already allocated to Departments' mainstream programmes in the "Making Belfast Work" areas.

Maintaining and accelerating the progress achieved to date requires a comprehensive and sustained effort involving the Government, the private sector and the local community.

Kilroot Phase II

29. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further progress has been made towards a final decision on the future of Kilroot phase II.

Mr. Needham: Work is continuing on the comparison between Kilroot phase II and interconnection with Scotland. I hope to be able to announce my conclusions within the next few months.

Conservation

30. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on conservation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since replying to the hon. Gentleman on 1 March 1990, at columns 307-8 with a detailed statement on conservation of the environment in Northern Ireland, there have been some further developments.

Two new areas of special scientific interest, Moninea bog and Fairy Water bogs, have been declared bringing the number of ASSIs to 26. A further 73 historic buildings have been listed bringing the total to 7,685.

The Department of the Environment's planning service has been considering a report by Professor John Hendry of Queen's university who has proposed that the Department should consider designating a further 28 conservation areas in addition to the 26 already designated and the eight proposed in the Belfast urban plan. Two of the 36 proposed conservation areas—Ballycastle and the cathedral area in Belfast—were designated in June.

On 9 July 1990 the Department of Agriculture issued its document "Countryside Management" which outlines its strategy on conservation. I shall arrange for a copy to be sent to the hon. Gentleman. We look forward to receiving the report from the Select Committee on the Environment and to the first report for the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside.

The size of the directorate in the Department of the Environment is to be doubled.

Human Rights

31. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will publish his considered reply to the second report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 26 June at columns 154-55. We intend awaiting comments on the report (Cm. 1107) from any interested persons or organisations prior to coming to any conclusions.

Cross-border Security

33. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cross-border security co-operation between the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic.

Mr. Cope: Measures to improve security co-operation are regularly discussed at Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference meetings, most recently on 17 July. In addition, regular meetings take place at all levels between members of the RUC and the Garda Siochana. Progress has been made, but further improvement is possible and the Government are committed to securing it.

County Towns

35. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for the regeneration of the county towns of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dudley, West (Dr. Blackburn) on 1 February 1990 at column 337. Since then the International Fund for Ireland—IFI—has made available up to £3 million this year for a third urban development programme and has announced a new programe focused on smaller towns—those with fewer than 10,000 inhabitants. Both these programmes are administered by the Department of the Environment's planning service on behalf of the IFI.

The Department of the Environment has consultants working on regeneration strategies in Downpatrick and the Craigavon area and regeneration partnership arrangements with district councils in Armagh and Carrickfergus.

Anglo-Irish Conference

36. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference will be held.

Mr. Brooke: The next meeting is likely to be held within the next few weeks.

Community Relations

37. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to meet representatives of the Community Relations Council to discuss improved links between Catholic and Protestant communities.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Northern Ireland Community Relations Council was established in January 1990. The council has already established a wide range of contacts with groups working to promote reconciliation, greater cross-community contact and awareness and understanding of cultural diversity in Northern Ireland. The council has also launched a number of funding programmes designed to support the work of these groups. I have not yet had the opportunity to meet the council, but I hope to do so later in the year.

39. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many schools are taking part in the cross-community contact scheme.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since the introduction of the cross-community contact scheme in October 1987, more than 400 schools—about one third of all schools in Northern Ireland—have become involved.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

42. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last discussed the case of those found guilty of the Birmingham pub bombings with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Cope: This is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and is not within the ambit of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, but the matter was referred to during a meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 30 November 1989.

Youth Training

44. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what level the youth training programme allowance would need to be increased to bring it to the same value as on its introduction, measured by (a) the rise in prices, and (b) the rise in average earnings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The weekly training allowance was first paid to young people in the youth opportunities programme (YOP) in April 1978 and was £19·50. The equivalent value of the youth training programme allowance if adjusted for changes in the retail prices index would be £49·50 and if adjusted for changes in the index of average earnings it would be £63·48.

The youth training programme (YTP) especially since the introduction from 1 April 1990 of the new arrangements for delivery and funding, incorporates substantially higher quality training than YOP. It is, therefore, misleading to compare the values of the YOP and YTP training allowances, which reflect the fact that trainees are still learning.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what value-for-money and cost-effectiveness evaluations the Royal Ulster Constabulary performs on its own services.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Chief Constable's strategy statement 1990 in which he sets out the RUC's principal objectives for the current year. The RUC has developed and continues to develop a range of methods of judging the extent to which those objectives are being achieved.

Heart Disease

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the incidence of heart disease in Northern Ireland in 1990, 1989, 1988 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Mortality rates for the four most recent years for which figures are available are given in the following table. Morbidity incidence figures are not available.

Age standardised death rates from ischaemic heart disease per 100,000 population aged 40–69 years

Year	Male	Female
1986	557	169
1987	497	155
1989	461	155

It is encouraging to note that deaths from heart disease are on a definite downward trend having fallen by around 25 per cent. over the last 10 years. The Government's "Change of Heart" coronary prevention programme, launched in October 1986, aims to ensure that the reduction in mortality continues over the next decade.

Road Deaths

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were accidentally killed on the roads in Northern Ireland last year; and what was the average number for the previous five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: One hundred and eighty-one people were killed on the roads in Northern Ireland in 1989. The average during the previous five years was 199. In 1986, 236 died.

A programme was launched on 31 October to achieve the following targets:

to reduce by one third within 12 months commencing 1 November the average annual fatality rate of 210 over the last three years; and to reduce by one third serious road casualties—killed and seriously injured—by the end of the century.

The preliminary total of deaths from 1 November 1989 to 30 June 1990 shows a 13 per cent. decrease over the same period last year. This statistic may change.

Reduced levels of drink driving are likely to be contributing to reduced levels of death.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by how much the number of road deaths has fallen since the launch of the road casualty reduction campaign.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The fall has been 18 per cent. Since the campaign was launched on 1 November 1989, road deaths have fallen to 114 compared with 139 for the same period last year. The number is provisional.

I am grateful that the media in Northern Ireland have been treating road deaths as events that generally have avoidable causes. It is particularly noticeable that the main categories—adults as passengers, pedestrians and drivers —have fallen from 117 to 84, a drop of 28 per cent.

School Governors

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration is being given to offering recompense to members of new boards of governors in the form of attendance allowance in respect of their increase of responsibility and work load under local management of schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans to change present arrangements.

Education Achievement

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will initiate an inquiry into the levels of achievement for Northern Ireland schoolchildren in A-level and general certificate of secondary education results relative to comparable children in England, Scotland and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The qualifications of Northern Ireland school leavers compare favourably with those in England and Wales; comparison with Scotland is not appropriate because of different examination arrangements. The most recent comparable statistics show 26 per cent. of Northern Ireland leavers with one or more A-levels compared to 18·7 per cent. in England and 17·9 per cent. in Wales. The figures also show that some 16·4 per cent. of Northern Ireland school leavers obtained no recognised qualifications compared to 9·6 per cent. in England and 17·5 per cent. in Wales. However, there has been an encouraging reduction in the number of unqualified leavers in Northern Ireland in recent years and the Government believe that the education reforms will accelerate this trend.

NHS Drugs

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the value of national health service drugs administered in Northern Ireland (a) in total and (b) in hospitals in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The total expenditure on drugs in Northern Ireland for the latest financial year available, 1988-89, was £78·21 million, of which £9·96 million was hospital expenditure.

Dog Fighting

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the incidence of organised dog fighting in Northern Ireland; and whether any prosecutions have been brought for this activity in the last four years.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 27 June 1990]: I am advised by the Chief Constable that information held centrally does not distinguish dog fighting from other offences of cruelty to animals.

Terrorism

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for each of the present council areas in Northern Ireland the number of deaths from terrorist action since these council areas came into existence until the latest available date, or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 3 July 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Courts and Legal Services

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will outline his proposed course of action following the publication of the Green Paper on the courts and legal services in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The future framework for legal services in Northern Ireland is presently being considered in consultation with my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor. I expect that a policy paper for Northern Ireland will be published in the autumn.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the responsibilities of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in respect of discharge of radioactive waste to the public sewers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution regulates the disposal of all radioactive waste, including discharges to the public sewerage system, by means of authorisations issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 (RSA 60). These authorisations impose strict conditions and activity limits, set at levels which ensure proper protection from such disposals for members of the public, sewerage workers and the environment. In all cases, proper and detailed records must be maintained by disposers. These records and the premises concerned are subject to scrutiny by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution inspectors under powers contained in section 12 of RSA 60, to ensure compliance with the terms of certificates of authorisation issued.

Landfill

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra resources he will make available to ensure full monitoring and necessary remedial work to all landfill sites where there is a risk of leachate and ground water pollution.

Mr. Trippier: Under the licensing provisions of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 waste disposal authorities already have responsibilities, in consultation with water authorities, now the National Rivers Authority, to ensure that no water pollution is likely to arise from the disposal of waste to land. The costs of meeting any monitoring and remedial works have to be borne within the budgets for operating licensed sites and for the enforcement of statutory responsibilities. No extra resources would appear to be necessary.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation in line with the proposals of the European Community draft directive on landfill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A draft directive is still in preparation by the Commission, with the aid of expert working groups on which the United Kingdom is represented, but is unlikely to be available until the end of the year for further consideration and negotiation. It is, therefore, too early to say what legislative implications it might have. However, the Commission appears to be basing its proposals upon systems of site licensing to high operational standards, therefore meeting the objectives of the Environmental Protection Bill.

Nature Conservancy Council

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those statutory functions currently carried out by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Trippier: The statutory functions of the Nature Conservancy Council were set out in section 1, together with schedule 1, of the Nature Conservancy Council Act 1973.

Since 1973, the following Acts have conferred additional functions on the council: Import of Live Fish (Scotland) Act 1978, Highways Act 1980, Animal Health Act 1981, Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, Inheritance Tax Act 1984, Roads (Scotland) Act 1984, Agriculture Act 1986, Channel Tunnel Act 1987, Norfolk and Suffolk Broads Act 1988, Electricity Act 1989, and the Water Act 1989.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff are currently employed by the Nature Conservancy Council on (a) permanent contracts and (b) temporary contracts.

Mr. Trippier: On 1 July this year, the Nature Conservancy Council employed 766 full-time staff and 87 part-time staff on permanent contracts, and 449 full-time and 42 part-time staff on temporary contracts.

Methane

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that all waste tips are monitored to identify those which are at risk from methane release; what resources he will make available for this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: In 1988-89 Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, together with waste disposal authorities, undertook surveys of landfill sites to determine those with the potential to generate landfill gas. It is intended that the results of these surveys will be published in due course.

A capital allocation of £33 million has been earmarked during 1990-91 for local authorities undertaking landfill gas remedial work on closed sites. Similar resources will be made available in future years.

Gas controls should be installed in current landfill sites within normal operational budgets in line with the recommendations of waste management paper 27 and no additional resources need to be made available.

Crassula

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action he has taken concerning the sale of crassula from aquarium shops;

(2) what advice he has received from the Nature Conservancy Council concerning the sale of crassula as a pond and aquarium oxygenator.

Mr. Trippier: I have received no information or advice from the Nature Conservancy Council on the use of crassula in aquaria and I have taken no action regarding its sale in aquarium shops.

Antarctica

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, 23 May, columns 187-88, what steps he takes to ensure environmental factors are given full weight in respect of the Antarctic environment.

Mr. Trippier: The Department's officials have regular discussions on the protection of the Antarctic environment with officials at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office which has overall responsibility for the Government's policy on the Antarctic.

Drinking Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those public supplies identified by the drinking water inspectorate where levels of tetrachloroethylene and trichloroethylene exceed the World Health Organisation standards for these substances; and where undertakings under section 20 of the Water Act 1989 have been given.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to his earlier question, Official Report, 5 July 1990, Vol. 175, column 646.

Undertakings have been given by water companies as follows under section 20 of the Water Act 1989 to take steps to secure or facilitate compliance with the standards for tetrachloroethylene and trichloroethylene:

Water supply zones	Date by which steps to be completed
Lee Valley Water Company
Luton Park Town	31 March 1990
Luton Stopsley
Luton Chaul End
Mid Southern Water Company
Maidenhead No. 1	31 December 1990
Maidenhead No. 2
South Staffordshire Water Company
Sutton Boreholes: City
Brownhills
Central	Three phases: December 1990 December 1992 Deember 1994
Barr Beacon: Aldridge
Pheasey

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish his Department's report into radioactive contamination of London drinking water.

Mr. Trippier: The research work commissioned by my Department on iodine 125 and being carried out by St. Bartholomew's hospital medical college will not be completed until March 1991. A first draft report was received this month and is currently being reviewed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The report will be published in due course and copies will be placed in the Library.

Inspectorate of Pollution

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the director of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to discuss staff recruitment.

Mr. Trippier: I meet the director of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution regularly and discuss all aspects of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's business including staffing and recruitment. There are currently 215 staff in post in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution compared with 148 when Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution was established in April 1987 and 193 a year ago. The staff complement has recently been increased further to 250. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has 35 vacancies in the increased complement, of which 26 are for professional staff. Eight of the professional vacancies are reserved for successful candidates from the current recruitment competition. We are continuing to recruit actively to fill the remaining posts.

Dogs

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to introduce new controls on dogs.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Our consultation paper "Action on Dogs", issued in August 1989, put forward two main proposals: transferring the duty for dealing with strays from the police to local authorities and clarifying enforcement of the existing collar and identification tag requirement. We recently issued, together with the Home Office and the Welsh and Scottish Offices, a consultation paper entitled "The Control of Dogs". Following discussions with the joint advisory committee on pets in society about how the package of measures outlined in "Action on Dogs" could be strengthened, the new paper considers two ideas in particular: first, that there should be a specific offence of allowing a dog persistently to stray, and secondly, that there should be a fixed penalty scheme for the enforcement of the collar and tag provisions. We intend to legislate at a convenient opportunity.

Empty Properties

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has developed any new proposals for the utilisation of suitable Government-owned empty properties for homeless families.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government's policy is to sell surplus properties wherever possible. Where disposal is not practicable, Government Departments are encouraged to let their empty properties to local authorities and housing associations to assist them in relieving local housing pressures. The Department of Transport has recently contracted out the management of the majority of its domestic dwellings to housing associations, and the Ministry of Defence has so far leased 650 homes to local authorities.

Leisure Centres

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications he has received from boroughs with loss-making leisure centres, built with European Community grants, to be released from restrictive conditions so they may be privatised.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is not aware of any formal applications from local authorities to be released from the conditions placed on European regional development fund grants by the European Commission which relate to the disposal of publicly owned leisure centres to the private sector.

Nitrates

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the practicality of reducing nitrate content in water through the creation of new wetlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am aware that studies carried out in other countries have shown encouraging results. This is an interesting proposal and I will keep developments under review.

Groundwater Contamination

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake a full national survey to identify aquifers most at risk from groundwater contamination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As part of its statutory duties to protect water resources and control pollution the National Rivers Authority is already undertaking national surveys of groundwater contamination and establishing a uniform national network of monitoring sites. It is also developing a national groundwater protection policy which will include a classification of aquifers according to vulnerability from pollution.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the financial benefits of compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have no comprehensive information about the financial results of compulsory competitive tendering for local authority services. However, findings published by the Audit Commission and other bodies point clearly to the possibility of achieving substantial savings in the cost of providing services, which may be as high as 20 per cent.

Housebuilding Costs

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the average price, excluding the value of land, of building (a) a two-storey house with three bedrooms, reception room, bathroom, toilet, kitchen, with external dimensions 21 ft by 22 ft, or the nearest equivalent for which he has information and (b) a terraced house block comprising five such houses.

Mr. Chope: Estimates, based on tenders accepted by local authorities, indicate that in England the current average cost of building a two-storey three-bedroomed house with external dimensions of 21 ft by 22 ft, excluding the value of land but including external works and professional fees, is approximately £43,000. The cost of a terrace of five such houses is approximately £215,000.

National Rivers Authority

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the recreation duties of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Section 8 of the Water Act 1989 imposes upon the National Rivers Authority a duty to make available for recreation the waters and associated lands to which it has rights. This section also places upon the National Rivers Authority a duty to promote the use of other inland and coastal waters and land associated with such waters for recreational purposes.

In carrying out these duties I understand that the National Rivers Authority seeks advice from the statutory regional rivers advisory committee.

Footpaths and Bridleways

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that authorities adequately carry out their duties with regard to signposting footpaths and bridleways.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department recently carried out a survey among authorities to establish the extent of signposting of footpaths and bridleways; the results have been made available to highway authorities through the County Surveyors Society and the rights of way review committee. It is for the authorities to take action as appropriate in the light of these findings, within the context of the formulation of their rights of way strategies.

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what lengths of footpaths and bridleways now exist in England and Wales.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Precise figures are not available: however, a recent sample survey by the Countryside Commission suggests the total length of rights of way in England and Wales to be about 140,000 miles. Of this, footpaths make up 106,000 miles and bridleways 28,000 miles.

Forestry Commission Land

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the introduction of a mechanism to protect access to Forestry Commission land which is to be disposed of.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 18 June, Official Report, column 450, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland.

Water Gathering Grounds (Public Access)

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the National Rivers Authority has any duty to protect public access to water gathering grounds owned by water undertakers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Water Act 1989 imposes on the water undertakers a duty to have regard to the desirability of preserving public freedom of access to areas of natural beauty and to sites of architectural or historic interest on their lands. This duty also applies to the National Rivers Authority in respect of its own lands. The NRA is also under a duty generally to promote recreational use of inland and coastal waters and associated land.

The code of practice issued by the Government under section 10 of the Water Act gives practical guidance to the National Rivers Authority and the water undertakers on the performance of their environmental and recreational duties.

Rights of Way

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it is a requirement of the countryside premium scheme that rights of way must be kept clear and in good order; and if he will include in the countryside premium scheme a management guidelines requirement that rights of way must be kept clear at all times.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Landowners and the local highway authorities are statutorily required to keep all rights of way clear and in good order. The countryside premium scheme, operating in seven eastern counties of England, enhances public access to the countryside and does not override any statutory provisions. It is implict in the general rules and conditions of the scheme that farmers should fulfil their statutory obligations in respect of existing rights of way and, under the guidelines for the meadowland option, there is a specific requirement for landowners to keep open and available for use at all times any footpaths, bridleways or byways on land entered into the scheme. The Countryside Commission keeps the guidelines for the scheme under review.

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that rights of way across countryside premium scheme land are in good order; and what steps have been taken where rights of way are found not to be in good order.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The duty to protect and assert the public's right of passage and to prevent the stopping up or obstruction of highways is placed with the highway authority under the Highways Act 1980. I am not aware of any problems with rights of way on countryside premium land. However, if such problems came to the attention of the Countryside Commission project officers who are responsible for administering the scheme, they would ask the landowner to take remedial action. Landowners failing to meet their obligations may prejudice payments under the scheme. They may also be prosecuted in certain circumstances by the highway authority or any other person.

Leaseholds

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many leaseholders have enfranchised their lease under the Leasehold Reform Act 1967.

Mr. Chope: This information is not held centrally.

Car Pollution

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of car-induced air pollution in urban areas and the estimated impact if the number of car journeys were (a) reduced and (b) increased by 10 per cent.

Mr. Trippier: Cars are responsible for about 81 per cent. of national emissions of carbon monoxide, 23 per cent. of national emissions of oxides of nitrogen and 28 per cent. of national emissions of volatile organic hydrocarbons. Estimates for central London suggest that petrol-driven vehicles contributed 46 per cent. to annual mean concentrations of oxides of nitrogen. However, emissions depend not only on the number of car journeys, but on road speed and traffic congestion. It is not presently possible to make precise estimates of the impact of a change in driving habits on urban air quality.

Sewage Sludge

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to introduce legislation to prevent the dumping of sewage sludge at sea which is contaminated by toxic pollutants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. Control of dumping of waste at sea is already exercised by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in accordance with powers available in the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Local Government Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling of 28 June, Official Report, columns 312-13, if he will state the relevant sections of the primary or secondary legislation under which exemption from the community charge is given to those aged 18 years who have left secondary education and in respect of whom child benefit is continuing to be paid.

Mr. Portillo: Paragraph 5 of schedule 1 to the Local Government Finance Act 1988, as amended by paragraph 10 of schedule 5 to the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Sewage Discharges

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to introduce legislation to require nutrient removal pollution controls at sewage works discharging to the sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Sufficient powers to require nutrient removal at sewage treatment works where necessary are already available under the Water Act 1989. It is for the National Rivers Authority to decide when to impose such conditions.

Atmospheric Conditions (Monitoring)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 1 May, Official Report, columns 502-3, if he will give the county or region in Scotland of each monitoring site; and if he will give grid references for those rain acidity monitoring sites whose grid references are not contained in the second report of the United Kingdom review group on acid rain 1987.

Mr. Trippier: The information for the current acid rain monitoring network is as follows:

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will bring forward funds already committed in order to develop sheltered housing schemes.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Small Shops

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the average change and (b) the aggregate change in rate bills for small shops in 1990-91 as against 1989-90.

Mr. Chris Patten: While there is considerable variation in the charges for individual shops, the average rate bill for small shops in England has fallen as a result of the introduction of the uniform business rate and of the non-domestic revaluation: including the effect of the transitional arrangements, there has been a 2 per cent. reduction in real terms compared with 1989-90. The aggregate rate bill of such shops has fallen by £10 million in real terms. This is partly because the uniform business rate has kept the total increase in business rates well below the increase in local authority spending this year. For this purpose small shops are those with rateable values of £500 or more and less than £15,000 in London and £10,000 elsewhere—the definition used in the business rate transitional arrangements.

Empty Council Properties

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to enable local councils to bring the council properties now lying empty to habitable standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 18 July 1990]: The Government have made clear to local authorities the need to make efficient use of their housing stock, including giving a high priority to using their capital resources to bring empty properties back into use. The new housing revenue account subsidy encourages authorities to reduce the number of their empty properties. Inefficient authorities reduce their entitlement to HRA subsidy.

In addition to their normal housing investment programme allocations local authorities in London and the south-east will this year have an additional £42 million to repair and rehabilitate their empty housing as part of our initiative to help tackle homelessness. This should create up to 2,500 new lettings.

Industrial Pollution Inspectorate (Report)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the industrial pollution inspectorate will produce its annual report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

A report covering the work of Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate for Scotland for the period January 1987 to March 1988 is presently being printed and will be published within the next few weeks. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what tonnage of polychlorinated biphenyls was imported into Newport by sea in the past three years.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 6 July 1990]: I have been asked to reply.

The information sought is available only since the introduction of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988.

Records of shipments under the regulations show that 479 tonnes of PCB contaminated materials were imported via Newport for disposal in the year 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Road Accidents

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deaths and injuries due to road accidents there have been in Northern Ireland since 1969.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures are 5,421 and 171,998 respectively to the end of 1989. The detail was as follows:

Year	Killed	Injured
1969	257	7,124

1988	178	10,789
1989	181	11,430
Total	5,421	171,998

Security Forces

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the RUC and RUC reserve are currently estimated to be Catholics; how many people were recruited to the RUC and RUCR in 1989; and what proportion of those recruits were Catholics.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 July 1990]: I am advised by the Chief Constable that at 1 January 1990, 855 members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and its reserves were perceived to be Roman Catholic. The religion of a further 388 officers could not be determined.

In 1989, 556 officers were recruited to the RUC and its reserves. Seven per cent. of these were perceived to be Roman Catholic and a further 5·4 per cent. could not be determined.

Civil Servants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil servants in his Department of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates of Oxford and Cambridge; and how many are graduates of other universities.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 12 July 1990]: Within the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments 991 civil servants of the rank of principal or equivalent and above are graduates.

Information as to which university each individual attended is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of (a) the future work programme of the equal opportunities unit of the Northern Ireland civil service, in relation to the representation of (i) females and (ii) Catholics in the higher grades of the Northern Ireland civil service and (b) the timetable for the introduction and implementation of this programme of action.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The future work programme of the equal opportunities unit of the Northern Ireland civil service is multi-faceted. It ranges from the essential maintenance and development of its computer monitoring system, through analysis of recruitment and promotion competitions to researching ways and means of dealing with specific issues such as the adverse impact of recruitment selection procedures and the low level of representation of females and of Roman Catholics in the higher grades of the service.

As I indicated in my reply to a previous question on 18 April, Vol. 170, col. 879, the level of representation of females and Roman Catholics in the higher grades is being treated as a priority issue at senior level within the service. Consideration of this matter, assisted by discussions with the Fair Employment Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission, has produced a number of ideas which require further work to assess whether they should be included in the equal opportunities work programme. I am thus unable now to give details either in terms of content or time scale. An account of this work, as it develops, will continue to be given in the regular reports of the equal opportunities unit.

In the meantime, the encouraging trend of increased Roman Catholic representation in the higher grades, to which I referred in my earlier response, continues. The proportion of Roman Catholics at assistant secretary level and above in the general service is now 15·1 per cent. (21 out of 139) compared with 12·3 per cent. in January 1989 and 5·9 per cent. in January 1985.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

UN Conservation Convention

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom is expected to ratify the United Nations convention on conservation.

Mr. Sainsbury: I shall write to the honourable Member.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount of income tax the Exchequer would forgo in 1990-91 if the threshold for the starting point for the higher rate of income tax were raised to (a) £30,000, (b) £40,000, (c) £50,000, (d) £60,000, (e) £70,000, (f) £80,000, (g) £90,000 and (h) £100,000.

Mr. Ryder: Estimates are as follows:

Increases to the basic rate limit from £20,700

New basic rate limit £	Direct revenue cost[1] £ billion
30,000	1·6
40,000	2·5
50,000	3·0
60,000	3·3
70,000	3·5
80,000	3·7
90,000	3·8
100,000	3·9

[1] for a full year at 1990-91 projected levels of income

The estimates are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional, the estimates for basic rate limits above £70,000 being particularly tentative.

VAT

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Gloucester on 13 July, Official Report, column 353, what is the administrative cost of implementing the change whereby value added tax is applied to (a) gas and (b) electricity bills for supplies made to domestic premises for business purposes.

Mr. Ryder: I regret that no estimate is available. However, the arrangements to ease the administrative burden of taxing some supplies of fuel and power, which was required following the judgment of the European Court of Justice in June 1988, were formulated after extensive consultation with representatives of fuel and power suppliers.

Manufacturing

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what fiscal measures the Government intend to introduce to encourage an increase in the United Kingdom's manufacturing base.

Mr. Ryder: The Finance Bill contains proposals to increase the small profits limit for the small companies' corporation tax rate and to introduce a comprehensive system of VAT relief on bad debts.

Government Data Network

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer of 4 April, Official Report, column 608, he will make a statement on the outcome of the price variation negotiations with Racal Data Networks Ltd. for the Government data network.

Mr. Ryder: I confirm that these negotiations between the Treasury and Racal Data Networks Ltd. (RDNL) have now been completed.

RDNL has the right under the Government data network contract to increase the tariff by 6·75 per cent. for the year beginning 1 April 1990. The company has agreed, however, to limit the effective rate of increase over this period to 5·06 per cent. by applying this price adjustment from 1 July 1990 instead of 1 April 1990.

As foreshadowed in my answer on 4 April 1990, column 608, the Treasury and RDNL have discussed possible revisions to the Government data network contract. It has not, however, been possible to identify revisions which would be acceptable to both parties. The existing contract provisions will therefore remain in force.

As stated by my right hon. Friend the then Paymaster General on 22 June 1988, columns 599-600, Departments will continue to be free to compare alternatives to the Government data network to ensure best value for money. Hence RDNL will retain a strong interest in maintaining the Government data network tariff at a competitive level.

ENVIRONMENT

Landfill

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those landfill sites surveyed earlier in the current year by Government—sponsored research which were found to be (a) poorly managed and (b) contributory to water pollution problems.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The hon. Member may be referring to the UKAEA Harwell paper published earlier this year and based on a survey two years ago on behalf of my Department. The co-operation of the site owners was given on the understanding that statistical information only would be published and no sites identified.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: By 16 July 1990 my Department—including PSA—had received 491 subject access requests. No prior estimate of this number had been made and I have no plans to reconsider the level of the fee charged.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to meet local authority leaders to discuss his proposals for amending the community charge.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend will be meeting the leaders of the local authority associations at the consultative council on local government finance in September. They may wish to raise the matters dealt with in his statement of 19 July, Official Report, columns 1185-89, and discussed in the consultation document issued that day.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the risk of explosion in respect of the presence of acetone or alcohol solvents in radioactive waste subject to storage and disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Conditions imposed in certificates of authorisation issued by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 for the short-term accumulation and disposal of radioactive waste take full account of the assessment made in each case concerning the nature and activity of the waste in question.

For example, in the case of flammable liquids contaminated with radioactivity, conditions imposed require the waste to be kept in closed containers in a locked store which is designed and constructed so that the waste is reasonably protected from fire and that the store contains nothing else which is explosive or flammable. All authorised premises are subject to inspection by HMIP to ensure that these conditions are being met.

Cryptosporidium

Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the report of the group of experts on cryptosporidium in water supplies is to be published.

Mr. Trippier: The report of the expert group chaired by Sir John Badenoch is being published today by HMSO. I have placed copies in the Library.

Following an outbreak of cryptosporidiosis in Swindon and that part of Oxfordshire supplied by water from Farmoor reservoir, the group was appointed in March 1989 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health and asked to examine the implications for water supplies generally. It produced an interim report in July 1989 which formed the basis of guidance issued by Government Departments to the water industry.

Cryptosporidium has long been recognised as a parasite of animals and birds, but it was not until 1976 that it was shown to be capable of producing illness in man. Infection with cryptosporidium may cause acute diarrhoea. In 1989 there were about 9,000 reported cases of cryptosporidiosis in Britain; an increase over previous years which can be attributed in part to recent changes in laboratory sampling policies. The report concluded that water supplies can act as a source of human infection although the illness also spreads in other ways. Nationally, waterborne cases of cryptosporidiosis represent only a very small fraction of all cases of diarrhoea.

When operated optimally, the background levels of cryptosporidium oocysts in raw water sources, current water treatment processes appear able to prevent contamination of drinking water. However, they cannot be relied upon to remove all oocysts from heavily contaminated raw water.

The group highlights the importance of trying to prevent heavy contamination of raw water and of developing alternative disinfection processes to kill oocysts. It does not advocate routine monitoring of treated water for the parasite until more is known about the occurrence of cryptosporidium in the water environment and techniques for its isolation and identification are improved. The group recommends that each water undertaker should develop a strategy for monitoring in certain specific situations; and that water undertakers, health authorities and local authorities should collaborate to produce detailed contingency plans for identifying, and dealing with, any outbreak of cryptosporidiosis. The report identifies a number of subjects on which further research is required.

My right hon. and right hon. and learned Friends are most grateful to Sir John Badenoch and the other members of the expert group for producing such a comprehensive and authoritative account of the present state of knowledge. The Government had accepted and endorsed their recommendations, and I have put in the Library a copy of our detailed response. Many of the recommendations involve action by other bodies, and copies of the report and the response are being sent to all water undertakers, health authorities and local authorities.

The Government already have wide-ranging polices to reduce pollution of source waters from farming activities. These include advice to farmers, generous grant aid, and regulations currently being finalised. In addition, we intend to increase the maximum fine in magistrates and sheriff courts for polluting controlled waters from the present £2,000 to £20,000 at the next legislative opportunity.

Some of the specific topics which the report identifies as needing further research have already been incorporated into a national research programme funded by this Department, the National Rivers Authority, the Foundation for Water Research and water undertakers, and supported by the Public Health Laboratory Service. This will now be extended to cover the remaining subjects.

The Government will keep the position under review, and will consider the need for further action when the findings from the research programme become available.

Sports Clubs (Rating)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply he gave on 19 March to the hon. Members for Basildon (Mr. Amess) and for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy), Official Report, column 483-84, if he has made a further assessment of the effect of the new business rate upon sports facilities now that the rating lists have come into force.

Mr. Chope: The 25,591 sports grounds, sports stadia, playing fields and clubhouses in the rating lists for England which came into force on 1 April have average rate bills under the new system, excluding the effect of the transitional arrangements, 3·05 per cent. higher than in 1989-90. This represents a fall of about 4·5 per cent. in real terms. Average rate bills for the 3,300 golf courses, swimming pools and tennis courts in the new lists have risen by 20·6 per cent. and those for leisure and sports centres, of which there are 2,105 in the lists, by 30·3 per cent, again without transition.

These figures take no account of rate relief: local authorities have discretion to grant up to 100 per cent. rate relief on property occupied by non-profit making bodies.

Litter

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the current timetable for competitive tendering for street cleaning services in the light of the proposed code of practice on litter under the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Portillo: A number of authorities are now making preparations to let contracts for street cleaning from 1 January 1991. We have proposed, in the Environmental Protection Bill, that there should be a new litter duty on local authorities from 1 April 1991 and that, in fulfilling that duty, authorities should have regard to standards contained in a code of practice. While consultation on that code is well advanced, it is not yet in its definitive form, and I recognise that authorities cannot easily settle the basis for new street cleaning contracts until the standards are finalised. In the case of those authorities to which the deadline of 1 January 1991 currently applies, I intend, therefore, to substitute a later deadline of 1 August 1991. In the case of those authorities to which the deadline of 1 August 1991 currently applies, I intend to substitute a later deadline of 1 January 1992. In the case of those authorities to which the deadline of 1 January 1992 applies, I intend to make no change to the deadline. I shall bring forward regulations to give effect to these changes.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be making similar arrangements in respect of the competitive tendering deadlines applicable to Scottish and Welsh authorities.

Non-hazardous Waste

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his best estimate of the current average cost of landfilling non-hazardous municipal and industrial waste per tonne; and what is the estimated cost per tonne resulting from the implementation of the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 19 July 1990]: The Department is currently reviewing the availability of waste disposal statistics, but there are no firm figures on costs currently available. We estimate that the current average cost of landfilling non-hazardous waste is about £7 per tonne and that disposal to the highest possible standards reflected in the terms of the Environmental Protection Bill is likely to be in the region of £10 to £13 per tonne or more.

Environment Exhibition, Czechoslovakia

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will send an official to the Brno environmental exhibition in Czechoslovakia; and if he will make a statement on British participation.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 19 July 1990]: This Department has not received an invitation to the environmental exhibition "ENVIBRNO" in Brno, Czechoslovakia, on 23 to 25 October. On the information available to me, however, I think it unlikely that an official from this Department will attend. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Trade and Industry has today answered an associated question on the involvement of his Department and British industry in the exhibition.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which boroughs in London have made claims to his Department for the refund of community charge benefit; and in respect of how many people in each borough such a claim has been made.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: All local authorities are currently receiving monthly payments of subsidy from the Department based on their estimated 1990-91 expenditure on community charge benefit. It is largely a matter for local authorities to determine the basis for such estimates. At the end of the financial year each authority is required to make a final claim for subsidy based on the actual outturn expenditure on community charge benefit. Any difference in subsidy between the estimated claim and the final claim is adjusted accordingly.

Information about numbers receiving benefit is collected independently from the subsidy information. Returns of the numbers receiving community charge benefit on 31 May have not yet been received from all London boroughs.

Household Incomes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will now publish the 1987 data on households below average income.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We expect to publish the 1987 data on households below average income shortly.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Incomes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer of 13 July to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel), Official Report, column 349, if he will give the money figures for per capita income in £ sterling and include the United Kingdom in the table.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

Average GNP per capita in low income countries (excluding India and China) and average GNP per capita for DAC member countries and United Kingdom 1979-1988

Eastern Europe (Information Technology)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to the reply of 24 May, Official Report, column 368, what progress has been made on establishing a computing/information technology mission (a) in Czechoslovakia and (b) in Hungary.

Mrs. Chalker: We hope that information technology missions will visit Hungary and Czechoslovakia in the autumn.

European Development Fund

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value of goods and services procured by the European development fund from United Kingdom companies for each £1 contributed by the United Kingdom Government.

Mrs. Chalker: As at 31 March 1990, United Kingdom companies had won contracts to the value of 133·15 million ecu under the current (sixth) European development fund. This represents 13·7 per cent. of total procurement—some 27 per cent. of which is won by recipient countries. The United Kingdom contributes 16·58 per cent. of EDF VI.

Know-how Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries of eastern Europe and the amount that each is due to receive in each of the next five years from the know-how fund.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 19 July 1990]: It is not possible to list the amounts that each eastern European country will receive over the next five years. These will depend on the total resources available for eastern Europe which have to be agreed in the context of the public expenditure survey, plans for spending those resources, which will depend on developments in the countries concerned, and the pattern of actual disbursements. Support under the know-how fund is at present available to Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and East Germany.

TRANSPORT

Leicester-Burton Rail Link

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any proposals for re-opening of the Leicester to Burton railway link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Leicestershire county council has made an application for grant aid and credit approval in respect of the proposed reopening to passengers of this railway line. We are considering this application, but no decisions on resources for the project can be taken until the autumn.

Railway Tankers

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss alternative sites for the parking of railway oil tankers at Port Talbot.

Mr. Freeman: Safety issues are discussed, if appropriate, at our regular meetings. I understand that loaded fuel trains are stopped briefly at Port Talbot while a new crew takes over and the train is checked. Certain empty trains returning to the refinery wait during the night at Port Talbot for periods up to four hours.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ask the railways inspectorate to examine British Rail's compliance with its statutory duties so far as safety is concerned in respect of the parking of rail-borne tankers at stations.

Mr. Freeman: The railway inspectorate is examining the practice of holding fuel tanker trains at stations to ensure that all reasonably practical safety measures are being taken. I am writing to the right hon. and learned Member with further details.

Public Transport, London

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many passenger journeys were travelled by underground within London in 1989; what was the figure in the previous three years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many passenger journeys were travelled by bus within London in 1989; what were the figures for the previous three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is given in the table:

Passenger journeys on London Regional Transport services

	Underground millions	Bus millions
1986-87	769	1,158
1987-88	798	1,249
1988-89	815	1,244
1989-90	765	1,221

The number of passenger journeys during 1989-90 was, of course, affected by industrial action during the summer of last year.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to attract commuters to the London underground and London bus systems.

Mr. Freeman: A total of 83 per cent. of commuters into central London already use public transport. I trust that the major investment programme being undertaken by London Transport, coupled with the quality of service objectives which the Government have set it will encourage more commuters to use its services.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what age a boy or girl may be committed to prison in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: Although a sentence of imprisonment cannot be passed on anyone under the age of 21, other custodial sentences are available. The minimum ages for custodial sentences for boys and girls are as follows. The sentence of detention in a young offender institution is available for boys from the age of 14 and girls from the age of 15 convicted of imprisonable offences. Detention under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 is available from the age of 10 for young people of either sex convicted of murder or manslaughter; and from the age of 14 for those convicted of other offences for which an adult may be imprisoned for 14 years or more.

Boys aged 15 or 16 charged with criminal offences and refused bail may be remanded in prison department custody if a court certifies them as being too unruly to be safely committed to local authority care. The adult remand arrangements apply to young people of either sex from the age of 17.

World Cup (Deportations)

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what authority the 247 British citizens deported from Italy during the World Cup tournament were photographed upon arrival at Gatwick airport; what was the purpose of this photographing; what use is to be made of these photographs; and what action is open to these people to ensure that such photographs are destroyed and no records retained.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: People who were returned from Italy on 26 June following incidents of violence in Rimini were photographed on their arrival at Gatwick airport by the national football intelligence unit (NFIU), which is responsible for obtaining, collating and analysing information about individuals who are suspected of being involved in acts of football hooliganism.

Personal information held by NFIU on computer is subject to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Immigration Officers

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the pay scales of immigration officers are designed to reward proficiency in more than one language;

(2) if immigration officers at ports of entry to the United Kingdom are required to speak foreign languages.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The possession of foreign language skills is not a pre-requisite of employment as an immigration officer, but it is the policy of the Department to attract new recruits who have language skills and to encourage the use of those skills in existing staff. Immigration officers who are successful in departmental language examinations are paid an allowance for each language in which they reach the required standard up to a financial limit which is reviewed regularly. Individual language allowances are higher for the more difficult languages.

Public Order Act 1986

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the results of his evaluation of the operation of section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986 with particular reference to the interpretation of police forces of the circumstances under which the relevant powers should be exercised.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are considering the representations which we received in response to the announcement of the evaluation of section 39 and hope to reach conclusions by the end of the year.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the numbers of subject access requests made to police forces; whether he will introduce regulations to make it an offence for any person to require a data subject to seek subject access to personal data held by the police; whether he will introduce legislation to determine when police records may be used for vetting purposes; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that from July 1989 to June 1990 the subject access office of the national identification bureau received 10,818 requests for subject access under the Data Protection Act 1984. Of these 1,371 requests were made initially to the Metropolitan police and 9,447 to other forces. We are currently discussing with representatives of the police service and the Data Protection Registrar how to deal with enforced subject access. The Home Department is planning to mount a scrutiny in the autumn to examine the most appropriate arrangements for the maintenance of, and disclosure from, the national collection of criminal records.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision is to be taken on the application to the post in Islamabad by Shamim Ayaz, born on 31 July 1965, Home Office reference: H.162359, to join his family in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I shall write to the hon. Member about this case shortly.

Juvenile Detainees

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the regulations concerning the imprisonment on remand in adult prisons of juvenile detainees.

Mr. Mellor: The provisions which govern the detention in prison custody of unconvicted and convicted unsentenced juveniles are sections 23 and 34 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969, section 69 of the Children Act 1975, section 37 of the Magistrates Courts Act 1980, the Certificates of Unruly Character (Conditions) Order 1977 (Statutory Instrument 1977/1037) and the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 (Transitional Modifications of Part I) Orders 1979 and 1981 (Statutory Instruments 1979/125 and 1981/81). By virtue of section 37 of the 1980 Act, when a magistrates court commits in custody to the Crown court for sentence a young offender aged 15 or 16, the committal may be only to a remand centre or prison. By virtue of the other provisions quoted, the only other unsentenced young persons who may be committed in custody to a remand centre or prison are boys aged 15 or 16 whom a criminal court has certified to be of so unruly a character that they cannot safely be committed to the care of a local authority.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles are held on remand at each adult prison in the United Kingdom at the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is given in the table:

Untried and convicted unsentenced males[1] aged under 17 held in adult prisons[2] in England and Wales on 30 April 1990: by establishment

Establishment	Number
Bristol	3
Hull	12
Leeds	1
Manchester	2
Pentonville	2
Shrewsbury	1
Winchester	1
All adult prisons	22

[1] No unsentenced juvenile girls were held on 30 April 1990.
[2] A further 62 were held in remand centres taking only prisoners aged under 21.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many youngsters aged 16 years or under have committed suicide while in custody in each of the last 20 years; at which institutions; and what was the age of each.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 19 July 1990]: In the last 20 years six inmates aged 16 or under have died at their own hand while in prison custody. The details are as follows:

Year	Establishment	Age	Verdict recorded at Coroner's inquest
1971	Cardiff	15	Suicide
1976	Pucklechurch	15	Suicide
1978	Hindley	16	Suicide
1981	Rochester	16	Suicide
1983	Manchester	16	Suicide
1990	Swansea	15	Not yet held

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders aged under 17 years are in Her Majesty's prisons at present.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 19 July 1990]: According to the records held centrally, on 30 April 1990, the latest date for which information is readily available, 65 untried, 19 convicted unsentenced and 21 sentenced juveniles were held in prisons and remand centres in England and Wales. Of these 44 untried and 18 convicted unsentenced juveniles were held in remand centres for young offenders.

Football League Grounds (Policing)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the correspondence between the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde and his Department's Under-Secretary for State on the subject of increases in charges made for policing at Football League grounds in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A reply to the hon. Member's letter to me of 12 July about this matter will be sent to him as soon as possible. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he is issuing to police authorities on the assessment of charges for the policing of football matches following recent increases in the levels of such charges.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These charges are a matter for police authorities. Lord Justice Taylor's report recommended that their charges should be more realistic. We are therefore consulting the football authorities, the local authority associations and police representative bodies on the terms of the Home Office circular advising police authorities to recover as far as practicable the full cost of providing police officers inside football grounds.

Philip Andrew Knight

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the death of Philip Andrew Knight in Swansea prison.

Mr. Mellor: The circumstances surrounding the death of Philip Knight will, as in all cases of death in prison custody, be thoroughly investigated at a coroner's inquest. It would not be right for me to comment on the details of the case until the inquest has taken place.

Prisoners (Observation)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the regulations pertaining in (a) adult prisons and (b) juvenile penal establishments concerning the observation of prisoners considered to be at risk of committing suicide.

Mr. Mellor: Once an inmate has been identified as potentially suicidal it is for the prison medical officer to decide what form of special supervision is needed, depending on the seriousness of the risk. Broadly speaking, continuous supervision is considered appropriate where the medical officer believes there is an immediate risk of the inmate harming him or herself. Where continuous supervision is impracticable, or where the medical officer considers the inmate to present some suicide risk but not so immediately as to require continuous supervision, the inmate should normally be placed under intermittent supervision. Where this is ordered, the inmate will normally be observed by a member of staff at approximately 15-minute intervals. Where, exceptionally, this is not possible, the governor or medical officer may order the frequency of observation to be reduced, but not below once every 30 minutes.

Detailed guidance on special supervision procedures, and on all other aspects of suicide prevention (for example, the location of suicidal inmates and sources of help and support), is set out in circular instruction 20/1989, a copy of which is in the Library. The guidance applies to all prison service establishments.

Autopsies

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many autopsies were carried out in England and Wales for the latest year for which information is available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of post mortems ordered by coroners is published in table 1 of the Home Office statistical bulletin issue 14/90 "Statistics of Deaths reported to Coroners: England and Wales 1989", a copy of which is in the Library.

Pollution Prosecutions

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for pollution have been undertaken against the owners of (a) lorries, (b) buses, (c) motor cycles and (d) other motor vehicles in respect of air pollution and noise, respectively, in the past 12 month for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for the previous 12-month period.

Mr. John Patten: The available information about offences relating to motor vehicles is published annually in Home Office statistical publications. These statistics do not identify the type of vehicle involved. Summary information is set out in the bulletin entitled "Offences relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales"; the most recent number 34/89, included data for 1988. Detailed information is given in the publication "Offences relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables". Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Details of noise offences, offence group 22, are included in the supplementary tables publications. Emission of smoke offences are not separately identified.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology Colleges, Wandsworth

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he or his colleagues last met the chairman of ADT Ltd. regarding the opening of city technology colleges in Wandsworth.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend last met Mr. Michael Ashcroft, the chairman of ADT plc, on 9 January 1990 to discuss the proposal to establish a city technology college at Wandsworth. They also met informally at a dinner given by the CTC Trust on 31 January.

Baccalaureate

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the introduction of a baccalaureate; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 8 May 1990, Official Report, col. 10.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his talks about proposed negotiating machinery for teachers' pay and conditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is now considering the responses of the teacher unions and employers to his proposals for new permanent pay negotiation machinery. He will announce his conclusions in due course.

Child Abuse

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has completed his review of the arrangements made by local education authorities to give effect to the recommendations in his Department's circular No. 4/88 for the protection of children from abuse.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This review has recently been completed, and the Department is writing today to local education authorities to convey my right hon. Friend's thanks for their co-operation with it and to give them some feedback. We are encouraged both by the positive manner in which authorities have responded to our advice and by the confirmation that the measures we recommended are proving generally helpful and workable.

School Closures

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools in England of fewer than 50 pupils closed in (a) 1975, (b) 1980, (c) 1985 and (d) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 16 July 1990]: The information for the years, 1985, 1980 and 1975 is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In England, 36 maintained schools with fewer than 50 pupils were closed in 1989.

The criteria against which my right hon. Friend considers proposals to reorganise schools are set out in the Department's circular 3/87, which makes it clear that assessing the viability of an individual school is not solely a matter of the number of pupils on roll. A copy of the circular is available in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bank Accounts

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 13 June to the hon. Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns), Official Report, column 212, what further progress is being made on the implementation of the European Commission bank accounts directive.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has today issued a consultative document inviting comments on draft regulations to implement the EC bank accounts directive. Copies will be placed in the Library. Views are invited on the draft regulations attached to the consultative document by 19 October.

Rover Group

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has yet received the formal Community decision on the Rover Group.

Mr. Lilley: I received the formal Community decision on 19 July, and have placed copies in the Library.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the reasons there was an exceptional tax allowance pool prior to the sale of Rover in August 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 17 July 1990]: I presume the hon. Member has in mind the reference in the National Audit Office report (appendix 2, paragraph 2.1.2) to

"the exceptional size of the capital allowance pools"

As that paragraph went on to explain, this was

"resulting from previous disclaimers of allowances".

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the latest information available to the Government about the current value to British Aerospace of the lifting of the ring fences on Rover's capital losses and allowances in July 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 17 July 1990]: This must be a matter for British Aerospace, but the report by Touche Ross for the National Audit Office in September 1989 put the commercial net present value of the trading losses and capital allowance pools at £33 million to £40 million and assigned a "negligible or nil value" to the capital losses.

Auditing Practices Committee

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 3 April, Official Report, column 507, he can now indicate the Auditing Practices Committee's policy on release of information.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies is now undertaking a comprehensive review of the methods of operation of its Auditing Practices Committee.

Companies Act

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to amend the Companies Act to provide a statutory definition of (a) revenue, (b) an expense and (c) liability.

Mr. Redwood: No. These terms are in general use and well understood. If definitions are required in particular contexts, that is best dealt with in accounting standards or other professional guidance.

Tear Gas

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences have been granted in the last 10 years for the export of tear gas to (a) Yugoslavia and (b) Tunisia.

Mr. Redwood: Such information is not readily available, and could be produced only at extremely disproportionate cost, as export licensing does not maintain records of export licence applications by specific products.

Germany

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what new initiatives he has taken to improve trade relations with Germany.

Mr. Lilley: I intend to maintain close contacts with my German counterparts on all aspects of bilateral and EC business involving my Department.

Dunsdale Securities

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department is intending to pay compensation to those investors who dealt with Dunsdale Securities when it was under Department of Trade and Industry licence.

Mr. Redwood: I see no grounds for considering compensation payments to investors who placed money with Dunsdale Securities Ltd.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) of 26 June, Official Report, column 129, (1) whether the auditors' certificates issued by his Department to Dunsdale Securities were qualified in any way;

(2) whether the auditors of Dunsdale Securities appointed by his Department were fully recognised by an appropriate accountancy body.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 July 1990]: The Department does not issue audit certificates to companies or appoint their auditors, nor did it do so under the regulatory system put in place by the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958 which was repealed in April 1988 upon entry into force of the Financial Services Act 1986. The auditors' reports and verifications provided to the Department in relation to applications and annual monitoring returns for Dunsdale Securities were in accordance with the requirements of the Dealers in Securities (Licensing) Regulations 1983 made under the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958: they were not subject to any qualifications. Dunsdale Securities Ltd. employed auditors who, when they signed the reports and verifications, were members of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, were qualified in accordance with the law and held a practising certificate issued by the institute. One of the auditors was subsequently excluded from membership of the institute.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the latest index of output figures for the textile and clothing industries; and what the figures were one year ago.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

Index of Production (1985 = 100)

	Textiles (SIC 43)	Clothing (SIC 453)
May 1989	98	97
May 1990	92	98
Percentage change	−5·8	+0·2
March-May 1989	99·8	97·1
March-May 1990	92·7	100·6
Percentage change	−7·1	+3·6

Source: Central Statistical Office (CSO).

Notes:

1. Textiles and clothing have been classified according to the UK Standard Industrial Classification (SIC).

2. The Index of Production (IOP) figures are seasonally adjusted, and represent movements in output in constant price terms. The series for textiles has also been adjusted to account for stock movements.
3. Although the latest IOP figures are those for May 1990, comparisons have also been made for the latest three month period. The extra data are included, on the advice of the CSO, as a more reliable guide to underlying performance than comparisons between single months. Monthly data tend to be volatile.
4. Percentage changes have been calculated on unrounded data.

Raw Materials Imports

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide the latest available statistics for the import content of raw materials consumption.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Based on information published in the latest available input-output tables for 1984, the proportion of all purchases by the energy and manufacturing industries accounted for by imports was approximately 26 per cent. Purchases include both raw materials and semi-manufactures, which cannot be separately distinguished. I will write to my hon. Friend in more detail.

Environmental Control Equipment

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what involvement his Department has had in encouraging British firms to sell environmental control equipment to the countries of eastern Europe at the forthcoming Brno exhibition in Czechoslovakia; with what results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 July 1990]: When my Department's programme of assistance of overseas trade for 1990-91 was drawn up last year, consideration was given to the inclusion of a British group at the exhibition to which the hon. Member refers (ENVIBRNO). However, demand for support at other trade fairs worldwide was so great that it was not possible to include ENVIBRNO in the programme. There was, of course, nothing to prevent United Kingdom firms from attending ENVIBRNO if they wished to do so.

The Department is providing support for some 60 British companies at the annual Brno general engineering fair in September, where it is expected that some will be exhibiting environmental control equipment.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is his estimate of the United Kingdom content of television sets produced in the United Kingdom in 1973, 1975, 1985 and the latest year for which an estimate is feasible;

(2) what is his estimate of the United Kingdom content of cars and commercial vehicles produced in the United Kingdom in 1973, 1979, 1985 and the latest year for which an estimate is feasible.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 18 July 1990]: Information on which to base a reliable estimate is not available.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the annual exports from the United Kingdom of chlorofluorocarbons for each year from 1979 to 1989; what is the figure for 1990 to the most recent practicable date; and what estimate he has made of the quantities which will be exported in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 July 1990]: This information is not available.

British Airways

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply of 16 July, Official Report, column 384, under what legal provision EEC inspectors entered the office of Lord King, chairman of British Airways, and inspected the chairman's personal banking papers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 19 July 1990]: Commission officials visited British Airways on 23-24 February, by prior arrangement with the company. The Commission was investigating an agreement between BA, KLM and Sabena which had been notified by the airlines under the Community's competition rules. The relevant powers are set out in article 11 of Council regulation (EEC) 3975/87, which lays down competition procedures for air transport.

Machine Tool Industry

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the most recently available output figures for the United Kingdom machine tool industry in money and real physical output terms, and the equivalent figures in Germany, France and Italy, for the latest available statistical periods.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 18 July 1990]: Information on numbers or weight of machine tools produced is not readily available. The most recent data on output of machine tools in money terms may be found in the latest issue of "Engineering Sales and Orders", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library. The table shows the most recent international comparisons from industry sources:

	Machine tool production in 1989 (£ million)
United Kingdom	969
France	590
West Germany	4,840
Italy	1,835

Source: Machine Tool Technologies Association.
Note: These figures are industry estimates excluding parts and accessories.

PRIME MINISTER

European Policy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to convene meetings to assess the characteristics of any or each of the European Community countries for the development of European policy.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the replies given to the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) on 17 July 1990, at column 859.

EMPLOYMENT

Child Care

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions have been issued to the Training Agency with regard to the treatment of child care costs for single parent employment training trainees.

Mr. Nicholls: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) and Training Agency area offices must ensure that provision is made for the costs of caring for children of lone parents who have one or more children under the age of 16 and who are participants in assessment or training on ET. TECs may also make provision for child care out of their local initiative funds. Funding arrangements for child care are for negotiation between individual training agents, training managers and the TEC or area office concerned.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the cost of child care for single parent employment training trainees is to be covered under the new contract; and whether the Training Agency is including child care costs as part of the single unit per training place.

Mr. Nicholls: Contracts with training agents and training managers require them to ensure that child care provision is made for lone parents who have one or more children under the age of 16 and who are participating in assessment or are trainees on ET. Arrangements for funding child care are for negotiation between individual training agents and training managers and the training and enterprise council or Training Agency area office concerned. Provision for child care may be included within composite unit costs or funded separately.

Illiteracy and Innumeracy

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effects of illiteracy and innumeracy upon future prospects for British employers.

Mr. Eggar: Available evidence indicates that as many as 6 million people in the adult population may have experienced some difficulty with literacy or numeracy either in the workplace or outside. Lack of basic word and number skills is clearly a barrier to effective performance at work and, in turn, profitability. The problem is as much the concern of employers as of individuals.

Tourism

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the Government's measures to encourage the tourism industry since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The then Secretary of State announced the conclusions of the Government's major review of their support to the tourism industry on 6 July and 28 November 1989. With the sharper focus of Government support, my right hon. and learned Friend is confident that the industry will continue to prosper.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the statements of the Minister of State of 29 November 1989, Official Report, column 761, concerning the Government's estimates of the cost of establishing a minimum wage, if he will state when the research referred to was conducted and completed.

Mr. Eggar: Work estimating the effect of a national minimum wage in the context of the social charter started in early October 1989. The estimate of the costs of imposing the national minimum wage, referred to on 29 November, became available in mid-November. Subsequently, a note on method was written, and the work continued to be under review until the end of January.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, Official Report, column 98, to the hon. Member for Stretford, on the effects on pay differentials from the introduction of a minimum wage, what would be the total effects if it is assumed that differentials are restored by one half only (a) where, according to the new earnings survey and other departmental sources, more than 50 per cent. of workers in a particular industry earn between half and two thirds of national average earnings, (b) where more than half the workers in an industry are paid below the minimum wage, (c) for those earning up to two thirds average earnings and (d) in the (i) retailing, (ii) distributive trades, (iii) miscellaneous services and (iv) national and local government industries.

Mr. Nicholls: Such estimates could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stretford, 2 February, Official Report, column 375, on minimum wage effects, what is the estimated direct cost of raising all those to the minimum wage assumed in the note, broken down as follows: (a) industrial category, (b) region, (c) public sector and (d) private sector and the costs in each case.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, Official Report, column 98, to the hon. Member for Stretford, regarding the assumptions contained in the Treasury model on the demand effects of the introduction of a minimum wage (a) how many jobs will be gained as a direct result of the higher wages paid according to the simulations done for the Treasury paper, "The Relationship Between Employment and Wages" and (b) what are the estimated demand effects according to the latest version of the Treasury model.

Mr. Nicholls: The simulations reviewed in the Treasury paper, "The Relationship Between Employment and Wages" produced an estimate of the impact of changes in real wages on employment. This is an estimate of the net change taking into account both the effects on consumer demand of changes in real wages, as well as the offsetting effects on company sector demand which arise from corresponding changes in their costs. It is, therefore, not possible to make a separate estimate of how many jobs will be gained as a direct result of the higher wages paid.

It has not, since 1978, been the practice to run particular simulations on the Treasury model to meet specific outside requests, but the hon. Member will be aware that the current version of the model is available in the Library for Members' use.

Health and Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria are used in deciding whether accident prevention advisory unit reports are made public by (a) the Health and Safety Executive or (b) the employer involved.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not the Health and Safety Executive's policy to publish the reports of its accident prevention advisory unit which rely on information provided in confidence by employers. Publication by employers is a matter for them.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Health and Safety Executive intends to make public the full findings of the accident prevention advisory unit report into health and safety issues arising from construction of the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive does not intend to publish the report but has sent a copy to the Select Committee on Employment, at its request. Chapter 16, which contains the report's conclusions, has already been published by the contractors, who, with assistance from HSE, are bringing the report to the attention of their work force.

Training

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the arrangements for approving training providers under new youth training and employment training.

Mr. Howard: In April 1986, three years after its introduction, the youth training scheme was extended into a two-year programme. At the same time all YTS training providers were required to achieve approved training organisation status. The purpose of the approval process was to ensure that all providers developed and maintained training of the highest possible quality. By October 1988 all providers delivering YTS met the required standards. These arrangements have been carried forward into new youth training which I launched on 28 June.

Drawing on the YTS experience a similar stringent approval process was introduced into employment training from its outset in September 1988. In April 1990 the approvals process was streamlined so that seven common criteria now apply to both employment training and new youth training. These are:

Stage 1:
1. Recruitment, selection and competence of staff;
2. Equal opportunities;
3. Health, safety and suitability of premises and equipment;
4. Financial viability.

Stage 2:
5. Identification of training needs;
6. Training designed and delivered to national standards;
7. Effective quality management.

Good progress has been made in extending approval to employment training providers. At 13 June 90 per cent. had achieved stage 1 approval. The stage 2 approval process is still under way and I expect it to be completed not later than April 1991.

During this period, training and enterprise councils will progressively take over the responsibility for contracting with training providers and for completing the approval process. They will be required to ensure that providers achieve and maintain the standards necessary for approval under each of the seven criteria or to set and enforce equally or more exacting quality standards to be agreed with my Department.

WALES

Young Offenders

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what secure units, and how many places, are available for young offenders in (a) the Swansea area, (b) south Wales and (c) Wales as a whole.

Mr. Grist: The following secure units, and places, are available in Wales:

(a) the Swansea area:
Llwyncelyn in West Glamorgan has two secure places.

(b) South Wales and (c) Wales as a whole:
Ty Mawr in Gwent has two secure places and Silverbrook in Mid Glamorgan has three secure places.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what responsibility he has for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's operations and activities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has joint responsibility with his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment for the operations and activities of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in Wales.

Pollution, Port Talbot

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will consult Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution as regards pollution created by BP Chemicals at Baglen bay, Port Talbot;

(2) if he will take appropriate action to deal with pollution created by BP Chemicals at Baglen bay, Port Talbot.

Mr. Grist: I am advised by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) that the pollution referred to in these questions is primarily that associated with the flaring of light hydrocarbon material during periods of major plant commissioning or plant upset. The impact of such flaring is a high luminosity flame, and noise associated with the use of steam injection to ensure complete combustion of flared material. HMIP received complaints during the commissioning period of the BP petrochemical complex from 27 May to 10 June. It had 95 representations via BP Chemicals' complaint procedure system, and a similar number via Port Talbot borough council environmental health department. Six complaints were received directly by HMIP. We understand that most complaints were received by BP and the local authority over the critical period from 1 June to 5 June when instability in the refrigeration system resulted in flaring.

HMIP tells me that the commissioning of any major petrochemical works will inevitably result in some degree of flaring as the flare system is vital for major equipment protection and safety of personnel. HMIP assures me, however, that it is being kept fully informed of the situation at BP Chemicals by communications with the company and is currently assessing the results of internal investigations into the flaring incidents and will be taking any action deemed necessary.

Corlan Housing Association

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements have been made to continue the outstanding commitments on Corlan housing association's grant-aided development programme.

Mr. David Hunt: Under the terms of the rescue package for Corlan housing association drawn up by Housing for Wales, the outstanding commitments on Corlan's grant-aided development programme will be taken over by Housing for Wales and then placed with other housing associations.

As an interim arrangement instead of paying housing association grant, Housing for Wales will need to make payments direct to contractors. Parliamentary approval of this expenditure will be sought in a winter supplementary estimate for class XVI, vote 6. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at a total cost of £6·4 million is being met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

ENERGY

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library copies of all notifications provided by his Department to the European Commission relating to the level and extent of the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) on Monday 26 March at column 5.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, Official Report, 10 July, column 155, on the fossil fuel levy, if he will give details of the projected scope for efficiency savings within Nuclear Electric until 1998 as identified by his Department.

Mr. Baldry: No. This is a commercial matter for Nuclear Electric plc.

Energy Paper Projections

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to update the projections in energy paper 55; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I expect to review energy paper 55 in 1991. This will include both the projections and Government programmes.

Wind Power

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most recent estimate of the maximum potential for wind power generation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Government views on the potential for renewable energy sources were laid out in energy paper 55. A contribution of up to 30 TWh from land-based turbines was estimated by the year 2025 if R and D programmes were successful and the technology could be deployed commercially.

PowerGen

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) with whom discussions have taken place about the sale by private treaty of PowerGen;

(2) which companies are advising him on the possible sale of PowerGen by private treaty;

(3) what steps are being taken to protect public financial interests under the private treaty method of sale for PowerGen.

Mr. Wakeham: In preparing the electricity industry for privatisation, I am bound to consider with my financial advisers all options for maximising proceeds consistent with the Government's objectives for the industry. All such discussions are confidential. It would not be right to rule out the possibility of a trade sale if a suitable purchaser emerged.

Nuclear Fuel (Reprocessing)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is (a) the total quantity and (b) the total percentage of plutonium arising from the reprocessing of foreign spent fuel that has been returned to its country of origin, for each foreign country whose fuel has been accepted, for each year from 1965 to 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Baldry: I understand from British Nuclear Fuels plc that, between 1965 and 1989, some 3·5 tonnes of plutonium from the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel were returned to the country of origin or sent to a country specified by the owner of the plutonium. The bulk of this plutonium has been of Japanese or Italian origin with smaller amounts originating in Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Spain or Switzerland. At the end of 1989, some 0·5 tonnes of extracted plutonium were held in stock at Sellafield awaiting return to overseas owners.

National Grid Company

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the proposed capital reduction for the National Grid Company.

Mr. Wakeham: A court hearing is scheduled for Monday 30 July. This is an important part of the process for establishing the capital structure of the company in preparation for the move to the private sector as part of the sale of the 12 regional electricity companies later this year.

Hinkley Point C

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the report of the Hinkley Point C inquiry before he announces his decision and before the House rises for the summer Adjournment.

Mr. Wakeham [pursuant to his reply 2 July 1990, c. 431]: I am now in a position to inform the House that I shall not be able to announce my decision regarding Nuclear Electric's application before the House rises for the summer Adjournment. As I have previously indicated it is my intention to publish my decision and the inspector's report simultaneously in the late summer.

I shall be arranging for copies of both my decision letter and of the report to be placed in the Libraries of the House. Copies of my decision letter and the inspector's conclusions and recommendations will be available in the Vote Office.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Offals

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now ban the use of those offals specified in the bovine offals order in (a) pet food and (b) feed for pigs and poultry.

Mr. Maclean: I am considering the recommendation by the Select Committee on Agriculture of a statutory ban on the use of these materials in pet food. In doing so I will need to bear in mind whether there is any scientific evidence for such action.

There is no evidence to support banning the use of these materials in pig and poultry feed.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy in respect of disposal of those cattle offals banned for use for human consumption which are not held in storage by the rendering industry.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 7 December 1989, (Official Report, column 374).

Animal Feed

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now instigate an inquiry into the production of animal feed.

Mr. Maclean: I am considering the recommendation of the Select Committee on Agriculture that such an inquiry should be undertaken.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the prevalence of the practice of feeding chicken manure to (a) cattle, (b) pigs and (c) poultry; what is his policy in respect of this practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: As far as I am aware, chicken manure is not fed direct to animals and ensiled poultry litter is fed only to cattle. Free-range chickens may of course naturally eat their own and other chicken's droppings.

Anyone ensiling such material is subject to the provisions of the Processed Animal Protein Order 1989 which requires registration with the Department and microbiological testing of the end product. Regular checks on the ensiling process are carried out by the state veterinary service.

Cattle Offspring

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now introduce a comprehensive system for identifying and tracking the offspring of cattle.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 4 July, Official Report, column 590.

Cattle Heads

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now ban the splitting of cattle heads in abattoirs.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 10 July 1990, Official Report, column 270.

Fish Landings

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details for June 1989 and June 1990 of all (a) non-cod and (b) cod landings from sea area VIIA broken down by vessel length band for (i) east coast Scottish, (ii) west coast Scottish, (iii) English, (iv) Welsh and (v) Northern Irish, indicating within each category the number of vessels and tonnages landed.

Mr. Gummer: I regret that it would be too expensive to give a detailed response to the questions posed by my hon. Friend. I will, however, make a general statement about the alleged misreporting of cod in the Irish sea and off the west coast of Ireland.

The non-sector's quota of cod in the Irish sea for 1990 is 1,858 tonnes. Approximately half this quota was apparently taken by Scottish vessels and landed into Scotland during June and early July. In addition, landings into Scotland of cod reported as taken from the west of Ireland (areas VIIb and VIIc) have shown a marked increase in the second half of June. The Irish sea cod fishery has had to be closed to the non-sector as its quota for the year has already been exhausted.

The industry has stated its view that some Scottish vessels have been misreporting fish caught in the North sea or off the west coast of Scotland as coming from the Irish sea or off the west coast of Ireland, and has asked that catches should be reallocated from the latter to the former areas.

Fisheries Departments accept that the circumstantial evidence points to misreporting having taken place. The Irish sea cod fishery is traditionally a spring and winter fishery and high catches in summer are unusual. The pattern of landings this year is very different from experience. Moreover, the rate of uptake by the non-sector has not been paralleled by the sector. However, departments cannot act to penalise a particular group of vessels or to compensate Irish sea fishermen affected on the basis of rumour or circumstantial evidence; they can act only following successful prosecution of offenders. Departments are examining all fishing documents and, if they can secure hard evidence of misreporting, they will prosecute.

In the meantime, Departments are looking urgently at ways of limiting misreporting in future, and hope to be able to set up a system later this year. I know that the industry has in the past rejected tougher enforcement measures in view of their cost and inconvenience, but if it is serious about limiting misreporting, I hope that it will now accept the need for firm action.

If a system to limit misreporting can be established quickly, Departments will try to obtain more quota from another member state with the aim of reopening the Irish sea cod fishery to the non-sector later this year. However, such a swap would depend on the successful identification of another United Kingdom stock to offer in exchange.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of persons on hospital waiting lists per 1,000 persons within (a) Norwich district health authority, (b) East Anglian regional health authority and (c) all district health authorities in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested has been placed in the Library. The waiting list per thousand resident population may be misleading because a significant, though varying, proportion of patients on the waiting list are referred by general practitioners in other districts. The relevant population for comparison is therefore the "catchment" population which in many cases varies substantially from the resident population.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of people who have been treated for psychiatric or physical injuries following harassment for being HIV-positive.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all projects in the United Kingdom of which he is aware involved in researching the AIDS virus, together with their expenditure, noting specifically where the Government have financed or partly financed them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The chief scientist of the Department of Health chairs interdepartmental meetings to discuss Government-funded AIDS/HIV research. Under the auspices of this committee, "HIV Infection and AIDS in the UK: Overview of Government Funded AIDS Research" has been compiled. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to contain the HIV-2 virus; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are firmly committed to taking effective action to minimise the spread of HIV. All the possible health measures in place, including health education, are as relevant to HIV 2 as they are to HIV 1.

All blood donations have been screened for HIV 1 and 2 as a combined test since 1 June 1990. However, HIV 2 is not considered to be a significant problem in the United Kingdom, nor for the rest of Europe, except Portugal where there appear to be roughly equal numbers of HIV 1 and HIV 2 positive donors. Many countries do not screen for HIV 2, including the United States of America.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria are being used to evaluate the effectiveness of advertising the dangers of AIDS in the media.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: AIDS mass media public education campaigns are evaluated by continuing independent market research consisting of interviews with a sample of the population. This measures public awareness, comprehension and acceptability of campaign advertising. This research, which began in 1986, also includes surveys of respondents' claimed heterosexual behaviour, including condom use, and a survey undertaken in venues attended by homosexual men to gauge their response to advertising specifically directed towards them.

Other indicators include:

the number and nature of calls to the national AIDS helpline; and new attendances at genito-urinary medicine clinics.

National Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much per capita spending on the national health service is for the current financial year; and how much it was in 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: We currently spend more than £500 per head on the National Health Service each year, compared with £360 at today's prices in 1978-79.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the spending per resident by Dewsbury health authority was for each of the years 1979 to 1989, inclusive; and what was the comparable national average spending over the same period.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 13 June 1990]: Information for Dewsbury health authority and for all district health authorities in England for the years since 1 April 1982 are shown in the table.

The figures relate expenditure on services within Dewsbury health authority boundaries to numbers of residents. They do not show expenditure on services for Dewsbury residents, since they do not take account of services provided by other districts for Dewsbury residents, or services provided by Dewsbury health authority for residents of other districts.

(b) Mid year estimates of resident population—1982 to 1988 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

Notes to the table:

1. Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS) covers the total expenditure by district health authorities including that on hospital community health and where relevant patient transport (i.e. ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.
2. District capital expenditure, all expenditure incurred by Regional health authorities on behalf of their regions as a whole and by special health authorities, etc. is excluded. Expenditure on family practitioner services, which is accounted for by family practitioner committees and cannot strictly be attributed to particular districts, is also excluded.
3. Prior to 1 April 1982 to Dewsbury health authority's predecessor health district formed part of a larger area health authority and in those cases district based figures were not collected centrally.

National Health Service (Contracts)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the effect of separating purchasers and providers within the national health service in the new contracts system.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We expect the separation of purchasers and providers and the introduction of contracts to bring a new clarity to the management of the National Health Service. As purchasers, district health authorities will be able to concentrate on securing effective and efficient health care for their residents. Our initial concern for 1991-92 is to ensure that the new mechanisms are in place. As the new system develops, we expect contracts to be the means by which purchasing authorities and provider units together will be able to agree improvements in the quality and appropriateness of services offered.

National Health Service (Surplus Land)

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the amount which has now been raised within the national health service, for the sale of surplus land since 1979; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Sales of surplus National Health Service property from 1979-80 to 1989-90 inclusive have realised a total of approximately £1·1 billion. This money has been retained by health authorities for reinvestment in the service.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the new membership of the district health authorities will be announced.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statutory responsibility for the appointment of non-executive members of district health authorities rests with the relevant regional health authority. We expect them to make announcements in due course.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what restrictions apply on the eligibility for reappointment of CHC members of eight years' standing.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The restrictions on the eligibility for reappointment of CHC members of eight years' standing are set out in the Community Health Councils Regulations 1985, regulation 7(2).

Health Authorities

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who was consulted over the new membership for each of the positions of (1) chairperson of regions, (2) membership of regions, (3) chairperson of district health authority, (4) membership of district health authority and (5) membership of family health service authority in the new health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no statutory requirement to consult on these appointments. However, when my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State appoints the chairmen of regional and district health authorities and the non-executive members of regional health authorities he welcomes recommendations and comments from all quarters, as do regional health authorities when making the appointments to district health authorities and family health services authorities.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the new (a) membership and (b) chairpersons of the regional health authorities will be announced.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today placed in the Library a list of the non-executive members of regional health authorities appointed by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State. The general manager and the director of finance will be ex-officio executive members of the regional health authority. Other executives are appointed by the chairman, the non-executives and the general manager.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State made an announcement on regional chairmen's appointments in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) on 24 May at column 337.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the new membership of the family health service authorities will be announced.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Appointments of members of family health services authorities is a matter for the appropriate regional health authority.

Remand Homes

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of spaces available in each juvenile remand home and other secure accommodation together with the number of vacancies currently available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authority social services departments provide a range of facilities and services, both residential and non-residential, which may be used by juveniles remanded to their care. This includes a national network of approved secure accommodation to which all local authorities have access.

The number of places available in approved local authority secure units in England on 30 June 1990 was 294. Such accommodation is, however, available for children in care generally, some of whom will be alleged juvenile offenders. Details of the number of places provided in each secure unit are in the following table.

Occupancy figures are collected annually. Provisional figures for the year ending 31 March 1989 indicate that there were 282 approved secure places on that date, of which 224 were occupied (an occupancy rate of 79·4 per cent.). This figure is similar to the year-end occupancy rates of previous years.

Information relating to the provision of secure accommodation in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

High Court Judges

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General what is the number and percentage of High Court judges, by rank, who are (a) ex-solicitors and (b) ex-barristers.

The Attorney-General: It is at present a statutory requirement that anyone appointed to the High Court bench must be a barrister of at least 10 years' standing (Supreme Court Act 1981, section 10(3)(c)). The Courts and Legal Services Bill, currently before Parliament, provides for a change in this requirement.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has on the number and percentage of High Court judges, by rank, who are (a) public school educated, (b) university educated and (c) Oxbridge educated.

The Attorney-General: There are 83 High Court judges, of whom 64 (77·1 per cent.) went to schools which are today listed in the "Independent Schools Yearbook," 80 (96·4 per cent.) went to university, and 70 (84·3 per cent.) went to either Oxford or Cambridge.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General what is the number and percentage of High Court judges, by rank, who are (a) 70 years old and over and (b) 60 years old and over.

The Attorney-General: There are 83 High Court judges, of whom 23 (27·7 per cent.) are aged between 60 and 69, and 10 (12 per cent.) are aged between 70 and 75, giving a total of 33 (39·8 per cent.) who are aged 60 and over.

SCOTLAND

Maternity Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has funded to assess the safety or the comparative costs of delivery in (a) district general hospitals, (b) general practitioner maternity units and (c) at home; and if he will give the conclusions of each project funded.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 July 1990]: The Scottish Home and Health Department provides core funding for the health economics research unit and the social paediatric and obstetric research unit, which are based in Aberdeen university and Glasgow university respectively.

In the late 1970s the health economics research unit published "An Analysis of the Costs and Functions of General Practitioner and Specialist Maternity Hospital Units" which showed that the cost per delivery and per occupied bed-day in general practitioner and consultant units was not dissimilar.

Over the past 20 years the social paediatric and obstetric research unit's research programme has covered epidemiological studies of maternal and child care and the evaluation of the performance of aspects, including safety, of the Scottish maternity services. This recognises that in practice straightforward confinements can be handled at home but potentially more complex ones should be directed to specialist services at an early stage. The results of the studies have been widely publicised.

The Department is funding separately a study based at Dundee university of antenatal care in a random sample of Scottish hospitals.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the average number of days at sea per trip recorded in June by Scottish vessels landing into Peterhead and having declared fishing in area VII;

(2) of the Scottish vessels landing into Peterhead in June having declared area VII catches, how many had radioed in; and what percentages were physically summoned for inspection;

(3) how many of the Scottish vessels landing in Peterhead in June having declared area VII catches failed to radio in;

(4) whether vessels crossing the 4 deg. line have to declare in which International Council for the Exploration of the Seas area their catch was caught.

Mr. Lang: I have been asked to reply.

During June, 29 Scottish vessels landed fish into Peterhead which they recorded as having been caught in International Council for the Exploration of the Seas area VII. This involved 34 fishing trips, averaging eight days. None of the vessels radioed in on crossing the 4 deg. line and consequently none was summoned for inspection. There is no requirement for vessels which do radio in to report details of where catches were taken. This information is obtained from the log book.

These cases are being fully investigated and any evidence of misreporting will be submitted to the procurator fiscal. Urgent consideration is also being given as to how to limit future misreporting.

Local Authority Allowances

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to lay the Local Authorities (Members' Allowances) (Scotland) Regulations 1990 before Parliament.

Mr. Rifkind: I am grateful to all those who submitted comments on the draft regulations circulated by my Department on 15 June 1990. Points have since arisen which will result in a number of changes to the regulations. These changes will not affect the main essentials of the Government's proposals, including the banding proposals which I announced in my letter of 15 May 1990 to the president of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. I have nevertheless decided to defer implementation of the new scheme of councillors' allowances in Scotland until 1 November 1990. This will provide local authorities with time to decide whether they wish to make any detailed amendments to their schemes in the light of the revised regulations which will be issued as soon as possible.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to introduce regulations to remove the need for charge payers to inform community charge registration officers of their new home address or a forwarding address whenever they move to a new charging authority area; and whether he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the terms of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 there is no general duty placed upon community charge payers to inform the community charges registration officer for the area in which they are registered for any of the community charges of their intended address, if they are proposing to move outwith that registration officer's area. There is, of course, a requirement for a charge payer to register at his new address. Under section 18A of the 1987 Act a registration officer may require information of a person whom he reasonably believes is, has been, or is about to be resident in the residential area but only if that information is such as the registration officer may reasonably require for the purposes of the exercise of his functions under the Act and is in the possession or control of the person. Charge payers can, of course, provide forwarding addresses to registration officers if they wish to have the notification that their register entry has been deleted sent to their new address.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will introduce regulations to prevent the disclosure of information by charging authorities, whenever the information disclosed relates to community charge debts and the recipients of information are not acting as agents of the authority with respect to debt recovery; and whether he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to introduce such regulations which he considers to be unnecessary.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of domestic rates payable for 1988-89 was collected by local authorities; and what percentage of personal poll tax payable for 1989-90 was collected by local authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 July 1990]: The information requested relating to the collection of domestic rates is not held centrally. On the general level of collection of community charges I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 4 July. Final collection figures will not be known until local authorities have completed their recovery procedures, which may not be for some time.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many subject access requests under the terms of the Data Protection Act his Department has received; what was his estimate of the number of requests that would be received; what consideration he is giving to the subject access fee charged by his Department as a result; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Forty-six valid applications have been received under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984; 45 were received from Scottish Office staff and one was from a member of the general public. For forward planning there was a working assumption of 500 requests per annum. I do not propose to review the access fee. There have been no complaints or other evidence that the access fee accounts for the low level of public interest.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has for regulations concerning the disclosure of anonymous poll tax data; what advice he intends to give to community charges registration officers on how to ensure that the identity of individuals is guaranteed; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will introduce legislation to prevent charging authorities from using community charge information for purposes that are not directly relevant to the management or collection of the community charge; and whether he will make a statement;

(3) whether he will introduce legislation to prevent a community charge registration officer or charging authority from disclosing community charge information for purposes that are not directly relevant to the management or collection of the community charge; and whether he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 26 February 1990, Official Report, 26 February 1990, Vol. 168, column 76].

Rural Libraries

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce a rural library incentive scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: In line with the undertaking already given to the hon. Member and others, I am considering whether a rural public library incentive scheme should be introduced in Scotland. The report, which called for a rural public library incentive scheme, also urged rural library authorities to take action to improve services within their communities and I hope that rural authorities will consider this carefully.

A1

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland at which points the A1 in Scotland is expected to be reduced to one-way operation during the next six weeks; and whether these restrictions will apply during the Scottish and English bank holiday weekends.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: One-way operations on the A1 in Scotland in the next six weeks will take place at the following locations:

Haddington Bypass—construction of a roundabout at the Aberlady (A6132) junction.
Haddington eastwards to Beanston—two separate moving single lane.
Beanston eastwards to East Linton—restrictions for laying a gas main.
Musselburgh Bypass—short contraflow or lane closures for bridge works.

Of these, the Haddington bypass restriction will be in force over the Scottish bank holiday weekend but will be lifted for the English holiday. British Gas will still be working on both holidays but will remove one-way working over the Scottish holiday weekend and it is hoped that it will manage to do likewise for the English weekend.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what were the projected traffic flow figures for vehicles, by category, travelling on the A1 between Edinburgh and the border before the announcement of the upgrading programme south of Newcastle;

(2) what are the projected traffic flow figures for vehicles, by category, travelling on the A1 between Edinburgh and the border following completion of the upgrading programme south of Newcastle.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1990]: Traffic levels vary significantly on the A1 between Edinburgh and the border. At 1989 traffic levels, the average annual flow west of Haddington was 13,000 vehicles per day, reducing to approximately 5,000 vehicles per day in Borders region. Heavy goods vehicles account for approximately 12 to 13 per cent. and 20 to 30 per cent. of the flows respectively. National forecasts predict an overall increase in road traffic of between 23 per cent. and 39 per cent. by the year 2000. However, the routes south of Edinburgh study concluded that improvements planned on other competing routes will affect the distribution of traffic and that traffic growth on the A1 through the Borders in Scotland will be less than might otherwise be expected.

The study also considered the potential for a transfer of traffic to the route resulting from east coast road improvements. It is likely that the completion of a motorway link to Newcastle will result in an increase of fewer than 1,000 trips per day on the A1 in Scotland by the turn of the century.

These assessments will be monitored by the A1 steering group whose formation I announced recently.

Hazardous Waste Inspectorate

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the hazardous waste inspectorate will publish its fourth annual report for 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The hazardous waste inspectorate's (HWI) terms of reference required it to publish reports periodically rather than annually. The last report, published in June 1988, covered the whole of the United Kingdom.

In April 1987 the HWI in England and Wales became part of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) whose report does not cover Scotland. The Scottish Development Department is preparing a separate Scottish HWI report which it intends to publish before the end of 1990.

Nitrogen Dioxide

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers he intends to use to protect the health of people in Scottish cities from the effects of nitrogen dioxide.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no evidence that the present levels of nitrogen dioxide pose a health hazard to people in Scottish cities.

Measurements of nitrogen dioxide made at some 50 different locations in Scotland gave no cause for concern. The relevant EC directive on air quality standards for nitrogen dioxide specifies the limits and the results from the directive monitoring site in Glasgow have been below these limits.

Powers to reduce emissions of nitrogen dioxide from motor vehicles rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. His plans for the reduction of emissions are contained in the written answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Transport on 8 June, Official Report, Vol. 173, column 722.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is responsible for emissions from prescribed industrial plant and for implementing the EC large combustion plants directive which requires, inter alia, that emissions of nitrogen dioxide be reduced overall by 15 per cent. and 30 per cent. by 1993 and 1988 respectively, taking 1980 as the base year.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers he has to reduce the volume of urban traffic in Scottish cities; and whether he intends to take steps to reduce the concentrations of nitrogen dioxide in city centres.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has no such powers. Responsibility for traffic management matters for local roads in Scotland rests with regional and islands councils as local roads authorities.

Plans for the reduction of nitrogen dioxide emissions from motor vehicles are contained in the written answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Transport on 8 June 1990, Official Report, Volume 173, column 722.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers he has to reduce emissions of nitrogen dioxide from industry where these contribute to a level in air which exceeds the limit laid down by the EC directive on nitrogen dioxide.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate is responsible for ensuring that the best practicable means are taken by operators of prescribed classes of industrial premises to prevent the emission of substances such as nitrogen dioxide and to render such emissions as may occur harmless and inoffensive.

Autopsies

56. Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many autopsies were carried out in Scotland for the latest year for which information is available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of autopsies performed in Scotland in the year ended 31 March 1989 was 9,721.

Nurses (Grading Appeals)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what deadline he has set for all clinical grading appeals by nurses which are currently outstanding.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 July 1990]: A majority of health boards have already completed their regrading appeal hearings. Initial reluctance on the part of the staff side to co-operate in arranging hearings led to considerable delays in the commencement of the appeal hearings programme. These difficulties have now been overcome and health boards have been asked to ensure that the backlog of hearings is cleared as quickly as practicable.

Bypass Operations

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of patients in each health board area currently awaiting coronary artery bypass operations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 July 1990]: At March 1990 the numbers were:

Health board of residence	Number of patients
Argyll and Clyde	50
Ayrshire and Arran	56
Borders	23
Dumfries and Galloway	23
Fife	45
Forth Valley	31
Grampian	114
Greater Glasgow	223
Highland	33
Lanarkshire	89
Lothian	105
Orkney	2
Shetland	2
Tayside	91
Western Isles	3
TOTAL	890

Youth Training

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 4 July, Official Report, column 607, if he will give the equivalent figures for the reduction in funding under youth training for those with special training needs.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 July 1990]: In 1989-90, 26·5 per cent. of youth training expenditure in Orkney and 14·4 per cent. in Shetland related to special needs trainees. Information as regards the overall percentage of youth training expenditure in 1990-91 which relates to special needs trainees will not be available until total data for that financial year have been analysed.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 176

SESSION 1989–90

9th July—20th July 1990

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
